I believe that the uncertainty of the country church in this particular makes the competent preacher many times afraid of them. He knows that if he works for two or four congregations that that arrangement can be broken at any time by some very useless and worthless disciple, and that the churches will permit such man or woman to tear up the arrangement without any resistance.

The Country Church in Ohio By C. A. Freer

Ohio has 565 congregations. Two hundred of these are classed as country churches. Just exactly what is a country church and what a town church, is hard to classify. But of these 200, 150 are reported as pastorless. Many of them do not want pastors. Many are about dead. We have 100 city or village churches pastorless. One hundred and thirty-four churches have part time preaching. We have some good country churches. Some, indeed, that keep full time preaching. Among these are Austintown, North Royalton, Brunswick, Solon, North Eaton, Mungen, Chesterland, and possibly others. There are many good churches that have part time preaching. But Ohio has only 247 preachers who give their time to preaching. If each man had two churches there would not be enough preachers to go the round. These country churches have given us many, yes, very many, of our best preachers and city church workers. It is a trying condition that confronts us, and not a theory, with these country churches.

Here are a few tendencies: 1. Our strong evangelism is in the towns and cities. Most of our strong evangelists would not risk their reputation and pocketbook on a country church. The tendency of our evangelism is away from the country church. Hence it is not added to as it might be.

2. Our extreme congregationalism and selfishness prevents grouping, and staying grouped, of these churches for pastoral support. This is a condition very hard to overcome.

3. Our preachers have a false fear of the country. They are most all working away from the country to the town and city. They can reach "living-links" in the city and get on the National convention program. We need to know that a man with two or three ordinary country churches can really reach personally and influence more people than the average city preacher does. But thank God, some of our best men are seeing this and acting accordingly, and are getting results. W. R. Walker, of Killbuck, is a brilliant example.

WHAT SHALL WE DO ABOUT IT?

Would it not be wise to spend two or three years in Ohio in a mission of conserving the force, instead of enlarging the field? That is, let the missionary money be put into men who would go into the fields and group the churches and make the field for a pastor, and let the state mission funds support the man all that would be necessary to the end. There surely is a possibility for something of this kind. Let us have a three years' campaign of evangelizing and manning the country churches. Already a move in this direction is started in the putting of T. J. White in Southern Ohio. But what is he among so many? He has a life job if he gets over the field once. We ought to have a dozen such men out.

Then we need to inspire our young men just coming out of college that these fields are much better for them than a city. They need time to study and grow and lay foundations. H. L. Willett began at North Eaton; C. J. Tanner at Granger; I. J. Cahill at North Fairfield and Boughtonville. These men will all testify to the value of those days. We must cease to talk on this question and get to doing something.

Let Fourth Time Mean a Week By Robert Simmons

The real situation of a large proportion of our country churches is that "they have a name to live and are dead." Some of them are like the Irishman's snake: "Oh, he's dead as Cæsar, but not sinsible of it." This is largely caused by insufficiently emphasized teaching on the essentials of a four-square Christian life: (1) The apostles' teaching; (2) Fellowship; (3) Breaking bread; (4) Prayer. They are taught the meaning and practice of preaching, breaking bread and prayer, but no good and sufficient practical view of the fellowship is taught. It is supposed to be some kind of a dim, indistinct, incorporeal, indefinable something that the church has and extends to its members by shaking hands, a kind of good feeling, and never for one instant does the conception of partnership—practical, worshipful, thankful, liberal giving of their money every Lord's day, for the good of the Cause—as a part of their duty and worship enter into the teaching. They are not shown that a Christian worship which consists of preaching, breaking bread and prayer, is but a poor three-cornered way of "steadfastly continuing," etc.; that at the best these three points are all selfish, while the fellowship is a real act of worship, a partnership with the God who gave his Son, and the Son who gave his life, so that by this we become "workers together with them," as Paul so plainly teaches.

If every Lord's day morning this fact was emphasized by the rising in prayer of the congregation, and thanking God for the fellowship, just as we do for the loaf and cup, and each one partaking of this part of worship just as they do of the loaf and cup, it would go far to solve the financial difficulty and make a gracious act of worship, good for the soul, of the most disagreeable and hardest part of the work. This kind of training is badly needed.

Again, much of this trouble is caused by the practice of only one way of teaching and preaching. Our brother Paul plainly points out two. "And how I kept back nothing that was profitable to you, but have shewed you, and have taught you publicly and from house to house." Here are two methods of public and private teaching. Now, will some brother rise and tell which of these may be safely omitted if a preacher desires to preach a full gospel and do his whole duty? Is it not a fact that the last method has, by neglect, gone into what Brother Cleveland says is "innocuous desuetude," and this leaves us trying to mow a full swath with half a scythe; trying to pull a two-horse wagon with half a team; fire a big gun with half a charge of powder. What right or power has a preacher to omit private teaching any more than public service? Who gave him authority to do this kind of "half done" work? Are not both kinds just as binding on the gospel preacher to-day as they were upon Paul?

What is the practice, in a general way, in a country church? A preacher goes to his appointment Saturday night; he generally remains in the home of one family, and in that does very little private teaching; and this occurs once a month in what is said to be fourth-time preaching. He spends only two days, necessarily confining himself to public teaching. Then the church goes to sleep for a month, until the preacher comes again to disturb its peaceful slumbers. This process is repeated month after month, year after year, until no preacher comes and the sleep is unbroken. It is no wonder we can not do anything with our country churches, whose existence, I can not say life, is one of going to sleep and waking up to go to sleep again.

The remedy? Let us try both kinds of preaching, and let one-fourth time mean one-fourth time, one-fourth of a month; that is, one week; half time, one-half of a month; that is, two weeks, and not two days or four days. Let each church demand and see that it gets this kind of preaching. A good minister of Jesus Christ should not only go into every home of his church, but right then and there he should consecrate that home by reading, explaining the Word and earnest prayer to God for every member of the family individually, in such a manner that this kind of preaching will be an effective means of practicalizing the gospel and bringing it into the everyday life of the whole people; and this kind of preaching should not be limited to the homes of the members, but should be extended so as to reach every accessible home in the community. Can there be any doubt as to the result? Try it once and see. "Shew them," as Paul puts it.

The Country Minister By J. B. McLeod, B. D.

The writer of this article graduated from a leading university with high honors in philosophy, and from the seminary as leader of his class, winning a traveling scholarship that took him to Europe for post-graduate study. For several years he has been the pastor of a country church. —Editor.

Many earnest young men in college are pondering the question, "What is to be my life-work?" They have thought of the ministry, and have felt that a city church might be suitable to their education, ambition, and tastes; but the smaller and the difficult country congregations, which must be the lot of the great majority, have not very much attraction. That conclusion should be revised. Seen in the true light, there is but one greater and higher investment of a worthy life, the realization of Paul's ambition, "to preach the Gospel where Christ has not been named." If the foreign field is not your privilege, next in greatness or opportunity is the work of the country minister in the home land.

Undoubtedly every man's greatest opportunity is where he can do most for God and humanity, and that may be in any of a hundred callings. What we want is the man who might be, and ought to be, in the ministry, but is in danger of going elsewhere. Many have already been lost to the work and more may follow. One evil result is that the laborers are too few for the harvest, and another, probably, is that there are men in the ministry who could have rendered better service in some other sphere.

The country, and not the city, is the spring-head of a nation's life. The farm not only sustains the lives of all men; it also supplies the men themselves. The streams of fresh life are from the country; the city is the maelstrom where they are lost. While we need, perhaps, our strongest men at the great life centers, with their powerful reactions on all surrounding country, still it is the army of men who stand for God and the highest in the midst of the warm life of the country that ultimately holds in its hands the destiny of the nation. It is the country minister who is really working at the center.

We hear a great deal of the disadvantages of this life. The remuneration is insufficient. Not only the worker, but the work suffers in consequence. Men must be content with an income which is but a fraction of what they might otherwise enjoy. All this may, in a large measure, be true; but we should remember that the Son of Man had not where to lay his head. The poorest of us are not great martyrs. Thousands of our fellow beings have a greater struggle than we. And if, at times, we feel our limitations a little keenly, it only increases our sympathy for our battling brothers. Enforced economy is one of the great moral disciplines of life, and, in the end, not what we receive, but what we deny ourselves, is our greatest reward. That we may be able to do more for the world than the world does for us is the highest ambition of those who follow Him who "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." And if to minister can not be the absorbing passion of a man, he had better not be a minister at all. It is the men who have in them enough of nobleness to be open to the appeal of this higher ideal of life that are needed, and also the men who are able to see that the highest ministry a man can render to his fellow men is to be a minister of the spirit of the New Testament. The more a man lives out this ideal, the more he is able to look with pity on the widespread illusion that a man's life consisteth in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. It may be a poor day for the church when it means no sacrifice for a man to enter the ministry. Perhaps the loss of the men who back out because of small salaries is not as great a loss as some suppose. May the Lord of the harvest send us the men who are willing to make the sacrifice and in doing so they will find their abundant reward!

Not the lack of remuneration, but the quietness and tameness of country life is the objection others find. It is hard for a young man of education and ability to forego the interests and higher developments of life that are open to him in large centers. Ambitions must be surrendered. This also may, in some cases, be largely true, and yet it is easy to underestimate the compensations that are open to the country minister. Life in the country is much richer and deeper than many suppose. Men are not blinded by the spectacular, nor deafened by the din of city life. There are no hard pavements or towering walls of brick and stone to shut out the gentle ministries of nature. Thought is deeper; feeling is stronger; individuality is better developed; natural affections are more intense, friendship is more absorbing; home life has a greater influence and life as a whole is sweeter, as is seen in the great tenacity with which men cling to the country, and the deeper grief that parting from such life brings.

And in this life of the country the minister plays a far larger part than he possibly can in the city. There are not so many dazzling attractions to compete with. Life is more impressionable, and hearts and minds are more ready to receive the great interests for which the minister stands. The religious instincts are better preserved, and the great temptations of life are neither so numerous nor so intense. The minister's life and work must tell. No man who lives and works true to the Master whom he represents need have one moment's hesitation in regard to the certain results of good that his efforts will bring. He will have the satisfaction of seeing many helped along in the right direction, and sometimes of seeing the whole course of a life decidely changed and the whole life of a community lifted to a higher level.

In his work he will often meet with the fullest confidence, the warmest affections and the strongest attachments. He will experience the highest joy that it is possible for man to know, the joy of helping. He will be the bearer of the greatest consolation to the bedside of the dying and to the hearts of the sorrowing. He will be blessed by the aged and loved by little children. He will be the friend of the tempted and tried and the counsellor of the strong in the noonday of life. He will rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep. If any young man has powers of body and heart and mind that he is willing to consecrate to the service of Christ and humanity in the sphere that will bring the largest results, let him think carefully and kindly of the country ministry.—The Intercollegian.

Our Country Churches in Iowa

By B. S. DENNY

At Lost Creek, a country point in Lee county, about six miles from Fort Madison, the first New Testament church, as represented by our people, was organized in Iowa. The claim is made by some that a congregation was organized the year before at Dubuque, but that is disputed; and certain it is that the oldest church now in existence was organized at Lost Creek. The organization occurred on the first Lord's day in July, and consisted of eight members, with David R. Chance as the minister. The charter members were Joshua Owen, David R. Chance, Silog Paine, Samuel Morrison, Jemima Chance, Joseph Morrison, Isaac Briggs. They agreed to take the scriptures of the Old and New Testament as their rule of faith and practice. On the same day Peter P. Jones, Nancy Owen, Drucilla Smith, Cynthia Young and Cassandra Owen were baptized and united with the congregation. This congregation from the time of its organization, has not failed to keep up regular services. During the history of the church three church buildings have been erected, the one now in use being a brick structure, a neat and well-kept building. Charles Blanchard preaches for the church full time, and it numbers in its membership some of the most worthy members in our state.

Aside from the large number of members who have gone out from the Lost Creek church, three congregations have really been made possible by the members and influence

Another Tour of African Swamps By R. Ray Eldred

[The following letter has been received by President A. McLean, of the Foreign Missionary Society, written from Bolenge, via Coquilhatville Haut Congo, Etat Independent Du Congo, W. C. Africa, July 2, 1908.—Ed.]

I have just returned from a twenty-five days' itinerate trip to the interior. I had planned to go earlier, but did not wish to go till I got the new brick station storehouse enclosed, and also I did not wish to be gone when Dr. and Mrs. Jaggard arrived at Bolenge. They arrived one week and the next week Dr. Jaggard and I started from Bolenge. The journey that I had planned was so that after we had traveled for a week we would be at a point but two days' journey from Bolenge, so Dr. Jaggard decided to go this first week, and then if he was standing the journey all right he was to go on with me, and if not he was to return to Bolenge. He stood this first part all right and I was glad that he could go on with me. We traveled mostly in short stages. The longest journey of any one day was about 25 miles, and the shortest about six miles, but usually about ten or fifteen miles. We tried to spend a night in each of the larger villages and to reach as many of the smaller ones during the day as possible. We were gone from Bolenge twenty-five days and traveled approximately 260 miles by land, which brought us to Longa on the Busira river, some 90 or 100 miles from here.

We were met there by paddlers sent from Bolenge by Mr. Hensey. They brought the large station canoe. We left Longa about 3:30 on one afternoon and came down the river about fifteen miles to the state post of Ekenge, where we stopped to pay our respects to the officers there, and came on down about ten miles and had just stopped for the night when we heard, not far away, the puka puka of a gasoline engine. We, Dr. Jaggard and I, recognized it as the exhaust of a gasoline engine, and knowing that there was not another such engine on the Upper Congo we knew that it was Dr. Widdowson coming to meet us in the Christian Endeavor Messenger. In a few moments we saw her round a nearby point and in the gathering dusk she looked like a haughty swan as she defied the strong current so well known here. Mrs. Hensey and Mrs. Jaggard were also with Dr. Widdowson. We were glad to meet these and on the morrow to get back to old Bolenge. The next morning we started for Bolenge in the Christian Endeavor Messenger, leaving our men to return to Longa and get the rest of our carriers, as we could not bring them all and our baggage in the one canoe.

While on this journey we visited and taught in forty-four villages, besides passing through a few more. In most of the villages our message was well received; while in many, the people begged us to stay with them another day at least. Many new calls for teachers came to us. In one large village where we have had teachers but six months and where we were the first missionaries they had ever seen, we were most heartily received. Hundreds came to the services and saw with wonder and astonishment the pictures we had to show them. The stereopticon lantern which we had with us, a gift from Miss Ella Ewing, was everywhere a very marvelous thing to the people. They could not understand how the white man could put a small piece of glass with some paint on it in the big light and then throw so big a picture on a piece of cloth so far away from the light, but they could understand the story of the picture and nearly everywhere they listened attentively to the message we had to tell them. In every village where we have teachers I had one and sometimes two of the evangelists choose the one they wished from or list of slides so they got to teach their people with the aid of the lantern. I usually followed the evangelist, sometimes with a fuller development of his subject, but more often with other slides.

There were but four nights when we could not use the lantern, and these were because of rain. In this back country, following our evangelists come the teachers of the scarlet woman. Everywhere the servants of the priests go the priests scatter small brass medals. These medals are given to the people and they are taught that by wearing the medal they will be free from persecution by state officers. This is not so bad, for it is partly true in some places, but a more pernicious teaching is that these brass medals sprang from the head of Jesus when he was buried. Also in other parts we found they had been taught that these medals were thrown to earth by Mary after her resurrection, and afterwards that Mary visited Rome and commanded that these medals should be sent to all the world. The resurrection of Christ and his consequent mediatorship is not taught. After one has been a wearer of the medal, good enough and long enough, he is permitted to buy a crucifix and string of beads. One instance was brought to our notice where a man thought he had worn his small medal long enough and wanted to be promoted a step higher, so he could wear a cross and beads. Accordingly he went to the father (priest) and made his request, only to be told that he was not yet good enough to be allowed a cross and beads. Undaunted by this reply he told the father (priest) that he would not wait longer and that if they would not give him his cross and beads he would go to the Engelisa (Protestants) at Bolenge, whereupon he received his cross and beads forthwith. One of the chief native Catholic teachers made use of a small sunglass to light his pipe of tobacco and taught these superstitious people in many parts that the fire came from heaven and was God's sanction on his (the Catholic's) teaching and was also God's disapproval of our message. Consequently I having heard of this teaching, took my large sunglass with us. We built fire with it many times and explained to the natives that it was not God at all, but simply a glass that the white man knew how to make so as to gather the sun's rays to a point so as to make heat, which when brought in contact with fuel caused the fire which they saw. And again the people said, "Another of the lies of the Mompe (Catholics) is found out."

Part of the way on this journey we had the company of from one to five of these Catholic catechists, who sought to do us and the cause of Christ all the harm possible. We were cursed by them with as many and as vile curses as they could command, and for telling the people that these small brass medals were nothing but brass and were forged by the white man in Europe, our services were interrupted and broken up by those of the "baser sort" led on by the head Catholic teacher. Our lives were threatened, etc., etc., but we did not run, but did our best to scatter some seeds of the kingdom, for we knew that the light of God's word is the greatest need of all these people.

More and more are we having forced upon us the crying need of more itinerating by the missionaries you have placed there. It must be done and it must be done at once or we must give an account for its omission. And, dear brethren of the homeland, do not console yourselves with the thought that you will escape in this account giving. We here are going as far and as fast as we can to carry the one greatest of all messages into the, as yet, untouched depths of this vast interior; for example, on this trip Dr. Jaggard and I waded in swamps with the water many times up to the waist and a few times deeper than that. This we did ten out of the twenty days. Two different days we were drenched to the skin and one of these days had to go so all day. One day we spent all day crossing a swamp two miles wide, in the middle of which is a small river. With the greatest of difficulty were we able to hire four small canoes (we could not get any others, not even of medium size). We had to wade a mile to the river (the canoes were hidden, being sunken in the swamp near to the river) then go up the river perhaps three miles and land on the other side. The canoes were so small that but two or three at most could go at one time, so the canoes had to make four trips. We were all day getting to the village on the other side up the river. The canoes were so small that that day four different times a canoe sank with everything in it. Dr. Jaggard and I would not go across till the last trip of the canoes for fear that the people would not let our men have them after we were gone. While crossing we lost a bushel of salt, worth in this back country, $12 to $15. Besides losing the salt most of our clothes and blankets got wet, the lantern, Dr. Jaggard's medicine case and our beds were also in the river. And to add to the interest of the occasion it rained all day. When at last Dr. Jaggard and I crossed we took the largest of the little canoes, which was not large enough to allow us the luxury of a native paddler, and as Dr. Jaggard has not yet learned to manage these topsy-turvy crafts, I was left to paddle my own canoe. Many trees were fallen into and across the channel, so we had to wind in and out, under one tree and perhaps the canoe would go under the next while you were compelled to climb over. This and the many vines overhead and the strong current underneath made the navigation of our watering-trough, for it was but little else, anything but easy. We had gotten within about a mile of our landing place when a convenient vine caught me, and in getting loose from it I rocked our watering-trough a little too much and so we found ourselves in the river, trough and all. Fortunately, we both could swim, and it so happened that at this place the water was not over our heads. After a little delay we were aboard again and on our way. That night we had the pleasure of sleeping on wet beds with wet clothes and wet blankets. As we had had but a few crackers and a small tin of sardines for dinner, we made us a hot supper, and taking a little medicine as a preventative and giving some to each of our men we rolled up in our wet blankets and went to sleep, thankful that we still had the blankets to roll up in and for the protection that had been over us and our carriers during the day.

Having lost the one bushel of salt, we had to shorten our journey, and sent a message by one of our men back to Be-

Our Budget

—The country church.

—A glorious chapter of the past.

—Still a mighty power in the present.

—What of her future?

—We have called to our aid some of the men who know best the conditions.

—Most of the articles in this issue on the country churches are written by state secretaries, who are in constant touch with large fields. They present facts as well as their own conclusions. We are greatly indebted to all these brethren for their hearty co-operation. Every word of these valuable contributions should be pondered, for one of our problems under existing conditions is the status of many of our country churches.

—The next "day" is in the interests of providing homes for houseless congregations.

—Nebraska's state convention, Bethany, Neb., August 22-31.

—L. A. Hussong will continue at Peru, Neb.

—The church at Tingley, Ia., will need a minister September 1.

—C. C. Bearden is to leave Texas for Nebraska in the near future.

—B. E. Youtz hopes to arrange for work in Iowa beginning November 1.

—Cal Ogburn, of Bakersfield, Cal., expects to visit his father in Iowa.

—The Nebraska State Convention meets August 23-31 at Bethany, Neb.

—The church building at Aarapahoe, Neb., has been pushed to completion.

—Isaac Elder has entered upon his second pastorate at South Ottumwa, Ia.

—The Colorado State Sunday-school convention is to meet at Ft. Collins, September 1-3.

—It is a beautiful building, after remodeling, that the brethren at Marysville, Cal., possess.

—B. F. Norris has changed his pastorate from Ash Grove, Mo., to the church at Arlington, S. D.

—Robert L. Finch sees a bright outlook for his work with the church at Ninth and Shaw, Des Moines.

—Sister Clara G. Esson, we are glad to note, has been chosen Bible school worker for Oregon for the coming year.

—G. R. L. Vawter, we understand, has left the evangelistic field to take the work at Assumption, Ill.

—We hear that Rufus Finnell goes to Wheeling, W. Va. He was doing an excellent work at El Paso, Ill.

—The church at Modesto, Cal., prospers, its membership roll being nearly 351. L. C. Ferguson ministers there.

—The annual rally of the church at Armington, Ill., was held July 14, when T .T. Holton gave two special addresses.

—Brother Finkle hopes to see work begun in the near future on the new church on the South Side, Des Moines, Iowa.

—James T. Nichols has given up the work at Pleasant Hill, Ia., and it may be taken by S. R. Drake, of Colorado Junction.

—Roscoe Hill, missionary at Mantanzas, Cuba, visited the Jefferson Avenue Church, Buffalo, N. Y., on his way home to Illinois.

—H. O. Breeden is to hold a meeting for the church at Eureka, Ill., in November. This congregation continues to support the work at Minonk, and the church grows in liberality, having increased all its missionary offerings. Alva W. Taylor is the minister.

—George A. Henry, of South Bend, follows Perry J. Rice as supply for Charles M. Medbury until he returns from the Coast.

—A second teacher training class has been organized at Belleflower, Ill. It is hoped to begin a meeting there the last of the month.

—We regret that E. W. Romine had to close his work at Hinton, Okla., and go to New Mexico by reason of the condition of his lungs.

—W. H. Betts and his church at Newton, Ia., will have evangelists Small and St. John in a tabernacle meeting early in September.

—T. J. Golightly is making a success at Shenandoah, Ia. He is one of the men we regretted losing from the imperial state of Missouri.

—We regret to hear that the little daughter of Brother and Sister Popplewell, of Colfax, Ia., was badly burned through stepping on a match.

—Charles S. Medbury and family were the guests of Brother and Sister B. B. Tyler, when stopping at Denver on their way to California.

—L. F. Stephens and wife have returned from their trip around the world, during which he did some successful evangelistic work in New Zealand.

—It has not been officially confirmed, but we hear that E. M. Smith, of Centralia, Mo., has accepted a call from the First Christian Church, Decatur, Ill.

—H. F. Stevens, of Elwood, Neb., preached his first sermon for the brethren at Virginia on July 12. He will also have charge of the work at Pleasant Hill.

—The South Broadway Church, Denver, where B. B. Tyler has done such a great work, will probably undertake an evangelistic campaign at an early date.

—E. A. Palmer will close his ministry at Hendley, Neb., September 1, and hopes to locate some place where he can continue his work while completing his education.

—The Bible school of the Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, and the Central Church, Des Moines, will enter upon a contest, beginning with September.

—We regret to learn that the health of I. N. McCash is not much improved since his residence in Berkeley, Cal. His son will enter California University in the autumn.

—S. Elwood Fisher has begun a three years' engagement at Paxton, Ill. He did fine work in his six years with the congregation at Fisher, there having been 251 additions.

—At Washington, Kan., it is hoped to have the work in such good condition that a good man can be located in September. It is expected that the church building will be repaired.

—The brethren at Lake Charles, La., are delighted with the improvements recently made on and around their church buildings. The work moves along successfully under Otis Hawkins.

—Ira E. Carney recently visited Lake City, Ia., his old home, where two other boys from this church—Roy Deadman and Carroll Struckenbruck—have recently gone into the ministry.

—C. S. Kleckner reports that out of a church membership of nineteen at Union Chapel there is an average of nearly 65 in the Bible school, and he wants to know who can beat this.

—S. M. Bernard, of Madisonville, Ky., has published a useful book setting forth in chapters the difference between the New Testament church and each of the leading denominations of to-day. A single copy costs 50 cents and three copies will be sent for $1.

—Plans are under way for a great revival under Charles R. Scoville at Des Moines. He will be with the University Church first, and then with the Central in the downtown region.

—"It is a great inspiration to speak to a large, hatless audience—inspiration to both audience and speaker." So thinks J. Edward Cresmar. He has been trying this plan at Elliott, Ia.

—The church at Ponca City, Okla., has recently purchased an adjoining lot, on which stood an old building which they have remodeled. S. S. Phillips, the minister, is doing a good work.

—The Texas Christian Lectureship is scheduled to meet at Waco next January. The Ministerial Institute will be on the Tuesday after the fourth Sunday, and the lectureship will follow.

—Ernest Reed, of Pana, Ill., delivered an address at the soldiers' reunion at Morrisonville. Brother Reed has just left our churches at Henton and Tower Hill to take charge at Oacoma, S. D.

—William Bayard Craig has been spending some time at Durango, Colo., in the interest of the work in that section of the state. Dean Haggard, of Des Moines, Ia., supplied Brother Craig's pulpit.

—John L. Stine is anxiously waiting for some one to take the work at Norfolk and Wakefield, Neb. A salary of $800 and parsonage is offered. Brother Stine is anxious to enter upon evangelistic work.

—The resident membership of the First Christian Church, Lincoln, Neb., is now 921, and there is a non-resident and "information lacking" list of 183. The first numbers quoted are represented in 571 homes.

—George A. Jewett has for forty-two years been clerk of the Central Church at Des Moines, Iowa. He was also founder of the "Christian Worker," the church's local paper, and is to-day its business manager.

—David H. Shields, pastor at Salina, Kan., preached last Lord's day in Peoria, Ill., for the First Christian Church. He is taking his vacation in Illinois, visiting his father at Macomb. It is not his purpose to leave Kansas.

—L. O. Herrold, of Jasper, Ala., has, we understand, made arrangements to visit Canon City, Col., this month with a view to taking the work there. He has been in the West before, having been located at Walla Walla and San Jose.

—A note from Oscar Sweeney reports the opening of the Southern California Convention with the largest attendance in its history. Hundreds could not gain admittance to the church on the first night, and it will hardly accommodate the day sessions.

—J. J. Castleberry began his fifth year of pastorate for the First Church, Union City, Tenn., on July 5. On this occasion all the churches united in the evening with the Christian church in a fellowship service. There were short talks by the pastors and prominent laymen. There have been 250 additions to this congregation during Brother Castleberry's ministry in Union City. All departments of the work prosper.

The Bovee Furnace Works, who are carrying an advertisement in this paper, are making a special offer for church and parsonage furnaces to Young People's and Ladies' Societies, where no cash in advance is required; and there is no reason why every church should not be supplied with a heating plant.

—We very much regret to learn that Virgil Ingold was drowned at Canton, Mo., on August 4. He was the youngest brother of Oscar Ingold, who was unable to go to the funeral, being unaware of it in time through a call to Chandler, Okla., for a wedding.

—C. A. Vannoy has been with the church at Ellston, Ia., a little more than three years, during which time there have been fifty additions. He has been unanimously asked to remain another year, and a revival is being planned to begin August 30, with Ira E. Carney as evangelist.

—The Disciples of Christ in New Mexico will hold their Second Annual Convention at Roswell, August 30-September 2. A good program is promised. Disciples from New Mexico and West Texas are invited. Frederick F. Grimm, of East Las Vegas, N. M., is the corresponding secretary.

—George T. Meeker felt unable to go to Santa Cruz this year because of his long spell of sickness. Plans are being submitted for a new church building at Petaluma, and with 150 additions since Brother Meeker took the work, and increasing audiences, the brethren feel much encouraged.

—C. B. Stevens has announced his resignation as pastor of the church at Elmore, Ohio, to take effect October 1. He has been with the church there during two years past, and, according to testimony received, the church has taken on new life in all its departments under his tireless industry and enthusiasm.

—We regret to learn the Bondurant will case is not settled. It will be remembered that in the first contest the will was sustained, but arguments have been made before Judge Philbrick for a new trial, and this, we understand, has been granted, so that the whole thing must be thrashed out a third time.

—G. F. Assiter has received a unanimous call to the church at Sheridan, Ind., and will enter upon that field September 1. The churches at Rogersville and Holbrook are seeking an earnest and spiritual-minded man to succeed Brother Assiter. Applicants may address C. F. Wood at Rogersville, or J. T. Morris at Holbrook.

—The Booster's Club, of Eureka College, brings glad tidings to the college authorities through the word of Mr. William Price, a member of the graduating class of next year and president of the club. Word has been received from quite a number of the old students that they will return next year with from one to three students each.

—A picnic will be participated in by the churches of Schuyler county, near Rushville, Ill., Wednesday, August 24. L. D. Crandall, minister there, says a fine program has been prepared, and it is hoped that all the churches in this district will be brought into closer touch. This can be made one way of helping solve the country church problems.

—The illness from which the editor of the "Pacific Christian" suffered, was a paralysis of the jaw, affecting the speech. We hear there was no corresponding paralysis of the side. S. M. Martin was afflicted with the same complaint for over a hundred days. Brother Berry, however, hoped to be able to attend the Santa Cruz convention.

—A. N. Glover entered upon his work at Delta, Col., with the beginning of August. When he went to Orange, Cal., four years ago, he found about 125 members, and when he left there were 275. Brother Glover makes the change simply for health's sake. Since his last report there have been five additions by baptism and four by statement.

—It was just twenty years ago last month that Hill M. Bell, now president of Drake University, was welcomed to Des Moines. He was then simply Prof. Bell, of Kellogg. He was elected to the chair of mathematics, but his worth was recognized and larger and more and more executive trust placed in him, until he is now president of the University and acting chancellor.

—L. D. Anderson and wife, of Palestine, Texas, were recent visitors at The Christian-Evangelist office. They were on their way to Chautauqua Lake, N. Y., to spend the summer. Brother Anderson is one of the bright young men of the Lone Star State who are "making things go."

—Sherman B. Moore is in a meeting at Kennett, Mo. There is the nucleus of a good work at Kennett, for in Dr. Kingdon and others we have some very faithful members. But they have been without a minister for some time and have been discouraged through removals of some strong and active workers.

—Dr. Dye telegraphs the F. C. M. S. from Los Angeles, Cal., that the Northern California Convention has pledged $10,000 for another new Bosira station as a Centennial aim. So the opening up of the dark regions will go on. But how many thousands are still unapproached with the glad tidings of the Savior.

—V. W. Blair gets out a good bulletin of the Christian Church at Greenfield, Ind., under the title of "Matters of Concern." There are some striking statements, injunctions or questions that pertain to church life as well as news that is of immediate interest to the congregation. There is always a very helpful meditation for the week.

—We very much regret that F. E. Billington has felt that the work of corresponding secretary for Oregon was too great for his strength. He has occupied the position for the past three years and filled it with great credit. He locates with the church at Silverton. We are sure he will find a good successor in C. F. Swander, of McMinnville, who has been elected to fill his place, and now the church at McMinnville is regretting losing its pastor.

—The Board of Trustees of Berkeley Bible Seminary have not settled upon a Dean, and this position will be left vacant for the present. They have called Prof. Walter Stairs to the chair of English and Greek New Testament, and he has accepted. Prof. Stairs has been for ten years in the Bible departments of Christian University, Drake University and Texas University, and it is from the latter that he removes to California.

—It is reported that East Washington is calling W. T. Adams, of Corona, Cal., to be state evangelist. Grant K. Lewis says that if he leaves California it will be over the protest of his own church and the mission board on account of the extreme poverty of both. Corona is a community of working people, and Brother Adams is called the "working parson." His ministry there has been a self-sacrificing one, and a beautiful new church building was recently dedicated free from debt.

—F. F. Walters is having large crowds attend his hot weather sermons at the Central Christian Church, Springfield, Mo. In the morning he is discoursing on the 23d Psalm with titles for his sermons as follows: The Shepherd Psalm, The Shepherd Lord, The Shepherds Out of Doors, The Shepherd's Banquet and The Shepherd's Escorts; and in the evening his sermons are concerning Peter: Peter The Sleeping Giant, Peter in Two Fires, Peter and the Keys, Peter's Housetop Vision and Peter The Healer.

—Bro. J. D. Greer, of Laddonia, Mo., is passing under one of the darkest clouds that lower over our homes. On August 9 death claimed his wife, Nannie Azdel Greer. Her sufferings for more than a year were intense, but borne with Christian fortitude. She was an ideal mother and mistress of the manse. The sympathy of thousands goes out to Brother Greer and his three little ones. The funeral services were conducted by Evangelist George L. Snively, and were largely attended. The interment was in the family burial grounds at Mexico, Mo.

—We call attention to the page advertisement elsewhere of the September offering for Church Extension. This ought to be not only read, but studied, as it contains information important for all the ministers and churches, and information, too, which can not fail to be interesting to all who are interested in the progress and welfare of our Cause. The strangest fact mentioned is, that out of all our churches, only 1,416 contributed to church extension last year. No doubt many of the non-contributing churches were able to make a liberal offering, but whether able to make a large offering or not, each church should feel under obligation to have some part in this great enterprise of housing homeless churches. Do you not think so?

As We Go to Press.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Atlanta, Ga., August 14.—West End Christian Church tabernacle meeting closed to-night with 125 conversions. Have rarely had such support as Pastor Bernard Smith gave; church devoted to the cause; Brother Boileau did great work with solo and chorus; the Lord was with us; start at Fostoria, O., August 23.—Herbert Yeuell.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Guthrie, Ky., August 17.—Meeting continues in interest; there never has been such a meeting in western Kentucky; great audience each service; 14 accessions yesterday; 110 in all.—T. T. Roberts.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Beardstown, Tex., August 17.—Greatest meeting in history of church; greatest attendance; seventy-nine additions; twenty-nine yesterday. Continue.—Hamlin and Daugherty.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Murray, Ky., August 17.—This meeting a real love feast; nfty-four to date. Begin at Winfield, Kansas, twenty-seventh instant.—Fife and Son, evangelists.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Dalton City, Ill., August 17.—Dedicated Christian Church here yesterday; raised $350 more than total indebtedness at the morning serves. J. H. Smart, our pastor here, has wrought a great work the first year in this field. Seven conversions at night service; will lecture to-night and dedicate at Butler, Ind., next Sunday.—Chas. Reign Scoville.

Special Lot Sale.

The Garrison Park Association, Pentwater, Mich., will offer lots in Garrison Park at a reduced price from August 24th to August 29th. This reduced rate will be given on condition that the purchasers erect cottages thereon within a reasonable time. If any desire to purchase who can not be present, and will let us know the kind of lot they wish, we will be glad to select for them, subject to change, if not satisfactory.

—The convention of the churches of Ralls county, Mo., meets August 24-26, with the Bethel congregation, four miles west of New London. W. J. Wright, of Cincinnati, and Levi Marshall, of Hannibal, will deliver the evening addresses. Among other speakers will be J. B. Corwine, E. J. Lampton, J. H. Briney, H. F. Davis, E. M. Richmond, J. H. Coil and T. A. Abbott. The convention, writes B. H. Cleaver, of Canton, will emphasize the Centennial and will lay plans for a great meeting next year. Last year's convention adopted Centennial aims, which are being realized with ease.

—Church Extension literature has been sent to the pastors and elders of our churches. This includes a big poster map, which should be displayed and used for the purpose for which it is intended. It should be noted that in the first nine months of this financial year our Church Extension receipts fell off more than $2,500, as compared with last year. It is hoped that this gain may be made up. On the other hand, there was a gain of $7,800 from individuals. The appeals come thick and fast, and the board has had 83 since last April, when they were compelled to cease granting loans, except a few small ones, for lack of funds. It should be noted that the office of the Board of Church Extension has been removed to 500 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—The Rowland Street Church at Syracuse, N. Y., has recently purchased two lots on the main thoroughfare of that part of the city as a new site for their church building. This congregation will profit much by the move, and eventually will doubtless erect a building worthy of the vicinity. They are actively engaged in a campaign to raise the indebtedness by September 1, after which plans will be made for the building. C. F. Stauffer recently entered upon the second year of his ministry with this church. There have been four confessions since last report. The Bible school has grown in such proportions that it has become necessary to divide it—one session being held for adults and the other for children.

—F. E. Meigs, of the Union Christian College, Nanking, sends us a warm commendation of a young Chinaman by the name of Alexander Li, who has come to Hiram College to complete his education and will afterwards specialize in science at the Case School of Applied Science in Cleveland. His purpose is then to return to China and do something for his people. Brother Meigs says he has come to America at his own charges with the exception of $200, which he received from the Viceroy in Nanking to help him, but Brother Meigs knows he has little money and is hoping to work his way through school. He is a brave Christian young man in search of knowledge, and Brother Meigs hopes that some one will be interested in him and see that his needs are supplied. Communications may be sent to Prof. C. T. Paul or to Mr. Li.

The Illinois State Convention.

The state convention of Christian Churches will be held in Chicago, August 30-September 4. Entertainment will be furnished for lodging and breakfast, but is only guaranteed to those who notify the committee in advance. Those writing in advance for entertainment will receive their assignment by mail by which they will be saved the tedious wait at the registration booth, and which will enable them to go direct from depot to place of assignment, if desired. Write O. F. Jordan, 1002 Asbury avenue, Evanston, Ill., for your assignment. The welcome of the Chicago churches is hearty and we expect the greatest convention in the history of the state. The preachers will do their congregations a favor to read this to them. The sessions will be held in the auditorium of the Central Y. M. C. A. The headquarters will be the Palmer House.

Parker Stockdale, Chairman Entertainment Committee; O. F. Jordan, Chairman Registration Committee.

A Great Love Feast.

I wish to tell you of the good time we had on July 26. The Frederick Avenue Christian Church, St. Joseph, Mo., gave a basket dinner on that date and invited our five sister churches of the city to be with us. We met in the grove at 10 o'clock and studied the Bible lesson. Then we had one hour to swing the children and prepart to lunch; the table was one great long one spread upon the grass where about 350 people ate at the same time. It was a beautiful love scene. The swings were now hanged up and the song service of the afternoon, led by Professor C. Berneking, reminded us of the sweet days of old.

The Lord's Supper, which followed, was only one more demonstration of that love which binds us all to the one God. This was followed by one of those inspiring, soul-lifting sermons that our beloved corresponding secretary, T. A. Abbott, of Kansas City, is able to give.

The Frederick avenue brethren want to thank the pastors, Shereve, of King Hill; C. A. Lowe, of Mitchell Park, and M. M. Goode, of Wyatt Park churches, and the brethren for their co-operation; these good pastors are godly men, and they added much to the success of that day's glorious work. The swings were let down at the close of the service for another hour. Free lemonade was furnished to all.

The children were all good and everything was in order.

Try this plan, brother, and see how nicely it works this warm weather.

E. L. Cunningham.

Grateful Thanks.

Now that I am sufficiently recovered from my long and severe sickness to look over my mail, I find many letters from all over the land, tendering sympathy and praying for my recovery. My first impulse was to answer each of these letters separately, but the task is too heavy for one in my condition, so in this somewhat wholesale, but by no means normal, way, I would thank all these loved ones for their interest in me. The wells of gratitude were never so deep in my heart as they are to-day—gratitude to God for bringing me back from the very gates of death, and to my friends for their sympathy in the hard struggle.

These friends will rejoice with me that the doctors say I will soon be in better health than for years, and hence I hope that my best work for the Master is yet to come.

M. M. Davis.

Dallas, Texas, August 6, 1908.

[This will be glad news to the many friends of Brother Davis, and they will all join with him in giving thanks to God for his recovery.—Editor.]

TWENTY OF OUR LEADING BRETHREN

PUBLISHED IN A

COMPLETE EDITION and an ABRIDGED EDITION

The COMPLETE EDITION contains 624 pages and 814 Standard Hymns, Spiritual Songs and Anthems, and also 64 pages of Responsive Readings.

The ABRIDGED EDITION contains 400 pages and 503 Standard Hymns and Spiritual Songs, and also has 64 pages of Responsive Readings.

In this book the Disciples of Christ have a church hymnal equal to the best church hymnal used in any church in the United States. The supervising committee of twenty well known brethren, with W. E. M. Hackleman as musical editor, have produced a book of hymns, songs, doxologies, glorias, chants and canticles, that excels anything ever attempted in our brotherhood before, and, with the 70 pages of responsive readings, makes a book of rare excellence and usefulness.

THE STATE OF THE CAUSE

The state of the cause among the Disciples of Christ in Missouri, as measured by our ordinary human standards, might be pronounced as fairly respectable and prosperous; but if we had a report of it as God sees it, it would probably be such a one as would make us all feel our unworthiness and unfaithfulness in his service, and inspire the prayer, "God be merciful to us and forgive us, and open our eyes to see our opportunities and obligations, and give us strength to perform our tasks more worthily in His name and for His sake, who loved us and gave Himself for us!"

Your committee can claim no knowledge as to how God regards the state of the cause in Missouri that is not accessible to all of you. In so far as we have the mind of Christ, we ought to be able to form a fair judgment of how God sees us, and whether he is pleased or displeased with what we are and with what we are doing in Missouri to extend his kingdom within the borders of our own commonwealth and throughout the world. In the light of that Book, which we all acknowledge as our standard of faith and duty, and of the example of him whom alone we call Master, let us seek to see ourselves and our responsibilities.

According to our statistics we have in this state 175,000 members and 1,750 churches. In the light of New Testament teaching each one of these disciples should be a "living epistle," whose life and character would recommend Christ to others, and each church should be a center of Christian worship and Christian activity from which should be flowing continually streams of life to bless the community and the world. Having a common Lord, a common faith, a common baptism, they should act unitedly in the larger and wider co-operative movements that require united efforts in order to succeed. How far we are from the realization of this ideal is indicated by the reports which have been and will be made to this convention. It is not too much to expect of a religious people pleading for Christian union, that their churches should themselves be united in extending the cause with which they are identified. And yet, not more than one-third of the churches reported as being in existence in the state contribute with any regularity to state, national and foreign missions. The existence of so large a number of non-co-operating churches in the state is a standing reproach to us, and to the cause we plead.

The above fact finds its explanation in another fact to which this committee has called attention in previous reports, viz.: The great lack of a sufficient number of competent ministers of the Word to care for these churches and build them up in the Christian life, and train them for Christian service. This lack is itself a symptom that needs careful study if we would understand the causes which produce it. If it be the result of an indisposition on the part of our young men to enter the work of the ministry, the fault must lie at the door of our churches and our ministry. There is never lacking the requisite number of volunteers for the ministerial calling when spiritual life is at a high tide, and when the church is earnestly grappling with the great tasks which have been committed to it, and has joined issue with the forces of evil which antagonize it. If it be said that this lack of an adequate supply of ministers is not due to the unwillingness of young men to enter the ministry, but to the lack of proper encouragement on the part of the churches and ministers, and in some cases of financial aid in making the necessary preparation, still the fault lies with the churches and the ministry in neglecting so essential a condition of our growth and development as the recruiting of the ministry. Finally, if it be said that the reason for this dearth of ministers lies in the fact that our colleges have not been sufficiently endowed and equipped to cope with the state schools, and therefore our young men have not been brought under such educational influence as would inspire them to enter the ministry, still we must find the explanation of this fact in the neglect of the churches, and of the brotherhood of the state to do their duty by our colleges. In the judgment of your committee each one of these causes contributes its share to explain the fact which we all deplore, namely: That we are not recruiting the ranks of our ministry rapidly enough to meet the losses occasioned by death and other causes, and to meet the increased demands of our rapid growth. The remedy is plain: It is to remove these causes, (1) by raising the standard of spiritual life in the churches, (2) by grappling fearlessly with the evils which confront the church and antagonize it and (3) by such a consecration of wealth on the part of our membership, and especially our men of means, for the better endowment and equipment of our colleges as we have not hitherto witnessed among us.

Your committee could wish that it might have the power to make the brethren in Missouri feel the vital and fundamental importance of the things herein stated. It would be easy to point out a number of minor things to be supplied and evils to be corrected, but we believe that if this fundamental need were supplied in the way indicated, all these other things would be added to us. As one of the means which we believe will prove helpful in supplying this supreme need we recommend the formation of local brotherhoods in our churches to be later united into a State Brotherhood, which should have its stated meetings to study the condition and needs of the cause in the state, and to devise ways and means of supplying these needs. When the strong men of our churches shall come to deal with the great interprises of the church with the same zeal and business capacity which business corporations manifest in their large enterprises, we shall see the kingdom of God go forward by leaps and bounds. Why should not this be done? Are not the interests of God's kingdom the supreme interests of this life? Of all religious peoples in the world, we who are seeking to restore New Testament ideals should set an example in this regard which would be an inspiration to the whole religious world.

Our missionary organizations, our colleges and our publishing interests are the three recognized agencies of a general character for the successful propagation of our cause. While all these may be said to be in a healthy condition, not one of them is being used to anything like its full capacity for doing the work which it was organized to do. Each one of these agencies is a co-operative enterprise, and its success is dependent on the co-operative spirit, that is to say, the union spirit of the people whose interests it is seeking to serve. There is probably no truer test of the enlightened condition and the spiritual development of any religious body than its ability to co-operate harmoniously for the furtherance of its common ends. Measured by this test, the churches known as Christian in this state would have no occasion to feel puffed up with pride or soothed into inactivity by a sense of self-complancency. We are far from having attained to an ideal condition, both as respects the number of churches and individuals enlisted in our general enterprises, and the magnitude of our gifts for such enterprises.

And yet your committee would record with gratitude to God his blessings upon our churches and upon our evangelistic efforts, resulting in an increased number of additions to our churches. We note also, with pleasure, the gain in the number of contributing churches during the past year, due in part, no doubt, to the self-sacrificing labors of our faithful corresponding secretary. We congratulate the brethren of the state, also, on the steady growth of interest in the Bible school work under the efficient labors of our State Superintendent of Bible schools. This growing interest manifests itself both in increased attendance, especially in the adult apartment, and in the formation of teacher training classes for the better equipment of our Bible school teachers. This increased interest in Bible study, and the awakening of the men in our churches by the "Men's Movement," are unmistakable signs of the rising tide of religious interest and of spiritual life in our churches. Indeed, the most encouraging thing your committee finds in the state of the cause in Missouri to-day, is the growing consciousness on the part of the ministers and churches of the inadequacy of our work in the past, and a conviction that we are about to enter upon an era of larger and better things in the kingdom of God. That he may guide us in such a forward movement is the sincere prayer of your committee.

Kentucky and Church Extension.

A casual glance at the report of the Kentucky exhibit in the last annual report of church extension is by no means gratifying. The more carefully you examine the report the less satisfaction you feel. From all sources the board received last year from our state only $2,703.32. They loaned $2,000 to one church and without the loan we might have lost a valuable piece of property. Only 55 churches gave anything to this work of such great importance to our whole brotherhood. We have given in every way $60,838.05 since the work of church extension was started. Of this I know that $20,000 was given on the annuity plan by one man and his wife and the board is paying annuity interest on that now. I have not the figures in the case, but it is probable that not more than $30,000 has been given by the churches in the past 18 years. Twenty-four loans have been made to Kentucky fields, aggregating $15,665, and only about one-half of that has been paid back.

Brethren, we have nothing to be proud of in this record. Let us in September start out on a new career. We could multiply the number of contributing churches by four and then not be puffed up with pride. We have needy churches now that ought to build and can not do so without help from the board of church extension. Brethren of Kentucky, let us bestir in a way worthy of our state and of this great cause. Let us make such an advance in our offerings in September as will at least not be discreditable.

REVISING THE CHURCH ROLL

Early in the summer, the elders of the Hillside Christian Church, Indianapolis, in order to fulfill the apostolic injunction to take heed to the flock whose oversight had been entrusted to them, made a careful study of the list of names upon the church roll. This list had never been systematically revised since the organization of the church, fifteen years ago.

We found 342 names recorded as members; of these, only 163 were regular in attendance at church services or in contributing to its support. There were 15 non-residents, who, by contributions and otherwise, showed their continued interest in the church. There were 42 other non-residents, the addresses of some being unknown, the others apparently having lost all interest in Hillside. There were 71 who still lived our midst, who rarely attended church, contributed little or nothing to its support, and altogether seemed slightly interested in its welfare. There were 51 who never attended, never contributed, and seemed totally indifferent to the interest of the church. We felt that these were not ideal conditions, and set ourselves to improve them. We believe that they are improving, but we want to see still greater improvements. To this end we recommend to the congregation that a new roll of the members be made on the first of January, 1909, and that the roll be revised the first of each year hereafter.

We recommend that the basis of membership be as follows:

1. That only those be enrolled as in full fellowship and good standing who, (a) living in Indianapolis, attend church regularly; contribute regularly and proportionately of their means to the support of the church and live godly lives; (b) those who may be excused from regular attendance at church because of protracted ill health; (c) those who may be excused from contributing to the church because of extreme poverty; (d) non-resident members who contribute regularly to the support of the church and otherwise show their interest in it.

2. That those who, living in Indianapolis, and enjoying good health, are irregular in attendance; or, who, contribute little in proportion to their ability to support the church, will be placed upon a secondary roll. Should these at any time desire a letter, they will not be commended as in full fellowship and good standing, but will be given a letter of dismissal without commendation. Any in this second class may at any time have their names transferred to the first class by coming up to the requirements thereof.

3. That we drop from our roll of membership all those who, living in Indianapolis, continually and willfully absent themselves from church services; refuse to contribute of their means to its support or live lives unworthy of a Christian. Also non-residents, who, in moving away, seem to have lost all interest in the church. Any in this class may at any time have their names transferred to the first class by coming up to the requirements thereof.

4. That the membership in the congregation be based on the following covenant, to be signed by applicants for membership before receiving the hand of fellowship and having their names enrolled upon the record.

Covenant.

Having become a disciple of Jesus Christ by confessing my personal faith in Him as the only-begotten Son of God; having sincerely and truly repented of my sins in His name; and, in loving and loyal submission to His authority, having been baptized into the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit; and desiring furthermore to learn and to observe all things whatsoever He commands, I ask to be enrolled as a member of The Hillside Church of Christ, Indianapolis, Indiana.

To that end, I hereby covenant, by the grace of God and the help of His spirit, to read His Word regularly; to cultivate a spirit of devotion; to attend the services of the church regularly, unless prevented by illness or other unavoidable hindrance; to use whatever talent or power the Lord may have given me for the edification of the church; to contribute regularly, systematically and proportionately of my means for the support of the church as the Lord prospers me; to cultivate toward the members of the church brotherly love, patient forbearance, heartfelt sympathy and help in time of need; to co-operate with the members of the church in missionary, benevolent and philanthropic work; to cultivate in life and character the fruit of the Spirit; to walk circumspectly toward them that are without, so that reproach and shame be not brought upon the holy name of Christ and the church.

If I shall remove from this community, I will take a letter of commendation, so that I may at once identify myself with the church in the community where my lot may be cast.

For the faithful performance of these Christian duties I will ever pray to God for help; and I ask a constant interest in the prayers of my brothers and sisters, even as I promise to pray for them.

Humbly and sincerely,

Signed.....

Dated.....

5. That those whose names are now on our record be requested to sign the covenant, if they wish to be enrolled upon the record to be made January 1, 1909.

We hereby call a meeting of the organization for Sunday morning, September 27, at 10:45, to take action upon the adoption of these recommendations.

Respectfully submitted,

Raymond A. Smith.

Elders of the Hillside Church of Christ.

[The Elders wish an expression of opinion as to the practicability of the course suggested from any of our readers. It is a good ideal to work to, but it can hardly be realized in a short time. There should, it seems to us, be time and labor spent to persuade those who might be enrolled in the second and third classes, to put themselves where they may be enrolled in the first class. If the plan be carried out with due regard to our Lord's teaching about the "smoking flax" and "the bruised reed," it will, we doubt not, result in a higher average of fidelity in church membership—a consummation devoutly to be wished for in all our churches. We would let the covenant, however, close with the first paragraph, as that includes everything that a church need require.—EDITOR.]

A Good Example of the Country Church

On our front page we illustrate one of the best types of the country church. We are happy in presenting the following description of it by Brother Kilby:

Concord Church, Tazewell county, Ill., is situated in the center of a triangle formed by three towns—Mackinaw, Tremont and Hopedale—the latter, the nearest, being nearly five miles distant. It is surrounded by a rich farming country, through which the Illinois Traction Company has recently built a line, passing within a mile and a half of the church.

This church was organized in January, 1870, by George Campbell, of Eureka, familiarly known at Father Campbell. A building was begun the following year and dedicated in May, 1872, by J. V. Beekman, assisted by Father Campbell, who gave it the name Concord.

One who had much to do with the organization and early history of the church was Elder Isaac Stout, who was for many years a member and often preached. There were some forty charter members, of whom thirty-one brought letters from Little Mackinaw. The present membership is 132, of whom 101 are resident. Through all its history it has had preaching one-half the time. The observance of the communion service each Lord's day, showing forth our Savior's death till he come again, has been only rarely omitted.

For some years previous to 1884 there was no Sunday-school. To S. D. Vawter is due the credit of organizing a good school. Since 1891 it has been an evergreen school. At the present time it has an enrollment of 125, with an average attendance last quarter of 86. Last year we had five graduates in the teacher training class. This year we have a larger class, who will soon complete the course. The Sunday-school has a library of 200 choice volumes, including twenty missionary books which belong to the auxiliary.

While Concord has had its dark days, many losses by removals and deaths, and often interest seemed at low ebb, yet we believe its present condition to be the most flourishing in its history, both as to membership and finances. Its membership is made up of the best whole-souled people in the world, and is remarkably free from petty strifes and divisions.

As to its needs, I would mention a Christian paper in every home, for we know that only the uninformed are indifferent. We need, also, that some of our men should attend the state convention, and an enlarged building; but, most of all, we need a parsonage, with a small plot of land, so that we may have a preacher live and labor with us all the time. I believe the destiny of this church depends on the right solution of this question. Philip S. Kilby.

New Brunswick and Nova Scotia Convention.

The annual convention of the Churches of Christ of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia will meet with the congregation at Lord's Cove, Deer Island, N. B., on August 25. Beside the preaching brethren from these provinces, among other preachers will be W. R. Warren, Centennial secretary; J. A. Lord, editor of the "Christian Standard;" Ralph Minnick, of Worcester, Mass., and F. J. M. Appelman, of Lubec, Me. We are preparing for a great convention and trust that any of the brethren from the States who may be in this portion of the world at that time, will plan to be in attendance.

Pritchard.

Saturday morning—Bible school institute, Marion Stevenson. Address by W. E. M. Hackleman; Old Folks' songs, Hackleman, director; sermon by Dr. G. H. Schleh, Omaha. Afternoon, Bible school period, papers by Mrs. W. E. McCloud, Mrs. Laura Martin, Etta Caton, Round Table Bible drill and report by Superintendent Downey; address by Marion Stevenson. Evening, address by Marion Stevenson; sermon, H. O. Pritchard.

Lord's day morning—Regular Bible school; sermon by Marion Stevenson. Afternoon, communion, R. A. Hawley, presiding. Junior meeting, C. W. B. M. quiet hour. Evening, Y. P. S. C. E. service, led by Lincoln Eastside. C. E. praise service by convention chorus; sermon, H. O. Pritchard. Fellowship meeting, J. E. Davis, leader.

It will be noted that we have a series of sermons beginning Wednesday evening by H. O. Pritchard, the University Church preacher at Bethany. His general theme will be, "The Paradoxes of Christ." We have two morning C. E. schools by Denton and three Bible school institutes by Stevenson. Both of these men are specialists in their departments. Both give special addresses aside from this work. We have three national secretaries, F. M. Rains, of the Foreign Society; Wm. J. Wright, of the Home Society, and W. R. Warren, of Pittsburg, Centennial secretary. We will have two special addresses by C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, Mo., one of the most talented of Missouri's preachers. Hon. O. W. Stewart, of Chicago, is a man well known in temperance and reform circles. Brother Dutcher, of Omaha, ranks toward the top among pulpit men and his address is on a great theme. W. E. M. Hackleman, musical composer and publisher, of Indianapolis, will have full direction of the convention music. Dr. G. H. Schleh is not well known to some of us, but is a pulpit orator worth hearing.

The stereopticon representation of Porto Rican scenes by Mrs. Ford will be a great treat, and C. C. Smith, superintendent of negro work under the C. W. B. M., will be a delight to all. He is a master speaker.

In fact the whole program is made up of specialists and leading workers in the state and out of it. Come early and remain through to the end.

THE WALLA WALLA CONVENTION

The East Washington Christian Missionary Convention at Walla Walla has passed into history as the greatest convention ever held in the state by our people. Its beginning was auspicious. The great and beautiful stone church, so nearly perfect in equipment, comfort and convenience, was in itself a great advantage; it preached many strong sermons of suggestion and ideal to the workers gathered at the convention. A special convention committee had been appointed by the church months before, of which E. S. Hornaday made an ideal chairman, and through its efforts and those of their most excellent preacher, S. G. Fisher, the whole church was aroused and appreciative of its responsibility and opportunity. Therefore a large audience of Walla Walla people, as well as delegates from abroad, gathered on Monday evening, at the opening session, to greet the speaker, M. L. Rose, of North Yakima.

It was a great convention because the program was great. Every number showed careful preparation and sustained the high tide of the convention spirit. Not a little could be said in praise of the convention music, led by N. M. Field, of Spokane. It was a valuable feature of the work. Dr. and Mrs. Royal J. Dye captured the convention completely and became the center of its life by their wonderful naratives. Their coming will surely result in larger offerings from East Washington for the foreign field. The presence of W. J. Wright in fellowship and in counsel and address, as also that of Mrs. Louise Kelly, was invaluable to the convention. Space does not permit me to speak in further detail of the excellent features of the program. It was a great convention because of its spirit and fellowship. The enthusiasm was high and sustained throughout. The attendance was constantly large. Almost the entire convention attended the devotional exercises. There was no running away. More than 400 people were in constant attendance. Not a single disgruntled, complaining or faultfinding spirit was present. There was no "wire-pulling" or selfish interest to obtain. The fellowship was warm, ideal. This phase of the convention's interest was splendidly served by the beautiful hospitality of the Walla Walla church, and the convenience of the lunches in the basement. The convention was great because it was representative. More nearly than ever before every church in the district was represented. The remotest congregations sent delegates hundreds of miles. East Washington is a great territory, more than 200 miles each way. The convention represented a field of greatest opportunity, a country of wonderful resources, one rapidly filling up with people from all parts of the world. Towns are springing up magically. Perhaps a hundred fields where there are enough brethren to establish a church are waiting the advent of the evangelist. And not least by any means is the fact that the East Washington work is organized aggressively, and all the churches are united in purpose and effort to carry the gospel and the kingdom into the unoccupied fields.

The report of the corresponding secretary showed six new churches established, three of which were by the state board. Five other fields were entered and work done preparatory to establishing churches. At the beginning of the year there were fifty-five co-operating churches, with a membership of about 5,000. The total number of additions to the churches during the year was 1,665, a fraction more than 33 per cent of the membership. Total contributions of the churches to the state work during the year, $1,093.27, or an average of 22 cents per member. One man was employed in the work—the corresponding secretary.

For the work of the coming year the C. W. B. M. convention discussed at length the matter of establishing a Bible chair at Pullman, but a final decision was not reached. The committee of the E. W. C. M. S. on plan of work recommended the continuance of the missionary policy of the state board in entering new fields as rapidly as possible; also the policy of seeking an organic union with one or more of the denominational congregations already existing in the new fields, before building a separate church, such an union to be established on the New Testament basis. The first Lord's day in November was set apart as a day for the state offerings among the churches, and every preacher is asked to make a personal canvass of his congregation to raise the contributions to at least a dollar per member, in the average, if possible. It was also recommended that a state paper be established, issued monthly, if possible, to every home in the churches, thus supplying a great want, and fulfilling one of our centennial aims. The report of the committee on resolutions puts all the churches under moral obligation to support in every way possible the present conflict with the liquor traffic, and to unite in destroying the saloon from our midst.

The Walla Walla church is a living link in the east Washington field this year. The churches of Wenatchee, Malaga, Entiat and Waterville have also become living links in the state work. The Wanatchee church is the best per capita giver among us, having averaged $1.66 each. W. T. Adams, of Corona, Cal., is to become the living link for the Wanatchee, et al., churches. The man for the Walla Walla livng link has probably been secured. The state board has employed A. A. Doak as missionary pastor, to locate at Colfax, in the hope of getting the work there on a better basis. He is already there at work. The corresponding secretary of last year was continued for the coming year. So the work this year is greatly increased, the number of men being quadrupled.

The following officers were elected: C. F. Stevens, E. 14, Eighth street, Spokane, president; W. L. McCullough, Pomeroy, first vice-president; E. S. Hornaday, North Eighth street, Walla Walla, second vice-president; A. C. Downing, E. 2414 First avenue, Spokane, recording secretary; A. K. Findley, Pullman, treasurer; M. A. Thompson, Waitsburg, state Bible school superintendent; J. G. Patrick, Prescott, state C. E. president.

A good work was done by Miss Cobb, state president of the Christian Endeavor, last year, and we have reason to believe that the Christian Endeavor interests will grow during the present year. Brother Thompson is also president of the state Sunday-school Union, and has broken all records in his teacher training class at Waitsburg last year in that he graduated 100 per cent of a large class; he has long been aggressive and progressive in this field; and we are hoping for great things for the state Bible school work this year. There are signs of something doing already.

Since the convention the state president and the corresponding secretary in co-operation with N. M. Field and wife, dedicated the beautiful new Christian Church at Colville, June 29, when $2,971 was raised, thus providing well for all their obligations. The congregation is very happy and much encouraged. Several of our pastors have offered themselves for evangelistic work. This is a good sign. I am glad to announce that Walla Walla has secured John L. Brandt, and Garfield, S. M. Martin, for evangelistic work this winter. Other splendid men can be secured if the churches will speak up at once; but they must act now. A state-wide evangelistic campaign should be inaugurated.

Brethren, and churches of East Washington, we have undertaken great things this year. The corresponding secretary goes into it with fear and trembling. We must not fail. We must have the liberal support of all. The success of last year justifies it abundantly. The state board needs greatly your prayers, your contributions and your co-operation. Can we have them? From $50 to $100 each is not too much to expect from many of our East Washington Disciples in so great an undertaking in so great a field. All hands to work for the greatest victory yet in this great Centennial year! Remember that our motto is a vital one this year. "A long pull, a strong pull, a pull all together."

J. A. Pine,
Corresponding Secretary.

lenge to tell Mr. Hensey so he could send the canoe to meet us at Longa, accordingly. It was with salt that we rationed our carriers while in this back country and the men buy their food with the salt. We had brought enough so as to have two bushels of salt after crossing this river, and since one bushel was lost we had but one bushel left, or ten days' rations.

While on this trip Dr. Jaggard, though he could not speak the language, had a chance to do a good bit of good with his medicines and helped in many ways. We think he is of the right material for the work here at Bolenge and among the Lunkundu people. Send us some more like him for we need them badly if we are to go even where the doors are open wide and calling, yes, calling, as yet in vain, for us to come and help them. Ever your fellow-worker, of this mother church. I refer to Green Bay, Weaver and Fort Madison, all within a radius of a few miles.

I must make special mention of another one of our country churches, and when I mention the name of the leading spirit it will awaken interest in the minds of members in every state in the union. Our older brethren will remember that Joseph Franklin was the father of five sons, all of whom became preachers. One of these sons was Benjamin Franklin, editor of the "American Christian Review," and author of the volumes of gospel sermons that so many ministers have preached. Another son, Washington, came to Cass county, Iowa, in 1869, and settled on a farm near what is now the town of Cumberland. He soon began preaching to his neighbors and, in 1873, a congregation was organized at the schoolhouse and a few years later a house of worship was erected. A flourishing congregation was soon built up and has continued to this day. From the beginning and until about two years before his death, which occurred one year ago last March, Father Franklin was the alternate preacher, occupying the pulpit every two weeks, the other Lord's days being occupied by a minister regularly employed for that purpose. By the influence and the members of the Bethel church a congregation was organized at Cumberland about fifteen years ago. I knew Father Franklin well and have been in his home. He was recognized as a patriarch, indeed, loved and honored by all who knew him. J. D. Corbitt, vice-president of our state board and one of our most beloved preachers, is a product of Bethel church.

The number of country churches in Iowa, as compared with the total number of churches is not as large as that of some other states. We have about 470 churches in the state, and 83 of the number are in the country. This per cent was larger in an early day. The coming of new railroads and the springing up of new towns meant the passing of many a country church that before was a flourishing congregation, but the passing in many cases was to larger fields of usefulness. Others in isolated places have ceased to keep the ordinances of the Lord's house and are no more.

Some of the most flourishing churches in the state are to be found in the country. I mention a few that now occur to my mind: Pleasant Hill, Washington county; Bethel Grove, Marshall county; Union Mills, Mahaska county; Oak Grove and Prairie Creek, Benton county; Meadow Grove, Boone county; Cass Center, Hamilton county; Englewood and Pleasant Hill, Marion county; Rising Sun, Polk county; Walnut City, Mt. Olive, Orleans and North Bend, Appanoose county; Mt. Gilead and Stiles, Davis county; Union Chapel and Cuba, Monroe county; Madison, Powesheik county; Bladensburg and Russell Chapel, Wapello county; Big Cedar, Van Buren county; Last Chance, Lucas county; Pleasant Hill, Mills county; Blue Grove and Siam, Taylor county. These churches, and others in the country, are jealous of the Lord's cause, and are loyal to all departments of the church life. From their homes go young men for the ministry and all other honorable vocations in life, and young women, also, not to be outdone by their brothers, flock to the college halls for the better equipment for life's work. The country church has been, and is to-day, our source for supply and our future hope. While the city church is so much taken up with the high-salaried choir and the cultured preacher, the country church has for its greatest concern the truth as it is taught in God's word, and in the development of heart, and brawn, and brain of those about them.

One of our great needs to-day is men who will go to the country and preach the gospel to people who are willing to hear and who would obey the gospel. We have a lot of preachers who preach sermons to a handful of people each Lord's day who do not care a fig for what is said, who, if they would, could go a few miles in the country and preach to a house filled with people eager to hear and obey.

I am not prepared to estimate the number of preachers produced by our Iowa country churches, and the time given is too limited to make inquiry from those who might be able to give the information. I have personal knowledge of twenty-eight men now engaged in the ministry who came from our country churches. Among the number are two of our Des Moines pastors and the editor of the "Christian Union."

Des Moines, Iowa.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

California.

Bakersfield, Aug. 7.—I baptized three adults at the evening service.—Cal Ogburn.

Long Beach, Aug. 8.—I am writing from our state convention to report the work of the La Salle Avenue Church, Los Angeles. Sixteen additions in July. Eight by confession. Eight otherwise. The Sunday-school is at high water mark. We are incorporating under the name West Side Christian Church. We are just one year old and the gain for that time is 150 per cent and we have erected a new church home in spite of the hard times.—George Ringo.

Ukiah, Aug. 10.—One united by letter and two young men by baptism during the past two weeks.—O. Wilkinson.

Florida.

Jacksonville, Aug. 10.—Three additions at the First Church yesterday, the Sunday before five—one by confession.—J. T. Boone.

Georgia.

Conyers, Aug. 6.—Our meeting at Bethel Church closed here last night with two additions, one by confession.—E. Everett Hollingworth

Illinois.

Bushnell, Aug. 7.—I begin a meeting here Sunday, Aug. 9. Daudy and wife will be the singers.—H. Gordon Bennett.

Niantic, Aug. 14.—Two confessions last Sunday. I have baptized eight during July.—J. Will Walters.

Kentucky.

Crittenden, Aug. 15.—We recently assisted D. T. Buck in a meeting with the church here. The interest was good and there were 16 additions, 15 by confession and baptism and one otherwise. The congregation dedicated its new house and the prospects for growth are bright.—W. J. Shelburne.

Princeton, Aug. 13.—One confession and baptism at prayer-meeting last evening.—Charles W. Barnes.

Kansas.

Fort Scott, Aug. 15.—Our work here is in fine condition. The Sunday-school has been doubled and the Christian Endeavor reorganized. A teacher training class has been organized with 56 members. I have preached 25 sermons since I took charge of the work here and I have had 25 additions to the church during that time, 18 by letter and seven by baptism.—W. G. Allen.

Medicine Lodge, Aug. 10.—One confession at the morning service. We held a union meeting in the evening at which I preached on the subject, "Preaching Christ."—L. H. Barnum.

Michigan.

Belding, Aug. 12.—Two additions at the regular service Aug. 2, and one Aug. 9. The interest in the work of all deparments of the church is good. Union evening services with the Methodists, Congregationalists and Baptists are being held during August. These services are well attended.—O. W. Winter.

Missouri.

Bolckow, Aug. 11.—Miss Maude Brunk, of Des Moines, is assisting me in a meeting here, having charge of the singing.—J. A. Dillinger, minister.

Calhoun, Aug. 10.—The meeting here has been in progress for two weeks, with 57 additions, 40 of them by confession and baptism. We will continue all this week and go from here to assist J. D. Babb at Deepwater, Mo.—F. M. O'Neal and wife, singing evangelists.

Elkton, Aug. 12.—We held services here last Sunday and in the evening there was one confession and baptism. The church here is growing steadily.—T. E. Butterfield.

Golden City, Aug. 11.—Two were baptized here last Sunday. We have just organized an adult Bible class. Elder Stacy Phillips, of Ponca, Okla., preached for me last Sunday.—Quincey Biggs.

Midway, Aug. 9.—Closed a two weeks' meeting here Aug. 7. There were 19 additions, 10 by confession.—J. E. Gorton.

White Oak, Aug. 9.—One baptism here yesterday.—Challie E. Graham.

North Carolina.

Belhaven, Aug. 10.—I have been in a meeting here for the past nine days and there have been nine additions. J. D. Bowles is assisting with the music. I have accepted a call to this church, to begin my work at once.—H. C. Bowen.

North Dakota.

Buford, Aug. 12.—I am in a fine meeting at this place, and I have never seen better interest shown in any services. There have been 27 additions to date and I expect many more. Last Sunday night I organized a congregation with 35 members and I will endeavor to find a minister for them at once. There are many calls for meetings from scattered Disciples all over this great state, but I have not heard of any other congregation in this part of the state. —Morton H. Wood.

New York.

Buffalo, Aug. 1.—Since last report 21 have been added to the Jefferson Street Church, mostly by confession. We are to spend the month of August at Lake James, near Angola, Ind.—B. S. Ferrall.

Oklahoma.

Gutiine, Aug. 13.—Five were baptized here recently.—T. L. Noblitt.

Oregon.

Portland, Aug. 6.—The Rodney Avenue Church of this city has just closed a five-weeks' tent meeting with D. C. Kellerns and A. W. Shaffer as evangelists. The immediate results were 36 accessions, but such seed sowing must surely bring a much larger harvest in the weeks to come.—Mrs. Clara G. Esson.

Texas.

Abilene, Aug. 10.—There were four additions to the South Side Church yesterday and one the previous Sunday. I am to hold a meeting at Melrose, New Mexico, beginning with the first Sunday in September.

Mahomit, Aug. 14.—We are holding a fine meeting in this place. Up to date there have been nine confessions.—J. H. Stockey.

McKinney, Aug. 12.—On Aug. 2 I dedicated the Baccus church, which had been removed from Lebanon and rebuilt, and followed with a meeting of nine days. Altogether 37 were added, 24 by confession and baptism, 12 by letter and statement and one from the Baptists. Of the 24 by confession and baptism all were boys and young men save five. Before leaving a good, live Christian Endeavor Society was organized. The church was left joyous, happy and hopeful. Bro. J. B. Hunter, of Allen, also in this county, was my leader of song and well did he do his work.—Hugh McClellan.

Van Alstyne, Aug. 10.—Our meeting with Richard Martin, of the Martin family, evangelist, and L. D. Sprague, singer, continues with increasing interest and attendance. There were 1,200 people present last night to hear Brother Martin on Christian union; many coming on interurban cars and in wagons from the country. Evangelist Martin is a true man of God. He is true to "Our Pleas." His powerful sermons have held hundreds of these people night after night in closest attention. Brother Sprague, leading a great chorus, and with his splendid solos, is a great factor in the meeting. While this field was well gleaned, even the Bible school, there have been 40 added already, and others coming. Martin and Sprague are true Christian gentlemen. They are loved by our people. This church is united and happy.—G. F. Bradford.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

ORGANIZED ADULT CLASSES.

The following list includes all the Adult Bible classes in our own Bible schools which have reported their organization to the Adult Department of the International Sunday-School Association and have received the International Certificate of Recognition. A glance at it reveals the fact that we have a very large number of Adult classes organized according to the international standard and not reported. Is your class on the list? Have you received the Certificate of Recognition? If not, send to-day to your State Superintendent of Adult Department for an application blank and instructions.

We were disappointed at the Louisville convention to find that only a small number of our teacher training classes were reported. Let us not make this mistake in regard to the Adult Bible classes. Let us lead in organized classes as well as in teacher training, and let the classes in both departments be enrolled with the proper authorities.

HIGH THINKING AND WHAT IT WILL DO.

Topic August 26.—Phil. 4:4-9.

We have in this eighth verse of the fourth chapter of Philippians another of those splendid summaries which we delight to find frequently in Paul's letters. "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

Like the old prophet's summary of the divine requirements—justice, mercy and humility, and the Master's reiteration of these as the weightier matters of the law—"justice, mercy and faith"—these things commend the Bible to all who think rightly and love the good and seek the right. The marvel of it is that all good men everywhere do not accept these things without question, or as they really are, beyond all cavil, and act upon them. And really, the ethical influence of the Bible is beyond all estimation, far outreaching even what we imagine it to be. To love the Lord, our God, with all our mind, heart, soul and strength, and our neighbor as ourselves, is the ideal of redeemed humanity. On these hang all the law and the prophets, Jesus said. And we will never outgrow the religion of the Prophet of Galilee until we have realized the dream of the seers and singers and saints of all the waiting ages. So rest your faith confidently in the Christ.

Meanwhile, if we are to ever realize this glad day of peace, we must begin by right thinking. The Bible is pre-eminently a sensible book. Jesus was a practical teacher. Paul was logical, with all his enthusiasm. If you ask for the logic of all right ethical teaching, find it in this summary in Paul's letter to the Philippians. These finallies of faith are such as to commend the Gospel which Paul proclaimed. They are an appeal to the judgment of right thinking men everywhere. They have to do with the very basic principles of life—truth, honesty, justice, purity, loveliness, virtue, good repute—things which touch life on all sides. If we do not love these things and think on these things and do these things, it is because there is something wrong with our mental machinery or our moral character. And I make my appeal to men on this basis. If men are to know the peace of God that passeth all understanding, and possess it, it must be understood that these things are to be sought. All right living begins with right thinking. And right thinking requires right teaching. "They shall all be taught of God" is one of the characteristics of the new and better covenant. The world needs the preaching of Christ crucified for sins; reconciliation through him and right living in him. Righteousness, right living and redemption are the three "Rs" of the religion of Jesus Christ and of the Bible.

Cyrus Hamlin.

Cyrus Hamlin, one of the ablest and best beloved of modern missionaries was born near Waterford, Me., January 5, 1811.

His father died when Cyrus was an infant, and his mother was very poor. While the boy was learning to be a jeweler, he discovered a liking for books, and decided to go through college and become a minister.

With wonderful energy and resourcefulness he carried out this purpose without any money, except what he earned, graduating from Bowdoin College and Bangor Theological Seminary.

In December, 1838, he sailed for Turkey as a missionary. Constantinople was the scene of his labors till his return in 1873.

He promptly learned Armenian, Turkish, and modern Greek, and was set at the task of forming and conducting a theological seminary for the training of native preachers and teachers. This task he accomplished in spite of almost insuperable obstacles put in his way by native bigotry and intolerance.

Hamlin, and Turkey.

Hamlin was a man of great mechanical ability and a thorough believer in the virtue of hard work. As a training in industry and thrift, he established a stove factory and a last factory, which were successful in teaching the natives to work, and providing employment for the converts who had been excommunicated for their faith.

During the Crimean war Dr. Hamlin perceived the awful neglect of the suffering English soldiers, and with wonderful energy established a great flour-mill, bakery, and laundry. The $25,000 profit from these industries he turned over to the mission treasury.

Christopher Robert, of New York, established Robert College, at Constantinople, which has become the great Christian college of Turkey in Europe. Dr. Hamlin was its builder and its first president. The college was opened in 1863. Into the founding of this institution Dr. Hamlin threw all his vast energy and boundless versatility. It remains as his enduring monument.

After returning to the United States, Dr. Hamlin become professor in Bangor Seminary and then president of Middlebury College, and passed his closing years in Lexington, Mass., where he died on August 8, 1900. His autobiography, "My Life and Times," is one of the brightest and most inspiring books ever written.—Endeavor's Daily Companion.

Concerning Creeds.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

The Christian-Evangelist of March 9 had the following:

"The Maritime Baptist" quotes, apparently with its approval, the following paragraph from the "Central Presbyterian":

"Nine-tenths of those who inveigh against creeds do not know what a creed is. They can not tell you, if you ask them, a single article of any creed, in either form or substance. They have merely caught up a cry, and are talking at second hand and thinking they know what they are saying. They deceive no one but themselves. There is no rational man living that does not have a creed. He can not be rational and be without it. An intelligent mind and a creed go together."

On this The Christian-Evangelist comments as follows:

"One very often sees loose-jointed paragraphs like this floating around in religious papers. If the authors of such paragraphs are sincere, they utterly misapprehend the meaning and attitude of those who oppose the binding authority of human formulations of doctrine. What the "Central Presbyterian" really seeks to defend is the practice of having the Christians of this generation and of the twentieth century bound, in their thinking, by human creeds which were formulated in past centuries. It is quite true that every raitonal mind has its creed—its theology, is meant—but it is a very different moral proposition for him to seek to bind that creed upon another man as a condition of fellowship."

The paragraph quoted by The Christian-Evangelist seems to state facts; though even of rational intelligent men the number who "think out" their own "creeds" is very small.

Practically all the doctrines and beliefs of the Christian world have been "thought out" by three men: St. Paul, St. Augustine and John Calvin.

Nearly all men get their "creeds," religious, political or social, if their beliefs are sufficiently definite to be dignified by that term, at second hand, or even much further removed from their original sources. There is little danger that any who really think will be too much "bound in their thinking" by "creeds" and "formularies of doctrine," ancient or modern. The danger seems to be from the opposite direction: that the great creeds and traditions of humanity will lose entirely their power to bind or control. In fact, the longer Protestant "confessions of faith" are practically obsolete, and subscription to them is not now required anywhere as a condition of fellowship. It is a great mistake to suppose that our religious neighbors are "bound" by the "creeds" they are supposed to profess.

The talk about "human creeds" is not impressive. All creeds are necessarily "human." They state, or define, what human beings believe. As God can not be supposed to "believe" anything, there can be no "divine creed."

The "confession" of Saint Peter, whether its great truth was revealed to him directly or through the words and works of Jesus of Nazareth, which he had heard and seen, expressed what a human being believed, and so was a "human creed."

Until the word of God is transmuted into a "human creed," and becomes the living faith, the moving, compelling force of human intellects, it is inert.

Like all other things, even the Christian religion itself, creeds have their defects and their excellencies. But they have been of immense value to Christianity, and the weight of opinion seems to be that some form of creed—some clear and concise summary of what the church believes and teaches as necessary to salvation, which shall be of authority—is yet necessary if the church is not to "dissolve into star-dust and luminous mist."

Pure democracy was an ideal form of government for a community of Virginia planters, or of New England Puritans. But applied to the ignorant and half-civilized masses in the huge cities of to-day, it is pure nonsense; is utterly unworkable.

It is equally absurd to suppose that what was sufficient to preserve the faith and discipline of the early groups of enthusiastic disciples would be at all adequate when the church had spread over the earth and governed many millions of people.

The "Central Presbyterian" is right. Probably few of those who rail at "creeds" know anything of the questions involved.

Indianapolis, Ind. F. M. Wiley.

[Statements like the foregoing raise the question whether the writer is familiar with the distinctions which the advocates of this Reformation have always made between faith and opinion, or faith and theology; also between faith subjectively and objectively considered. The point of our criticism against the paragraph of the "Central Presbyterian" was, that while it assumed that opposition to existing creeds was based on the mistaken idea that we are not required to believe anything definitely in order to salvation, the truth is, such opposition, so far as we are concerned, is based on an entirely different ground. In the first place, we stated, there is given us in the New Testament a divine creed, which all must accept. No human council has authority to draw up a creed, and make it necessary to salvation or a condition of fellowship. Every man has a right, if he wishes to do so, to set forth his theological views on all questions, but he has no right to seek to bind those views on the consciences of others. Nor has any number of men such right. It is this against which the leaders of this movement protested, and it was only by the rejection of the authority of these creeds that religious reformation became possible.

What our correspondent says about all creeds being human, since God can not believe, and there being no such thing as a "divine creed," is not only "not impressive," but indicates confusion of thought. The act of believing is, of course, a human act. But the thing believed is supposed to be divine. For instance, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Now, believing on Christ is an act of the human mind and heart, but the person believed on is divine, and the truths concerning His Messiahship and Divinity are divine truths. When we speak of the confession of Simon Peter at Cæsarea Philippi as a divine creed, we speak of it objectively; that is, as the thing believed. Jesus distinctly says it was divinely revealed. No one doubts "that some clear and concise summary of what the church believes and teaches as necessary to salvation" is helpful and even necessary in the work of carrying on the Kingdom of God, and our newspapers and tracts and books are full of such summaries. But none of these are made binding upon anybody's conscience. There is but one thing to believe "as necessary to salvation," and that is to "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." Repentance and baptism are not objects of faith, but things to be done because we believe on Christ. A person is the object of faith; doctrines are to be understood, commands obeyed. These are old-time distinctions which Disciples are supposed to be familiar with. We do not share our brother's pessimistic view of democracy. We believe in it, both in the church and state. We believe in it even in the cities, but it requires the religion of Jesus Christ to make it yield the best results.—Editor.]

Duty's Ground.

W. J. SHAW.

Life richer grows
As love's red rose
Unfolds to perfect flower;
For I have found
On duty's ground
The soul's divinest dower.

"I Theekit Ma Hoosie in the Calm Weather."

All day long the snow had fallen, as if with quiet, steady purpose. As the light faded, the wind rose, and rose till the night was one of the wildest. In each little house on the countryside the inmates knew that they were cut off from their neighbors; and that that night there could be neither coming nor going. Light after light in the little village went out, and all was dark. Yet, though it was now near midnight, there was one window—had there been any one but God to see it—in which still shone a light. It was in the farmhouse high on hillside. For within an old man lies dying. Late in the evening he had taken a turn for the worse, and his daughter began to be afraid, knowing that on such a night she could send for no one, either doctor or minister, and fearing she might have to face the Angel alone. Hour after hour she watched and waited. She looked on the gray locks that had once been black as the raven, on the pale cheeks once red as berries, on the strong, straight nose that still spoke to her of all his strength and uprightness. Never again, she murmured to herself, would she see him in the little church, bearing the vessels of the Lord—the tallest, dearest figure among all.

"Father" she said at length, "wull I read a chapter to ye?"

But the old man was in sore pain, and only moaned. She rose, however, and got the Book and opened it.

"Na, na, lassie," he said; "the storm's up noo; I theekit (thatched) by hoosie in the calm weather."

And thereafter she waited without fear. —J. X. L., in the British Weekly.

"Bredren," said the colored preacher, "my tex' is, 'God so love.' I shall just speak of 'God,' den of 'so,' lastly of 'love,' which may be call' de logical outline." Proceeding on this plan Brother Jones astonished his white hearers, at least, in his second head, with the question: "Did yer ever sow a fiel'? Den yer knows what 'so' means."

Largest Flower in the World.

Can you imagine a blossom as large as a carriage wheel? On the island of Mindanao, one of the Philippine group, was found by some explorers, such a flower, says a writer.

Far up on the mountain of Parag, 2,500 feet above the sea level, some explorers were wandering, when they came across some buds larger than gigantic cabbage heads.

Greatly astonished, they searched further, and presently discovered a full-blown blossom, five petaled, and three feet in diameter. It was carried on low-lying, luxuriant vines.

The natives call it bolo. It was found impossible to preserve it fresh, so they photographed it, and kept some dried petals to press, and by improvised scales found that a single flower weighed twenty-two pounds.

It was afterward found to be a species of Rafflesia, first found in Sumatra, named after Sir Stamford Raffles. The new flower was called Rafflesia Schalenburgia, in honor of its discoverer, Dr. Shadenburg.

How the New Testament Came to Korea.

What if, with the assurance of the writers of Bible history, one could point in every day affairs to the hand of God! One would wish to tell in his assured way the story of the Korean New Testament which the American Bible Society's Agency in Japan furnished to the missionaries entering Korea in 1885.

In 1881 Korea was savagely hostile to Christianity. Any Korean presuming to aid in bringing the Bible to Korea or even possessing a Bible at that time would risk his life. At the king's palace in Seoul was a very learned man named Rijutei, a great linguist, an able writer, and a pagan withal who hated Christianity like the rest of the Court Circle, for he was Court Annalist. This man became the translator of the New Testament into Korean. How he came to do it is a story worth telling.

The King of Korea in 1881 happened to send one of his officials, an intimate friend of Rijutei, to Japan to study the new system of agriculture. The man was told to consult some Japanese expert in the science, and it happened that he was referred to a certain Mr. Tsuda, who was an authority on agriculture—and also a Christian.

It happened that on the walls of the room where these two men discussed farming the Korean saw a scroll in Chinese containing the Sermon on the Mount. He was startled by what he read on the scroll, for he had to admit then and there that these sayings of Christ were good, and enlightening to the mind. Mr. Tsuda asked him to take the scroll with him to Korea, but the Korean declined, saying, with pale lips, that if that scroll were found in his possession, his head would be cut off. But it happened that ideas found in the scroll went to Korea treasured in his mind.

Near to bursting with the greatness of his discovery the man had to speak of it to some one. It happened that the one man in all Korea, whom he dared trust in such a plight, was his friend Rijutei, the Court Annalist. Rijutei heard his friend's story with an amused smile, asked a question or two, became more serious, listened intently, and finally decided that he must find some way of going to Japan to see this wonderful scroll for himself. But he could find no excuse for asking leave to go to Japan. After a time, however, a request came to the king for a learned man to be professor of the Korean language in the Imperial University at Tokyo in Japan, and curiously enough it happened that the king picked out for this duty Rijutei.

Rijutei made no secret of his pleasure at the appointment. He went to Japan; in due time he sought out Mr. Tsuda; he got a Chinese Bible; he found a helpful teacher in one of the Japanese pastors, and finally he found Jesus Christ as his Saviour and Lord. It happened that a man of his nature could not be a Christian without being a prayer-meeting Christian and a hymn writing Christian. So the fame of this remarkable Korean professor reached Mr. Loomis, the Bible Society Agent in Yokohama, who wanted just such a man. So it happened that soon Rijutei was giving all the time that he could spare from the University to translating the New Testament into Korean. The Gospel of Mark was printed in Korean in the year 1884, and also the China-Korean New Testament, and in the report of the Bible Society it is said that, "it will now be possible to supply Korea with Scriptures as fast as the work requires."—Japan Evangelist.

A Wonderful Lamp.

Goethe tells of a wonderful lamp which, when placed in a fisherman's hut, changed all within it to beauty and convenience. So the Gospel of Christ, when it enters a home, glorifies all its relationships and duties. It makes strength gentle, intellect careful, will righteous, and affection love. It sanctifies all trials and blessings.

Smallpox Fete.

In the days gone by when vaccination was still unknown in this land it was customary with Tokyo folk, whenever smallpox was rife, to institute a sort of general festivity called hosomatsuri, or smallpox festival, superstitution ascribing to it an enchanting virtue against the spreading of the disease. Modern people who scarcely know the nature and scope of this antiquated institution will be interested to hear what this practice was like and that it has now been revived in a section of the smallpox-ridden district of Tokyo. The method of the festival is thus:

Those interested with or apprehensive of smallpox make a sort of table four feet by two feet which covering with red cloth they deposit in the parlor. Upon it they heap large bags of rice, on top of which a red gohei peculiarly cut paper, considered by the vulgar to be sacred, is placed. This forms a sort of temporary shrine, before which the family kneel and worship for twelve days, after which period all the rice and other articles and offerings are cast away either in the river or by the roadside, to be touched only by dogs and mendicants. Simultaneously with this the family, especially those infected with smallpox, bathe themselves in red colored hot water, which is produced by boiling red beans. The special feature of this practice is the redness of color which characterizes almost every thing forming part of the festival. For twelve days, which is the term of the festival, people use red colored towels, are dressed in red kimono and receive no gifts which are not rendered prominently red. They keep their persons as clean as possible, women having their hair down in a clean, unoiled state. Besides, they observe the strictest temperance and abstinence from all impure thoughts or deeds. The idea of this peculiar institution would appear to be that the god of smallpox stays for twelve days in one family; so that during his short sojourn, they must coax and humor him as much as possible, that he may not leave any disastrous effects behind him. —Japan Times.

Sidney Smith recommends us to make at least one person happy every day. "Take ten years, and you will make thirty-six hundred and fifty persons happy; or brighten a small town by your contribution to the fund of general joy." One who is cheerful is pre-eminently useful.

The "Little Mothers" of a Great City

By J. L. HARBOUR.

"Have you seen the little mothers?
Have you looked into their eyes?
When the daylight slowly dies,
When time comes for lullabies?
Child arms hold the tiny bundle;
Child lips sing the good night song;
As the dreamer slips along
To the land where dreams belong."

There are so many of these "little mothers" in all of our great cities. I have seen scores of them with the "tiny bundles" of humanity in their slender arms. Sometimes these bundles of humanity are not so very tiny, and are quite too large for such little mothers as these to carry. But carry them they must, and "mind baby" they must, while the real mother is away at work earning bread for her children. Often the children are fatherless, but it sometimes happens that the father has simply gone away and shirked his duty to the children.

It was only the other day that I came across one of the little mothers in a crowded tenement house district in Boston. She was sitting on a doorstep with a fretful baby of about a year old in her arms and an incredibly dirty little boy two years old by her side. The street was narrow and dirty, and children were swarming in all side streets and courts. An Italian organ grinder was playing, and some of the ragged and untidy children were dancing to the music. A hokey-pokey cart stood on the corner, and, penniless as they looked, some of the children fished up pennies from their pockets with which to buy the hokey-pokey man's doubtful wares.

It was in the springtime, and some of the boys were playing that unfailing game of the early spring—marbles, but they yelled and screeched at their play as if engaged in some kind of deadly warfare. Other little mothers there were wheeling their charges in rickety perambulators or holding them by the hand, half rebellious, no doubt, because the absent mother's charge to "mind baby" kept them from playing freely with the other children who had no babies to mind. Not even the best-disposed little boy or girl really enjoys "minding the baby" for any considerable length of time, particularly when "baby" is peevish or fretful or willful and demands constant attention.

I stopped before the little mother sitting on the doorstep with her two little charges by her and I asked: "Where is your mother?"

"Away at work."

"What kind of work does she do?"

"Scrubs and cleans all day in a hotel uptown."

"And you take care of the baby?"

She nodded her head, and said, with a suggestion of rebellion in her voice, "I has to."

"Where is your father?"

"Gone off."

"Where has he gone?"

"I don't know. He's just gone off."

There are a good many children in the great cities whose fathers have "just gone off" and their children have no idea where they are. Indeed, what is more sorrowful, the children are glad that the father has "gone off," because, as one little mother said to me, her father was so "awful ugly" when he was at home. In so many cases the father has been made "awful ugly" by that cause of such infinite sorrow in the world—drink. Another little mother, with a chubby little boy of less than a year old in her arms, laughed joyously when the baby's lips parted in a grin over his toothless gums, and, holding him toward me she asked: "Ain't he cunnin'?"

"You take care of him all day, do you?" I asked.

"Some days we puts him in the day nursery when mother is away and I has to go to school, but I takes care of him most of the time when I am at home. I didn't mind it so very much when he doesn't squall all of the time."

"He doesn't look as if he ever did that."

"Well, that proves that looks don't always tell what a baby's like. Squall? He kin squall to beat the band. Honest Injun, I believe that if there was a band on one corner here and Jimmy was on the other corner squalling his worst and the band was playing its worst, you could hear Jimmy above the band. I guess there isn't nothin' the matter with his lungs."

"What makes him 'squall' so?"

"Well, mother says it's his stomach or his teeth comin'. He must have about five hundred teeth on the way, if it's his teeth and he squalls for each of 'em. But I says it's pure temper."

The church with which I am connected does a great deal of charitable work in the tenement house districts, and I know of a little girl twelve years old who took entire charge of three children younger than herself for three weeks while her mother was sick in the hospital. The church and a charitable society paid the rent of the little home of three very small rooms on the fourth floor of an old rookery of a tenement, and provided food which the little girl cooked. The father was of the kind who had "just gone off" and no one knew where he was. I was in the church office one afternoon when the little mother of this family came in to ask how her own mother was, in the hospital.

"She is improving right along, Mary," said the lady in charge of the office. "We have just had a telephone message from the hospital."

"And you think she will get home sure?" she asked, wistfully. "Because, you know, Lucy Blank's mother went to the hospital, just like my mother has, and she never came back. You're sure it won't be that way with my mother?"

"We feel sure of that now, Mary. She will probably be sent home in about ten days. How are you getting along?"

"First rate. The neighbors are real good. But it's awful lonesome nights—awful. I'll be terrible glad when mother gets home."

"We will all be glad Mary. You must keep up your courage and do the very best you can until then."

"Yes, ma'am."

"It is simply wonderful the way that little mite of a girl twelve years old takes her mother's place and looks after her little sisters and brother,'' said the attendant when the ''little mother'' had gone out of the room. ''When I was there last Saturday she was down on her knees scrubbing the floor. She said that she was cleaning up for Sunday, 'like mother did.' And the way she minds the baby two years old is simply pathetic. Talk about heroism! She is a genuine little heroine, but it is costing her all of the natural and rightful joys of childhood to be one.''

GUY POTTER BENTON, D. D., LL. D., Oxford, Ohio.

When Jacob Riis sent his book of sorrow, ''The Children of the Poor,'' into the world, some people who knew nothing of the life of the tenements felt that the book must have been somewhat exaggerated, because they felt that such conditions could hardly be in the America of our day. But the book was only too true, and there are such conditions to-day in all of our large cities. The book is so true that boys and girls who have pleasant homes and loving fathers and mothers, boys and girls who have never known what it is to be cold and hungry and ragged or beaten, should thank God with all their hearts every day of their lives. There are in all of our large cities plenty of boys like the ''Tony'' and the ''Katie'' in the book I have named. The pity of it is that it should be possible that there should be so many of these children in a great, rich land like ours. Perhaps you have read the book, and if you have you may remember that Mr. Riis said of Katie, who was nine years old:

''The serious responsibilities of life had come early to Katie. On the top floor of a tenement in West Forty-ninth street she was keeping house for her older sister and two brothers, all of whom worked in a hammock factory, earning from $4.50 down to $1.50 a week. They had moved together when the mother died and the father had brought home another wife. Their combined income was something like $9.50 a week, and the simple furniture was bought on installments. But it was all clean, if poor. Katie did the cleaning and the cooking of the plain kind. They did not run much to fancy cooking, I guess. She scrubbed and swept and went to school, all as a matter of course, and ran the house generally, with an occasional lift from the neighbors in the tenement, who were, if anything, poorer than they.''

There are a good many children in the tenements of the great cities who do not smile very often, and some of them almost never laugh aloud, and yet there is a good deal of merrymaking and the noise of children's voices among the very little people playing in the dirty streets. No doubt most of those who may read this have gone to donkey parties and have tried to pin the tail where it should be on the donkey. Mr. Riis tells us of a donkey party he once saw in the slums of New York:

''The donkey hung in the window of a notion store, and a knot of tenement house children, with tails improvised from a newspaper and dragged in the gutter to make them stick, were staggering blindly across the sidewalk, trying to fix them in place on the pane. They got a heap of fun out of the game, quite as much, it seemed to me, as any crowd of children could have got in a fine parlor, until the storekeeper came out with his club. Every cellar door becomes a toboggan slide where the children are around, unless it is hammered full of envious nails, every block a ball ground when the policeman's back is turned, and every roof a kite-field; for that innocent amusement is also forbidden by a city ordinance in some parts of the city.''

The ubiquitous policeman, or ''cop,'' as the children call him, is ever on hand to restrict the children of the tenements, and in all the parks there are the ''keep off the grass'' and the ''do not pick the flowers'' signs that the child of the country knows nothing about. A still more sorrowful story could be written of the child toilers of the great cities, the little boys and girls who work such long, weary hours in stores and factories because poverty has driven them forth to work when other children play, or are at school. Little girls of eight and nine years pull basting-threads, and Mr. Riis tells of a little girl of nine years who worked from seven in the morning until eight at night pulling these threads in a sweat-shop.'' Of course there are laws against this kind of child labor, but the laws are evaded in all sorts of ways.

''Minding the baby'' is tiresome enough when one must do it all day long, but it is not so hard as working all day in some of the shops and factories. The children who have nothing to do but to go to school and play games and be tenderly cared for in pleasant homes when school is done are among the happy, the fortunate children of the world. If they do not think so, let them reflect on the lot of the ''little mothers'' and all the great army of the child toilers who have never had anything worthy the name of home and who have never known any of the real joy of childhood.—Epworth Herald.

Tommy's maiden aunt had called attention to some of that young man's misdemeanors, thereby causing him to be punished. Tommy pondered a while, then asked: ''Papa, will little sister Gladys be an aunt to my children when I am a man?'' ''Yes Tommy,'' answered his father, much interested. ''Why do you ask?'' ''Cause she might as well get married and have a home of her own, for I don't intend to 'low any aunts to stay around my house, making trouble for my children.''

Queen Alexandria attended a Mansion House fete in London. One of the diminutive flower maidens was both pretty and plump, and when her majesty stopped for an instant to smile down upon her, what did she do but put up her wee mouth for a kiss, which she received. ''Molly!'' gasped her astounded mother, after the distinguished visitor had passed on, ''how could you?'' Molly gave good reason. ''I fought,'' said she, ''it ud be interestin' to tell my grandchillern.''

A HUNDRED YEARS FROM NOW.

There's a picture in the window
Of a little shop I know,
With boys and girls dressed as they were
A hundred years ago.
And since I saw it, I have thought,
And keep on thinking how
The children, maybe, will be dressed
A hundred years from now.

Will girls wear caps or farthingales,
Or hoops in grand array?
Will they wear bows like butterflies,
Just as they do to-day?
Will boys wear jackets short, or tie
Their hair in queues? Just how They'll really look, I'd like to know—
A hundred years from now.

What do you think the girls and boys
Will eat in those far days?
Will they be fed on breakfast foods
In many sorts of ways?
Will all the good and tasty things
Be worse for them than rice?
Will ice-cream soda make them sick,
And everything that's nice?

Will children's books have pictures then,
Or just all reading be?
Perhaps they'll be hand-painted and
Most beautiful to see.
But when I think of those I have,
I truly don't see how
They can be any prettier
A hundred years from now.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

The great ten cent shower which the Advance Society is holding for our missionary in China, was set for August 12. When you read these words it will be more than a week later than the 12th, and you might think it time to learn all about it. But, you see, I am writing this on the 10th, so I can't tell you just how the shower has turned out. It began to sprinkle several weeks ago, and it has keep up pretty well, enough to moisten the earth, and start the corn to growing. I am hoping in the next few days it will come on so hard that there won't be any danger of the sun drying up the furrows. So even after you read this page, if you should contribute some drops right away, I'd catch them in the water-barrel, in time to measure them with the drops that have already come in. Even if you should send something, say two or three weeks, or a month, after August 12, and state that it was for the shower, it would be counted. You know it's a dreadful thing, when the ground is nicely soaked, for a big blazing sun to come out, and bake the earth, and burn the tender leaves. So it might be well to let the shower die out gently and gradually. I assure you we haven't had enough yet to drown anybody! As you read the following letters, I'd like for you to notice the different towns represented, showing that this shower is not a local affair, but a general rain.

From Los Angeles comes a letter asking the address of our missionary, Drusie. I would reproduce the letter but the writer says, "Please do not mention this in the Av. S. page," so what can I do? In regard to Drusie's address, I quote from a letter just received from her:

Drusie Malott, Pi Yang Hsien, Honan, China: "I wish you could see my girls! Three of them come mornings and afternoons to memorize Scripture verses and songs, and sing with me. About a dozen come every day, while others haven't settled down to work. One of the three mentioned often arrives at our breakfast hour. Twice she came marching to my door like a little soldier, leading five other girls, saying, in a quick, eager, commanding voice, 'We've come. I've brought them; they want to learn the characters; now, come teach us!' One of our women has memorized seven tracts, which contain the Lord's Prayer, etc. Another has memorized four songs and four tracts. This means much, for they could not read before they began memorizing; they are slowly learning. But their superstition is surprising. Yesterday we were urged to come to the fair and talk, and we would be worshiped like their gods and ancestors. We are still sometimes thought to be gods. One woman asked Mrs. Nowack's nurse if we did not take our daily walk to find silver—saying that we surely had power to divine where silver is hidden. When walking among the graves we found many pieces of common brown paper, cut to represent Chinese cash. This is called 'paper money,' and is burnt at the graves, so the dead will have some money to spend in the next world. I immensely enjoyed the account of your Texas trip. I do my reading just after supper, while I hold baby Helen Grace, and Mrs. Nowack puts her other two girls to bed, and the nurse eats her supper. Just address me at Pi Yang Hsien, Honan, China. We are the only 'foreigners' within forty miles, so there is no danger of anybody else getting our letters. I want our friends to pray our Father to keep us safe from smallpox. Yesterday we heard three women discussing the smallpox cases in their own homes, and they were telling each other that the 'flowers' had broken out beautifully; and there they sat in meeting, where we and the little girls were! The people have so little sense of hygiene that it is impossible to keep them isolated. If we tried to avoid contagious diseases, we would have to lock ourselves in our rooms, thus putting an end to our gospel work. Therefore we must trust our Great Physician."

Mrs. J. H. Byram, Pasadena, Cal.: "The shower idea was good,—if we didn't think of it first, ourselves! No rain is falling in Southern California, but I trust our little missionary will be well shower-ered. I send a starter of $1. Love to Felix."

Speaking of Felix—I've received a postal card written me from Bentonville, while I was visiting in Missouri. It is dated July 6, so you see for yourself that it has been a long time going up there to hunt me, and coming back to find me. It's from a neighbor, J. S. Guthrie, who had evidently strolled past our deserted home to see if all was well: "Felix is holding the fort, but he looks sad. I do not think he enjoyed the Fourth as thirty of us did on Sugar Creek, where we had black coffee, ice-cream, a few fish bones and creek water." Reader, does your heart stir at the thought of Felix sitting there looking sad? Or have you got a heart? Before leaving Bentonville, I will add that my very young friend, Miss Ruby Hicks, has handed me a wet nickel to help on the Dursie shower.

Mrs. E. A. James, Long Beach, Cal., "We don't even have sprinkles in this part of California in August, so I send a few drops to increase the Arkansas shower for Drusie. The Av. S. has always been interesting reading to me, from the very first. I have read them all. We are having warm weather at Long Beach, and people till you can't rest! Our church convention convened August 5."

Eustis, Fla.: "Inclosed find 50 cents for Drusie's 10-cent shower, from James R. Kimball, Shirley, and Mrs. J. R. Miller, and Miss Sue W. Snow. We trust many more may send from every state in the Union."

An Old Subscriber, Jacksonville, Fla.: "O, the little drops of water, the little grains of sand,—such little mites to send to faraway Drusie in China! But may the little streams meet to make a river strong enough to bear Drusie's barque, until she no longer needs earthly help. I enclose 10 cents. Heaven bless Drusie and the Av. S."

Mrs. F. E. D., Cedarpoint, Kan.: "I enclose a dime for myself, four for my children, one for my mother, and truly hope the shower may prove a genuine old-fashioned Baptist sizzle-sozzle."

Walnut, Kan.: "One litttle drop, gathered by the wayside."

Mrs. Emma Hall, El Dorado, Kan.: "Ten cents for the shower. God blesses the cups of cold water given in his name; I am sure he will, this effort. May the drops be many."

Anna Durgins, Furley, Kan.: "I send my dime to Drusie's shower. I am a little girl, 11 years old, and love to read the Av. S. very much."

Spivey, Kan.: "This 50 cents is for Drusie. Let us pray the 10-cent shower will not cease till she has all she needs for the cause, that is more than life to her. If you will give me the number of rubbers to send, I will mail them to her. I will also help clothe her. Please do not publish my name."

A. B. C., Vale, Oregon: "Two dimes for the 10-cent shower. I am very much interested in missionary Drusie, and Charlie, too—what has become of him? How I hope the dimes will pour in till Drusie will find herself clothed not only this year, but also for the coming year." (As I said before, I have very interesting news about Charlie; but I can't get to that till we dispose of this shower; then I will tell you all about his vacation.)

Lina V. Swann, Plattsburg, Mo.: "I read some letters from little children in the Advance Society, so thought I would send a dime for Drusie's shower. I think Felix wasn't so glad to see you come back home, if he did jump the wire fence, as Cap was to see me, when he shook hands with me. Your little friend." (You can't tell by their acts. A dog and a cat show their joy in a different way, just like Southern and Northern people.)

Danville, Ill.: "I hope Charlie may grow up to be a good and useful man, and that Drusie will have a good shower of 10-cent pieces. Three sisters contribute their mites,—Mrs. A. R. Wayman, Chicago; Mrs. M. J. Hoskineon, Moundsville, W. Va., and Mrs. V. L. Gallagher, Danville, Ill."

From Mulkeytown, Ill., comes the first quarterly report of Ada Rogers, and we are delighted to place her name upon the Av. S. Honor List.

Arenza, Ill.: "Three dimes for the ten-cent shower."

Mrs. Harriett M. Searcy, Springfield, Illinois: "My daughter and I send 10 cents each. May Drusie not want while working in the Lord's vineyard. I will give $1 to help support her next year. I wish I could give more. My daughter received a letter from Drusie some time ago." (Isn't your daughter our old friend, Myrtle?)

Mrs. Jas. O. Dennis, Chambersburg, Ill.: "To-day (August 3) is my son's birthday. I send a dime for each of his three years, to be added to Drusie's shower."

Jacksonville, Ill.: "One dollar for Drusie; may there be a downpour such as the Av. S. has never yet seen."

Mrs. Geo. Morris, Afton, Okla.: "Ten cents for the shower. I have great hopes that there will be a regular cloudburst of dimes."

Alice Kindred, Ebid, Okla.: "We are glad there is a shower for Drusie; so will send a dime for my sister Helene, my brother Harold and myself. We hope the Av. S. can support Drusie as our missionary."

Clara E. Harrison, Oklahoma City: "Though unbeknown to you, I have been a silent admirer for many years, beginning in my dear old Kentucky home when you contributed to the "Courier-Journal," and I have since kept trace of you through THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I have often wondered, as your name is Breckenridge, if you are related to the family of that name, so well known through that grand old state. I read all you have to say, especially about Drusie and Charlie and Felix. I am an ardent admirer of cats, especially the wellbred ones. Tell Felix howd'y? I'm sure he was in deep grief all the time you were in Missouri. I send 10 cents toward Drusie's shower. May God bless the good work." (My mother was a Kentucky Breckenridge; hence my name. But I am not the only celebrated Breckenridge in Arkansas. Clifton R. Breckenridge, son of John C., lives in the state, and called on us only yesterday. We feel that we have done our part for Kentucky, and now ought to ornament some other commonwealth. So much for myself. But I fear Felix is not so wellbred as he might have been. Occasionally an undeniable strain from some old common yellow-cat ancestor crops out in him. For instance, I told you that, since his hammmock wore out, he has taken to lying on the cistern. But that isn't cool enough for him, and now he insists on making his bed atop of the refrigerator. Now, we do not think that a fit place for Felix. It may cool him, but it makes the ice melt faster; and besides, it seems too close to the milk and meat and things. Every night we put paper on top of the refregerator, and on that we stack tin cans, and pokers; but in the morning Felix's telltale hair—I might say, his yellow-tail-hair—shows that he has been crouching among the sharp edges and hard iron. Felix is very persistent.)

Mrs. Bruce Hunt, Broken Arrow, Okla.: "Two dollars from a family of five. If you could only pass the hat round you would get lots of dimes you do not get, writing a few words." (But this is far pleasanter.)

Mrs. A. W. Campbell, Talala, Okla.: "I want to have a share in the shower, so send a small donation. I trust many dollars and dimes may be sent in." (We had to run under a tree when that donation fell, for it was $2.50).

I could have filled this page with letters from Missouri, but I have saved them for next time. Twenty-three states have now contributed to Drusie's shower. Can't we make it twenty-five? Wherever you live if you care to be a part of the shower, you will have time before our final report is published.

September Offering for Church Extension

Begins Sunday, September 6th. Continuing Every Sunday in September.

Homeless churches are stars of the sixth magnitude (scarcely seen with the naked eye) or of the thirteenth magnitude (scarcely seen with the telescope) and their light goes out forever.

We began Church Extension in 1888 with $10,662. The Board asked for $250,000 by 1900 and $500,000 by 1905. We passed our marks in both cases. Shall the doubtful mark remain after the Centennial? Our brethren must answer.

CHURCHES SHOULD

Try to take the Offering on the day appointed, if that day is favorable, and send increased offerings.

However, all Sundays in September are for Church Extension Offerings, so do not sacrifice the Offering for the day.

congregations contributed to Church Extension last year. The Board realizes that September is an unfortunate month for Offerings in many churches, but more of our churches should and do their best. City congregations should wait until their people have returned from vacations. This is the Lord's work and every church wearing His name should be in line.

GOOD POINTS FOR YOU TO CONSIDER WHEN GIVING TO CHURCH EXTENSION

CENTENNIAL WATCHWORD—"We must raise $150.000 this year and $200,000 next year to reach the million."

1. Money repeats itself in this Fund every five years.
2. Churches are helped that first help themselves.
3. The work pays for itself by the four per cent interest which is charged.
4. This is a permanent Fund to loan to churches that can not borrow elsewhere or except at exorbitant rates of interest.
5. The church aided first helps itself. When our loan is sent it pays the last dollar of indebtedness.
6. Every dollar loaned calls out three others. The church aided raises three dollars for every one loaned.
7. The Board has handled all the money contributed to the Fund plus over $780,000, which has been paid back on loans, making a total of more than $1,440,000, which has been loaned to 1,178 mission churches scattered through 44 States and Territories and only $563 has been lost, where congregations voluntarily deeded their property to the Board for debts against them.

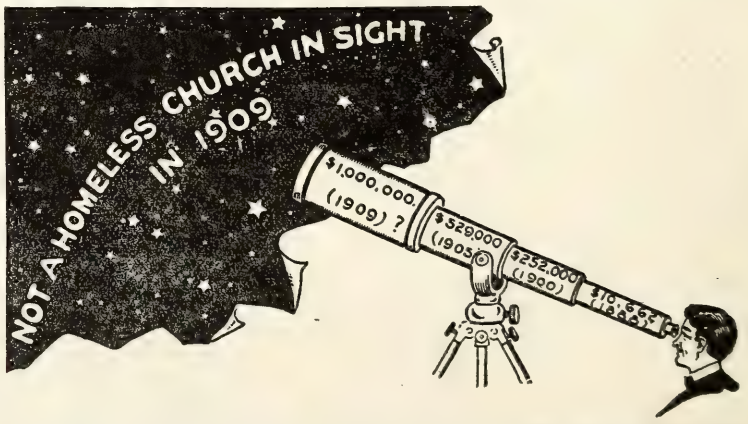
EXPLANATION OF NAMED FUNDS

We now have 29 Named Funds. We want 50 by 1909. A Named Fund in our Church Extension work is $5,000 or as much more as the donor desires to make it, and is named after the donor or any one he may designate. Individuals give $500 annually to create them and churches $300 annually. A separate account is kept of each Named Fund and a separate annual report made to the donor. All loans are made from this Fund to help build churches and are paid back into the Fund in five equal annual installments. The interest at four per cent is kept in the Fund and compounds itself semi-annually. As soon as enough money is accumulated from new gifts, interest, and returns from loans, another loan is made. The money is constantly repeating its work by coming back and going out again in loans to help weak and struggling churches complete their first church building. Money more than doubles its work every five years. For example, $2,500 will do the work of $6,221 in five years, building 12 churches with loans of $500 each.

Thus, the F. M. Drake Loan Fund has built 66 churches since February, 1889, and has done the work of over $26,000 and earned $3,672 of interest, though Brother Drake gave only $1,200 in 1889 and $380 each year until he paid in $5,000 within 10 years.

READ THIS FOR CONSCIENCE' SAKE.

SINCE our April meeting your Board of Church Extension has been compelled, because of lack of money, to refuse aid to all applicants except in a few cases where small loans were granted out of our Named Funds. We have had seventy-eight applications for help since April, and every appealing congregation came with strong pleadings showing the best of reasons why we should help them to build. Each congregation was in a growing town or city with great promise of a strong church if only an adequate building could be erected. None of these can be aided until we hear from our Annual Offering in September. Our Offering must bring over Eighty Thousand Dollars if these worthy mission churches are to be aided.



The Church that is Properly Housed becomes a Fixed Star of the First Magnitude—a Shining Light within its Own Community, to its Own Country and Throughout the Whole World.

THE ANNUITY PLAN. WHAT IT IS! HOW IT WORKS!

IN OUR CHURCH EXTENSION FUND, AT KANSAS CITY, MO.

What It Is—Through our Annuity Plan you can administer upon your own estate by putting your money into our Church Extension Fund. This is far better than making a bequest, because the Board will pay you 6 per cent, in semi-annual payments, if you are fifty years old, or more, and the interest will be paid to your wife if she survives you. Between the ages of forty and forty-nine the rate is 5 per cent, and 4 per cent, between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-nine.

ITS GREAT ADVANTAGES TO YOU:

1. You can see your money work while you live.
2. You have no trouble or losses in making reinvestments.
3. You have no taxes or attorneys' fees to pay and your income is regular.
4. The Society is perpetual and is incorporated. Its funds are perpetual and are loaned only on first mortgages where titles are absolutely good.
5. Your money is safe because the Annuity Bond which the Board issues you is as good as a Government Bond because it is backed up by all of the assets of the Fund, which now amount to $650,000 and which will constantly increase.
6. We receive remittances of $100, or as many hundreds or thousands as you can send, and your money will be received at any time and the Bond will be dated so that your interest begins at once.

How Your Money Works—The Board does not invest your money in some secular enterprise and WAIT FOR YOU TO DIE before using it in the work of Church Extension. All of our Annuity money is loaned at 6 per cent to aid promising congregations to build. The money is returned by the churches using it in five equal, annual installments, and as fast as it returns it goes out again and again to build churches. Your money is thus in a PERPETUAL WHIRL OF DOING GOOD, because we have more demands for Annuity money than we can answer. Our mission churches in the new Southwest are glad to get Annuity money from the Board of Church Extension and pay 6 per cent, which is only 2 per cent more than is charged for the regular funds. They then have their loans in the hands of their friends.

Our Annuity Fund has received 224 gifts and $215,000, and 125 church buildings have been erected by Annuity Funds alone.

We can use $100,000 this year. Send remittances at once and give your full legal name and your age. Remit to

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, AUGUST 27. 1908.

TELL ME that God is the almighty King, and I look for His power in the war of elements. Tell me that His voice is that of Sinai, and it takes the grandest music of the hills to echo it. But tell me that God in heaven is my Father—that I am His child, and that He loves me dearly—and from that moment I look with other eyes on the sunshine and the streamlet and the flower. It is not in terrible or startling things that love delights to body itself forth. Never is love richer in revelation than when it consecrates all that is quiet and lowly. And it is because God was love to Jesus Christ, that when He went abroad into the world of nature, He saw God and His kingdom in the birds, and in the thousand lilies of the field. The kind of God you really believe in determines mightily your thought of heaven. And the kind of God you believe in determines mightily your thought of earth. And this is the gladness of the knowledge of God that has been given us by Christ our Savior, that it sets every common bush afire with Him, and finds Him in every lily of the field.—Rev. G. H. Morrison, in "The Wings of the Morning."

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long,
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Death of Sankey.

Some people have doubtless thought that Ira D. Sankey was dead because his name has not appeared in the newspapers since he was stricken with trouble with his eyes some years ago. But the great evangelistic singer passed away at his home in Brooklyn, N. Y., on August 3. It may be noted that both he and Mr. Farwell, among the most intimate friends of Mr. Moody, died within the same week. Mr. Sankey's work can not be characterized in the brief space we have at our disposal, and we must refer our readers to a further account of him which we hope to publish. He was the most famous evangelistic singer and composer of modern times. More than 80,000,000 copies of his song books have been sold and the demand for them is still great. In every part of the world and in almost every tongue these gospel songs have been sung. Mr. Sankey had no thought of entering upon the kind of work he ultimately pursued, until he met Mr. Moody. Born at Edinburg in 1840, he united, when fifteen years of age, with the Methodist Episcopal Church and became the choir leader at New Castle, Pa., engaging also in other parts of the church's work. It was at the Y. M. C. A. International Convention, at Indianapolis, in 1870 that he met Dwight L. Moody. At one of the meetings some one was asked to start a tune, and Mr. Sankey at once responded. When the meeting was dismissed, he and Mr. Moody met and the latter at once asked him some questions about himself. On being told by Mr. Sankey that he was in the Government employ, Mr. Moody said, "You will have to give that up." Mr. Sankey, astonished, asked, "Why?" "Come to Chicago and help me in my work," replied Moody. They continued together until Mr. Moody died in 1899. They made two tours of Great Britain, and many through the United States. After the death of Mr. Moody Mr. Sankey continued his evangelistic work until 1902, when his health began to fail.

Farwell—"Inventor of Moody."

A Christian merchant prince has passed to the beyond. John V. Farwell, last of the famous group of four early great merchants of Chicago—Marshall Field, Levi Leiter and Potter Palmer being the others—died last week at the age of 83. With a Puritan ancestry tracing its lineage back to 1280, removal at 13 years of age from his birth state, New York, to an Illinois farm, and going to Chicago when it was a town of 5,000, at the age of 20, he entered upon his career by showing such painstaking honesty in his work of reporting the city council's proceedings at $12 per month that he lost the position but continued to report the meetings much to the chagrin of those who had caused his dismissal. Accepting a position as bookkeeper and salesman at $8 a month with a dry goods firm, he made two changes, with salary increasing to $250 and $600, and a partnership within five years of his entering Chicago. Field and Leiter were at one time members of the firm. Mr. Farwell was a Christian and ready to aid every good cause by his person and his money. He was especially interested in mission and Y. M. C. A. work. His staunch friendship for the evangelist led some one to call him "the inventor of Dwight L. Moody." For ten years he was superintendent of the Illinois State Mission, designed to reach saloon boys, but growing into proportions that embraced all classes of outcast children. Mr. Farwell, too, was long in the habit of holding services for the prisoners at the bridewell. As an example of his consistency, an incident may be related. Soon after the fire of 1871 swept away the business district there was talk among some of the merchants of securing terms with their creditors by which they might clear themselves of debt on payment of only part of what they owed. Some even went so far as to advocate entire repudiation of their debts. A meeting of merchants was held, at which some suggested at least partial repudiation. This talk aroused the indignation of Farwell, who himself was one of the heaviest losers. Rising, Mr. Farwell made a vigorous speech, in which he prophesied that in a few years Chicago not only would be rebuilt but would be greater than ever before. He advocated, as the only policy which honest men could contemplate or wise men indorse, a determination on the part of every merchant to pay every cent he owed. Only in this way, he said, could Chicago deserve to hold in the future a reputation for integrity in business. Only one man, a saloonkeeper, argued against the sentiments set forth in this speech, and he was hissed and hooted out of the hall. The rest stood with Mr. Farwell.

To Save Daylight.

A very unusual bill is under consideration in Great Britain and Ireland. Just what its practical advantages would be to the Britisher, should it be passed by the House of Commons, are not very clear. The committee in charge of the matter, however, believes that six desirable results would follow: 1. Work and leisure would be moved an hour nearer to sunrise. 2. More daylight would be used for recreative purposes of all kinds. 3. Saloons would be less frequented. 4. There would be more time for training the territorial forces. 5. The physique, general health and welfare of all classes of the community would be benefited. 6. There would be a great reduction of expenditure for industrial, commercial and domestic artificial light. All of these are desirable results to be obtained. More and more the tendency in the cities has been, both in England and America, to become an artificial instead of a natural people. Farmers are having their telephones and rural mail deliveries, but they have not yet taken to late breakfasts and plowing by the light of the electric arc. What would happen under a changing of light conditions we will not venture to prophesy. But we are inclined to believe that unless the British bill be a law of compulsion, which we understand it is not, it will not accomplish a great change. The hunter or fisherman gets up early because he knows the habits of the game he seeks. The student may feel that his brain is fresher and he can do better work in the early morning hours. But the business man knows that commodities are dealt in about certain hours, and that habits fixed are not easily changed except by gradual steps or strict compulsion. No doubt the idea of the change is in the right direction, but whether it will work out is the question. The old time is to remain for all scientific purposes. If the Englishman would simply begin his day's work an hour earlier and quit an hour earlier, perhaps all that is desirable would be accomplished without a bill to turn forward the hands of the clock at 2 a. m. on the third Sunday in April and then turn them back one hour at 2 o'clock in the morning of the third Sunday of September.

Decrease. Whisky and Beer

Do Mr. Brewer and Mr. Distiller want another argument for prohibition? They are always asserting that prohibition does not prohibit. Perhaps it does not to the whole extent desired by its supporters. But here are some statistics that tell their own tale, and it is not of the kind that pleases the men who have been declaring that the campaign of the "fanatics" is void. During the first three months of 1908 there has been a decrease in the internal revenue receipts of the government greater than has occurred at any other time during the last fifty years. In January the decrease on whisky was $479,533.65; and on beer, $222,580.71. In February the whisky decrease was $1,134,867.91, and on beer $187,289.86. March shows this decrease: Whisky, $2,543,210.25; and beer, $492,262.50—which makes a total decrease of revenue of $4,859,744.88, on the production of these two items for the quarter.

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and his henchman, Mr. Jesse Collings, created quite a sensation in the breasts of the British workingmen with the talk of "three acres and a cow" for every Britisher. Since then we have had the book, "Three Acres and Liberty." Now, President Roosevelt asks, in behalf of the farmer, for 160 acres and comfort, variety and happiness. If this can be assured we shall all take to the farm, and not as hustling commercial and mechanical geniuses, but as a nation of farmers will posterity know us. But, seriously, a quarter section of land is a good thing to possess.

Homeless Churches.

Few things make a stronger appeal to our hearts than a homeless child. The benevolent enterprise which makes its appeal for homeless children meets with a ready response. But is there not something pathetic, also, about a homeless church? Here is a group of people who love the Lord, and feel religious cravings, who have banded themselves together for the purpose of worship and the training of their children in a knowledge of the Bible, and of building up the religious life of the community; but they have no place in which to meet. Halls and schoolhouses are ill-adapted for such a purpose, even if they are accessible. They are unable, of themselves, to erect a suitable house of worship. Their future welfare, and that of their children, and, perhaps, of the community, depends upon their having a fixed home in which they can meet and carry on the Lord's work. That is a pathetic sight, even in a single instance; but when you look through the telescope of our statistics, and see a thousand such in sight [see picture on page advertisement elsewhere] there is an irresistible appeal to every Christian heart and Christian church, that realizes its obligation to God, and to "those of like precious faith" with themselves.

Church Extension is our organized and systematic, and wisely-conducted method, of supplying these homeless churches with houses of worship. It has made a splendid record already, and has well earned the confidence of the entire brotherhood. There is a very large demand being made upon it just now for help, and the ability of the board to respond to these appeals is, of course, dependent upon the response which the churches make in their September offering to the appeal of the Board. The fact that only 1,416 congregations contributed to Church Extension last year shows that the great majority of our churches have not awakened to the opportunity which is offered them in Church Extension for helping their weaker brethren throughout the whole country. It shows how many churches have failed to catch the spirit of that scripture which says: "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." It may be said, of course, that a large number of these non-contributing churches are themselves poor, and many of them not only homeless, but preacherless. This is a good reason why they can not give largely to this cause, but it is not a good reason why they should give nothing. Homeless churches, especially, ought to feel the need of swelling this fund, and to realize that they help themselves by helping others.

A million dollars by the time of our Centennial is a noble aim, and one that we should seek to make good. As we are told in the notice elsewhere, the Board asked for $250,000 by 1900, and passed the mark; it asked for $500,000 by 1905, and passed the mark; it now calls for a million dollars by 1909, and it remains to be seen whether we make good in that high aim. There is no question of our ability to do so; it is only a question of how many of our churches can be enlisted in the offering, and how liberally the churches so enlisted may contribute to this fund. It would make us all feel that the Centennial had been worth all it has cost us if that one aim itself could be realized, and it is only one of many.

We call special attention to what is said in the page elsewhere devoted to the "September Offering for Church Extension" about the Annuity plan. This plan makes a strong appeal, and offers a splendid opportunity to those who have means which they wish to devote to the work of the Lord, but the interest on which they require during their lifetime. Read and study what is said on this subject.

Much will depend upon the attitude which our ministers assume toward this offering. If they enter into it enthusiastically, selecting the Lord's day in September best suited in each local case for the offering, and point out what has been done and what needs to be done for this fund, we shall have such a response as will not only gratify the Board of Church Extension, but carry a thrill of joy to homeless churches that are waiting to hear the result of the offering, in order that they may know whether their own appeal is to receive favorable response. We plead, therefore, for hearty co-operaon the part of ministers, officers, and churches in behalf of this approaching offering for Church Extension. If we believe we have a cause worthy of being permanently planted in every community, let us show our faith by our works.

The Ethical Function of the Cross.

It is probable that we have not all seen the whole meaning of the cross, as it rose to view in the mind of Paul when he exclaimed: "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." All believers, of course, have seen in it the means by which we receive the forgiveness of our sins; but it is perfectly obvious that many who rejoice in the forgiveness of their past sins, through the cross of Christ, fail to see its deeper meaning as a continuous, purifying power in bringing our lives into perfect harmony with the will of God. The very fact that the cross was a necessity of the divine government, in enabling God to be just while he justifies the sinner who believes in Jesus, is a sublime emphasis of the holiness of God, and shows that even infinite love could not reach and compass human salvation without working in harmony with justice and holiness. What has been "the governmental theory of the atonement" had a truth at its heart, however much it may have been carried to excess. God is the moral Governor of the universe, and the cross has an essential place in that government.

But the point we are concerned with now is practical, rather than theoretical. It is this: The cross of Christ stands related vitally to growing moral ideals, to an increasingly high standard of ethics in our individual lives and in social and political life. The cross stands for righteousness. Any compromise with sin; any surrender to lower and baser motives; any deliberate choosing of material gain at the expense of loyalty to our highest ideals of truth and right; any yielding to appetite, or passion, against the protest of one's better nature, is utterly inconsistent with the meaning of the cross of Christ. It is doing despite to the cross. This is the fact that we fear is too often ignored by professing Christians. The cross of Christ has an ethical function, and is intended to make sin abhorrent, and any departure from what we know to be right, as tending to moral suicide. It is not a device for making it easy for men to sin, and to live on the lower plane, and find ready forgiveness, as some seem to think. This mistake is responsible for a great deal of the reproach that has come upon Christianity. It is no uncommon thing to find men that are very religious, who cheat their neighbors, take advantage of men's hard circumstances to fleece them, choose the course that is popular instead of that which is right, misrepresent their brethren, and be utterly indifferent to civic righteousness; when in politics, they conform to the political maxims and policies used by men of the world, and often become as great demagogues and machine partisans as the most godless of men. In the face of such facts, is it any wonder that scoffers and skeptics claim that Christianity is an idle profession?

Of course, these scoffers and skeptics overlook the evidence furnished in the lives of an innumerable company of men and women, whose character and conduct have been transformed by the gospel of Christ, with the cross as its heart and core. How shall the lives of these persons be accounted for if we rule out Christianity as a divine, transforming power in the world? It is the cross of Christ that has produced these results, and is steadily lifting up higher ideals in our individual, domestic, social, industrial and political life. This work would be greatly hastened, however, if professing Christians would recognize what is involved in their faith,—that the cross has for its function the ethicizing, as well as the Christianizing, of men's lives; that the highest possible ethics is involved in Christianity; that the cross of Christ condemns, unsparingly, every false way and every species of hypocrisy, or false pretense; every shady transaction; every deliberate choosing of the lower instead of the higher good.

Paul gloried in the cross because by it he was crucified to the world,—that is, to worldly maxims and principles of conduct, and the world was crucified to him. Unless this crucifixion is effected in our lives, vain is all our profession of Christianity. The cross of Christ has become to no effect in us, unless by it we are committed to the highest, the truest, and the holiest things of life. Child-labor, the oppression of the poor and the weak, the unjust distribution of the results of labor, political abuses, the oppression of monopolies—all these abuses will continue until Christians recognize the profound ethical meaning of the cross of Christ.

We are accustomed to associate lax morality with a low type of intelligence, and we smile at the crudeness of the colored brother's idea of religion, who thanked God that although he had broken every one of the Ten Commandments, he had never lost his religion! The case would not be so serious if this divorcement of religion and morality were confined to the lower types of civilization. As a matter of fact, however, we know that men of high social and financial standing often carry on their business, their politics, and even their religion, without a strict recognition of the principles of the decalogue. Some of the great financiers of to-day, who are supposed to be strictly orthodox in their faith and regular in their observance of the outward forms of Christianity, are notably lax in doing unto others as they would have others do unto them, which is the summing up of the law and the prophets. Sadly enough, it is no uncommon thing for men of good ecclesiastical standing in their own particular Zion to grossly misrepresent the position and teaching of another religious body. The religion of these financiers and of these ecclesiastics needs the element of strict morality—the ethicizing process, which the cross of Christ, rightly apprehended, is designed to give. The trouble is, we have allowed the cross to be obscured by our traditions and our ecclesiasticisms, and ceased to judge our inward motives, as well as our outward acts and utterances, by the cross—the highest possible expression of God's hatred of sin in all its devious and deceitful forms. We plead for a new emphasis of the cross of Christ, and the higher ethical standard which that central fact of the gospel inculcates and enforces, when rightly understood.

We are receiving many compliments from many states for our Missouri number, our Educational number and our recent Campbell-Barclay number, etc. We are doing our best to make the paper profitable to our readers and to the great Cause it is set to defend. All we ask in return is reasonable reciprocity on the part of our readers.

Speaking of reciprocity, every great publishing house, as well as every other great co-operative enterprise, depends very largely on the goodwill of its patrons, and their response to its efforts to serve the public good. Without this the stock of every company would decline in value, and the ability of the company to accomplish the end it has in view would be largely curtailed.

Notes and Comments

In another place we reproduce the essential part of an editorial by Professor Willett, in the "Christian Century," explaining the nature of his recent lectures at the university, concerning which the newspapers have had so much to say. It is due to Professor Willett, having offered some criticism in our columns on his lectures as reported, that we give our readers his own explanation. There is no heresy of opinion which we believe God condemns so severely as he does the disposition to injure a brother's standing and reputation by misrepresenting him. "The Christian-Evangelist" has no desire to do that. We are bound to say that while the editorial quoted elsewhere contains statements that are denied by many scholarly defenders of the Bible concerning the use of myth, tradition and fiction, to convey moral lessons, it does remove the most serious objections which we have found to the lectures as reported. Scholars may differ in opinion concerning the existence of these elements, and hold alike to the authority, inspiration and general historicity of the Biblical records. But a denial of the supernatural element in the Bible, or the possibility of miracle, or any intimation that we must wait on the explanations of science before we accept the credibility of miracles, belong to quite another category. They directly antagonize the personality and history of Christ, and the great facts which make up his gospel. As long as critics leave us Jesus Christ and his gospel, and the supernaturally-guided history of Israel, which leads up to Christ, we have a firm standing ground for faith and religion. Any view that antagonizes these great realities is to be resisted as the unbelief which would destroy Christianity and all the sacred hopes of men.

The foregoing statement is in harmony with the motto which stands at the head of our paper: "In Faith Unity; in Opinions and Methods Liberty; in All Things Charity." In his "Positive Preaching and the Modern Mind," Dr. Forsyth says: "The more sure we are in our positive gospel, the less we are tempted to try to control and manipulate philosophy so as to take the danger out of it. But it is by no philosophy or theosophy that we stand or fall. A man speculates with a free judgment if he is not speculating with the capital which means his livelihood. And so we have a new liberty for thought in the primacy of the moral, and the certainty of our moral redemption in experience." The same writer again says: "The more we are secure in our practical experience of the gospel, the more we are free to listen to all representations from philosophy or science in shaping to a doctrine our capacious life with Christ in God." The real strength of our position as a religious movement is the distinction we have drawn, clearly and sharply, between the things of faith, and the things of opinion, in the former of which there is to be unity, and in the latter of which there is to be liberty. On this basis, if any, Christian union is to be realized. On this ground Christianity is able to defend itself against all skepticism, and all attacks from any source whatsoever. But we must stand for the unity and the inviolability of the faith, as well as for liberty of opinion. We can not view with indifference any view of the Bible, or any teaching, that tends to undermine or invalidate, the glorious gospel of the grace of God, nor the authority of that sacred revelation which enshrines that gospel as its heart and center, and presents to us the majestic personality of Christ.

The meaning of this is that we may leave the scholars and the critics to work out the intricate problems involved in textual and historical criticism, without the least tremor of fear that the outcome of their critical investigations will interfere with the certainty and blessedness of that gospel which it is our mission to preach to all the world. This work of criticism, though important, is really incidental, while the fundamental thing which the church of Jesus Christ is to do, is to preach and exemplify the unsearchable riches of the gospel, as it is in Christ Jesus our Lord. It is a vain thing for the average preacher to turn aside from his holy vocation to discuss these critical problems before his people. He has a divine message to deliver, and who is he if he do not deliver it in its integrity and power, and in all earnestness and godly sincerity!

The following note has been received:

I find in The Christian-Evangelist of May 28, something about "the New Testament condtions of church membership," but I don't find in the N. T. anything about conditions of church membership. I find there, the Lord added to them those that were saved, believers were added to the Lord, and much people was added unto the Lord; but I don't find one word about the conditions of church membership, or, about receiving people into the church.

John Encell.

Richland, N. Y.

Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Except one be born of water and the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3:5). "The kingdom of God," in this passage, we take it, means the kingdom in its objective form, which we call the church, and it is generally understood by Bible commentators that "born of water" refers to baptism, which, in connection with the work of the Spirit, fitting one for baptism, admits the believer into the church or kingdom of God. In Acts 2:41 it is said, "They then that received his word were baptized, and there were added unto them in that day about three thousand souls." And again, at the close of the same chapter, "And the Lord added to them day by day those that were saved," or, as the margin reads, "were being saved." Whenever believers are "added to the Lord," they are added to his body, the church. These are not two processes, but one. The church is called by Paul. "the body of Christ."

Current Religious Thought

Under the title of "Theology and the Sea Serpent," the "Christian Century" has an editorial which, we take it, is Prof. Willett's own explanation of the recent sensation in newspaper circles created by his lectures on the subject of miracles. After referring to the sore straits that the daily paper is put to at this season of the year for something sensational, the editorial says:

"Point is given to such reflections by the fact that the daily press of this city has been sending out considerable sensational material during the past few days regarding the utterances of Professor Willett on the subject 'Types of Old Testament Narrative.' These lectures were delivered on four successive days at the University in the list of open lectures for the summer quarter. They dealt with Old Testament myth, tradition, miracle and fiction. Their thesis was that in addition to the ordinary records and messages of the Old Testament, comprising almost the entire body of its teach- and the Old Testament is in the narratives which differ in character from this central body of the record. These are the least important portions of the Hebrew Scriptures, yet they have attracted large attention and are the subject of constant comment when the value and purpose of the Old Testament are called in question. There are people who seem to imagine that because the Bible makes use of familiar Semitic myths for purposes of illustration, or relates marvels of some of its heroes such as our generation finds it difficult to credit, or uses fable and parable to enforce its teaching, therefore it is discredited as a book of religious messages.

"The use of myth in the Old Testament is easily verified. The conflict of Marduk with Tiamat, the dragon of chaos and darkness, is a Babylonian myth which is often referred to in the older Scriptures. References to Leviathan, Rahab, the dragon beneath the sea and the like are well known to Bible students. But the most apparent relationship between the Babylonian myth and the Old Testament is in the narrative of creation, which are seen to resemble very closely the accounts of the older civilization, though with the elimination of the polytheism which is so marked in the original form. It would be strange if these world-stories of the Semitic race found no echo in the Old Testament. Yet their use is but incidental. They are but vehicles for the truths which the prophets were concerned to teach.

"The miracles of the Old Testament differ both in character and significance from those of the New. The latter are authenticated by the character of Jesus, while the earlier narratives have no such credentials, and must be considered apart from such guarantees. They fall, when so considered, into several classes. There are those which manifestly rest upon fact, as the events connected with the exodus, the healing of the sick and the predictive element in prophecy. Some are based upon figures of speech, as in the Song of Deborah, or are quotations from poetical descriptions of natural events, like the statement of the Book of Jasher regarding Joshua's prayer for a lengthened day. Others were probably legendary, such as the story of the man brought to life by touching the bones of Elisha, or the deliverance of Jonah by the great fish. Still others are not only improbable, but unethical, such as the destruction of the children of Bethel by the bears, following the curse of Elisha, and the destruction of the bands of soldiers sent to arrest Elijah. Yet the entire miracle material of the Old Testament, which is mostly grouped about the characters of Moses and Elijah, is but small and unimportant beside the impressive truths which even these prophets affirmed, to say nothing of the great prophetic workers who used no miracle. Not all these narratives are useful for religious instruction to-day, but those which lack the value for which the teacher, the parent and the preacher are looking are few and unimportant beside those which minister to ethical and spiritual life.

"The Old Testament also contains examples of fiction used for instruction in morals or for national warnings and inspiration. The parables of Jesus are the immortal example of works of the imagination used for the highest purposes. In the Old Testament there are fables such as Jonathan's description of the trees going forth to choose a king, and the rebuke of Jehoash to Amaziah. There are parables, like those of Nathan to David and that of the wise woman of Tekoah. There are great national figures, such as those used by Ezekiel in the story of the eagle, the two profligate sisters and the valley of dry bones. And there are a few books which fall into the same class as works of the imagination, such as Job, Esther and Jonah, which use either known or unknown figures in the life of the nation to point the teachings which they seek to make emphatic. Yet here again the total material of this class is very small when compared with the mass of Old Testament narrative and preaching.

"Such were the arguments of the lectures. Their purpose was constantly announced as showing that while the Old Testament contains the types of narrative which any other primitive literature possesses, its use of material is always subordinated to its ethical and religious purposes. That the presence of these elements which were once mistakenly denied to it, on the supposition that it was all literal history, not only do not impair, but increase its value as a book of instruction wrought out by the Spirit of God working through holy men of that race chosen to be the prophet nation of the world. It was insisted that it would be strange if the Bible alone were inhibited from the use of those forms of narrative which have been found of the highest value in all literatures which tend to promote the higher life. It was insisted that miracles must not be regarded as an arbitrary fracturing of the laws of nature, which are simply God's ways of working, but the use of such laws at a higher level than our imperfect lives permit, and that even scientific experiments are proving that the belief in miracle is not to be set aside without consideration.

"The daily press of Chicago at once blossomed forth with the most alarming reports of what had been said. The Bible had been attacked. Miracle was denied. No man ever worked a miracle. The Bible was fragmentary, imperfect, inartistic, unreliable. A storm of protest had been raised by the lectures. Great excitement prevailed. All of which was in no manner even suggested by the facts. Reporters were given exact and careful statements of the matters presented in the lectures, only to have the reports repeated in the most extravagant form, with still worse scare heads supplied by office editors. When the attention of these gentlemen was called to the injustice and injury wrought by such alleged 'news' they frankly stated that the lectures as they were actually delivered would be worthless as 'news.' Nobody cared to read that a teacher had declared the Bible to be the world's greatest book, its contents inspired and its narratives in almost their total extent matters of fact, and the remainder equally valuable for the purposes employed. And so the ends of truth are sacrificed to the expediencies of daily journalism in the silly season when the only sensation that can arouse a listless community is a scare head on theology or a story about the discovery of a sea serpent."

[There were some statements contained in an alleged interview with Professor Willett which many of us regretted to see, but which are not referred to in the foregoing article. Let us hope that this reported interview will receive some consideration from Professor Willett. Meanwhile our comments (see Notes and Comments) are confined to matters in the foregoing editorial. —EDITOR.]

"We can no more escape from God than a man by his bootstraps—pardon the expression—could lift himself out of the universe. The only way to escape God is to flee into his arms."—Newell Dwight Hillis.

In the August "Forum" there is a striking poem, "The Monk in the Kitchen," by Anna Hempstead Branch, from which we make an extract:

"There is no small work unto God.
He requires of us greatness;
Of his least creature
A high angelic nature,
Stature superb and bright completeness.
He sets to us no humble duty.
Each act that he would have us do
Is haloed round with strangest beauty.
Terrific deeds and cosmic tasks
Of his plainest child he asks.
When I polish the brazen pan
I hear a creature laugh afar
In the gardens of a star,
And from his burning presence run
Flaming wheels of many a sun.
Whoever makes a thing more bright,
He is an angel of all light.
When I cleanse this earthen floor
My spirit leaps to see
Bright garments trailing over it.
Wonderful lustres cover it,
A cleanness made by me.
Purger of all men's thoughts and ways,
With labor do I sound Thy praise,
My work is done for Thee.
Whoever makes a thing more bright,
He is an angel of all light.
Therefore let me spread abroad
The beautiful cleanness of my God."

"Appleton's Magazine," in its August issue, has a vigorous editorial in which it discourses on "Religion—the Most Practical Thing in the World." Here is a paragraph that hits the mark squarely:

"The churches suffer from a terrible blight, the blight of Sunday religion. You can't be religious on Sunday and irreligious on Monday. You can't, any more than you can be a tall man on Tuesday and a short one on Wednesday. We talk of religion as if it were a separate department of life. We label it and bottle it and prescribe it for use on certain occasions. We particularly recommend it to old ladies children and invalids. Religion is either good for everybody at all times or for nobody at any time. We talk of religious and irreligious men, but every man has in him a spark of the divine which he can either kindle into a living flame or neglect until it is all but extinguished. Religion is a spur to those things without which life is not worth living. A democracy must have religion as a check on the one hand and a spur on the other."

Editor's Easy Chair.

Or, Pentwater Musings.

On the morning of August 20 this part of Michigan was visited by the first frost since the last spring gave way to summer. There is no mistaking the meaning of this harbinger of longer nights and cooler days. It is a premonition of the on-coming autumn. Its prophecy, too, is heard in the deepening monotone of the lake, and in the moaning of the wind through the pine trees. Yonder cricket's note just outside the door tells the same story and sounds the same note of warning. A contemporary poet, listening to the prophetic notes of the cricket's song, interprets it thus:

I wake at midnight from my dreaming
And restlessly toss to and fro
What time the cricket keeps on screaming:
"The autumn winds ere long will blow!
The peaceful, restful summer days
With summer's joys will soon be past;
The sumac soon will be ablaze,
The nights are growing longer fast."

What reflections are awakened by these avant coureurs of autumn! They summon us to give an account of the use we have made of the summer which will soon be past. They suggest the inquiry, whether the labor of the coming autumn and winter will be more fruitful because of the way in which we have spent the summer. If we have stored up no added vitality, if we have gained no clearer grasp of truth and of our calling, if those of us who in the summer days have been brought closer to the heart of nature, have failed to come into closer communion with nature's God, if our contact with others, or with new scenes and associations, has not broadened our outlook on life, and given us greater charity for, and sympathy with, mankind, if, in a word, we have droned through the happy summer days unobserving, unreflecting, instead of having our minds and our hearts open to all that God would teach through the ministering of nature and our fellowmen, we have reason to reproach ourselves for wasting opportunities. But if, on the other hand, the summer has ministered not only to our physical natures, but to our minds and hearts, we shall look forward with joy, and not with regret, to the tasks which autumn brings.

Every year brings to us an added appreciation of the value of our summer sojourn here by the side of the great lake, with its beauty, its breadth, its bountifulness and its sublimity. If one is not wholly independent of his surroundings, but is influenced by the scenery that spreads out before him, and by the voices of nature which speak to him, day and night, then it would be difficult to estimate the elements that are woven into the woof of one's character by these surroundings. We have found here a stimulus to work, a tonic for tired nerves, an opportunity for reading and meditating, a constant reminder of God's infinite power and goodness, which fit us better to do the work which God has called us to do, and to bear the burdens of care and responsibility which he has laid upon us. "Blessings brighten as they depart," and, as the time of our sojourn here draws near its close, every day seems precious with its opportunities, and every night eloquent with its messages. One of the curses of our American life is that it is being filled so full of the bustle and hurry and rush, that we have no time to get acquainted with ourselves and with those nearest to us. Many men live so constantly in the public eye, and their lives are so full of work and worry, of society and social duties, that there is little time for them to sit down and interrogate themselves as to the meaning of their lives, and the influences and motives which are dominating and molding them. If the summer time may bring with it a surcease from routine duties and worries, which grow out of the complexities of our modern life, and an opportunity of being still long enough to think on the great problems of life, it will prove an inestimable blessing to our modern, Western civilization.

The Easy Chair has enjoyed companionship, this summer, more than it can tell, with such men as W. T. Moore, T. P. Haley, and some others who have been here less steadily, as F. P. Arthur and H. A. Denton, here on our beach. The three first mentioned meet daily, and constitute a sort of triumvirate for settling all our puzzling theological problems! That is, we settle them for ourselves. We hardly expect the entire brotherhood will agree with all our conclusions, but we are not going to burn any one who dissents from them. We could not do that, here by the lakeside, which constantly reminds us that:

"There's a wideness in God's mercy
Like the wideness of the sea;
There's a kindness in His justice,
Which is more than liberty."

It is a liberal education to the Editor of the Easy Chair to sit at the feet of these venerable men, his senior by ten years, and listen to their conclusions and convictions, born not simply in an academic atmosphere, but out of the stress and struggle of life's duties and responsibilities. It is our desire to enlarge this circle, from year to year, that we may have these brotherly conferences, here by the lakside, on matters of vital interest to the kingdom of God. By and by, when the number has grown sufficiently to justify it, we shall have a time and a place set apart where we may meet, and, in more formal discourse, hear these and other men of faith and of religious experience talk to us of the deeper things of the kingdom of God. What a great school this will be for our younger men, and how much it will mean, in the coming days, for the future of this great reformation for which we plead!

We do not mean, by the foregoing, that clearer thinking on theological problems, in the current meaning of this phrase, is the great need of our religious movement, although it is a valuable asset to any individual, or to any religious body. We have felt for many years that the deepest need of our own, and of every other body of professed Christians for that matter, is a stronger hold on Christ, and a deeper religious experience, on the part of its members, of the power of the gospel to transform their lives, and to bring in a new and higher set of motives to govern their conduct, and to mold their characters. It is this personal contact with Christ, through his gospel, and the spiritual experience of his power to satisfy the deepest needs of the human soul, and the highest aspirations of the human heart, and to meet the most exacting requirements of the human mind, that alone can fortify the individual believer, or a body of believers, against the insidious attacks of materialism, and the more open assaults of infidelity. Why should not a place like this be most suitable for the gathering of a group of our members, in the summer season, to think and pray together over great problems like this, and to study together those sacred scriptures which can alone guide us aright in these great affairs of the soul? This ideal has been with us for many years. In our conventions we are so occupied with reports and plans for enlargement, and the details of the work, that we have little time for the quiet, thoughtful consideration of what lies behind all our missionary activity. In our congresses and lectureships we are dealing largely with the intellectual side of our religious life, which is by no means unimportant, or with some practical phases of our work. When and where do we have any meeting of the great leaders of our Israel, where they can sit together in prayerful meditation and counsel on the questions deeply and vitally related to the successful on-going of our movement? If we can make this one of the features of our summer life on the shore of this great lake, we are sure it can contribute somewhat to the welfare of the cause which we all love.

Events of interest have followed each other in such rapid succession here for the past few weeks that we have failed to keep up with them. We omitted to mention the annual fish dinner and corn roast, which occurs at the club-house in August. This year the dining hall was beautifully decorated and an unusually large company sat down to an excellent feast, the two prominent features of which were corn and fish, though the finer delicacies were not lacking. At the close there was a program of music and recitations, which was greatly enjoyed by the guests. On Tuesday afternoon, during the past week, the Moores and Garrisons gave a reception to the people on the beach, and opened their cottages, beautifully decorated with grasses, ferns and evergreens, for inspection. Light refreshments were served, and a great many people availed themselves of the opportunity for social enjoyment and acquaintance-making. We have, also, omitted to mention a brief visit from Prof. C. M. Sharpe, of the Bible College, Columbia, Mo., who has been spending the summer at Chicago University, and ran across the lake and spent a couple of days with us. J. P. Darst and wife, of Eureka, Ill., and the family of S. M. Cooper, of Cincinnati, are expected for a brief stay here during the coming week. Bro. H. A. Denton, who is now here on a brief visit to his family, who have been summering here, preached a good strong discourse to us last Lord's day. Bro. M. E. Chatley and wife, of Ravenna, O., have arrived, and are quartered at the clubhouse. Bro. T. P. Haley has greatly improved in his lameness, and is scheduled to preach at a union meeting at the Baptist Church on Lord's day morning. Last night the aurora borealis made a fine display in the north, with its white bands of light reaching far up toward the horizon, and this morning a stiff northwest breeze is bringing in over the lake a whole herd of the untamed flocks of Neptune.

The Written Word and Evangelism By J. M. Rudy

Have you ever noticed that there is a class of preachers who seem to hold the word of God responsible for the abuses which are associated with its use? Thousands read the word of God, and the effect of their reading is narrowness, bigotry, pride, presumption, self-assertion and sectarian zeal. This being noticed, other people at once find fault with the "letter" of God's word, as if it were to blame. The Pharisees read and studied the Scriptures and missed their message of life. The Sadducees studied the same Scriptures and missed their profound meaning. Jesus Christ studied the Scriptures and found himself mirrored on every page; and when he would answer the devil in the wilderness of temptation, he hurls at him, "It is written!" They say we must have the spirit and not be so much concerned about the letter. I say God has given us the letter through and by means of which we reach the region of the Spirit. Only by the letter, only by being guided by the word of God, have we any assurance that we shall find the "green pastures" and "still waters" of the Spirit of God. You can not see the pictures in an art gallery without you enter into the gallery. You can not see the beauties of the spiritual realm without you enter into that realm; but the way of entrance is described by the word of God, by the letter, if you please.

The relation of the written word to the Spirit is something of the relation of the shell to the kernel—but we can not reach the kernel without going through the shell. We are exhorted to "launch out" into the great ocean of spiritual reality. Very good, but the vessel that carries us out, and the compass that guides us when we are in mid-ocean, is the written word of God. We should make little progress in surveying the great deep were we not so carried and so guided. The hole in the ground is a very simple thing; indeed, it may be more than worthless. But suppose in the midst of a vast desert there rises cool water from this simple "hole in the ground?" We then no longer refer to it as a "hole" but as a spring. Thither come bird and beast and man to quench thirst. What kind of a man would he be who would throw all kinds of rubbish into this spring, and thus obstruct the flow of water? Is not this just what he does who is ever casting suspicion upon the written Word? Certainly no one feels that the providence which put the cool spring in the desert is an evil one. The perennial spring in the desert of this earth life is the Word of God.

And as the hart panteth after the water brooks, so should the soul pant after God. It is interesting to note that great minds and great hearts reverence the Word of God because it seems to mediate between God and their souls.

In evangelistic work great stress should be placed upon the word, and obedience to that word, because of that to which and into which it leads.

If the text is a gap, the evangelist must not forget that it opens "where Eden's bowers bloom," "by waters still, o'er troubled sea" and oft " 'mid scenes of deepest gloom." He must point out constantly that God's precious word is the finger of the sign-board on our earth road, pointing to the way of life—not always a smooth, easy, level way—this would not be life. The evangelist who constantly focuses on "obedience to the word of God," and then by repetitions, illustrations and quotations narrows obedience down to "three steps into the kingdom," viz., faith, repentance and baptism, is doing a perilous thing.

What should he do? He should constantly set forth the truth that "obedience to the word of God" means receiving the life of God in Christ. "He that hath the Son hath life; he that obeyeth not the Son shall not see life." Everywhere, at all times, the thought of the evangelist should be, your inheritance from God is life, not death. This life you can have by receiving Jesus Christ. This life you are asked to take in and by your "obedience to the word of God." Your obedience is the subjection of your will to the will of God; the opening of your heart to the love of God. You pass in your obedience "from death unto life," from hate unto love, and from darkness unto light. The evangelist must leave the impression on the heart that prayer on Monday is as essential to salvation as baptism on Sunday.

In much of our modern evangelism the impression is left that there is something in death that ushers the soul up to heaven or sinks it down to hell. The evangelist should make it clear that the soul goes to hell because it is hellish, and to heaven because it is heavenly; that the soul that "sinneth" is a dying soul and the soul that is saved is a living soul.

What is more belittling than to have the gospel made a sort of "fire-escape" from some future burning, when it ought to be made the "power of God" to deliver from present sin? But should not the evangelist preach faith, repentance and baptism? The evangelist should preach what they preached who first preached the gospel. It is quite likely their work was well pleasing to God, since God's Spirit guided them in a very direct way. But what did they preach? Let me ask, did they go out and co-ordinate faith, repentance and baptism, and then refer to these as "the plan" of salvation. They did not. The man who wants to be apostolic ought to do as the apostles did. Again, did they preach the Holy Spirit? No; it would be more correct to say the Holy Spirit did the preaching through them. It was "God that worked" in them as the indispensable and fundament condition of their being able "to work" anything out. They got impression from above, and this impelled them to expression. They inhaled from God, they exhaled to man. They were "born from above," and when they spoke the sinful and unbelieving soul had "the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so falling down on his face he worshiped God," and declared that "God is in you of a truth."

The effort of the evangelist should be to bring the sinner to a consciousness of sin, to make him confess sin, then forsake sin through the power that comes when he takes hold of Jesus Christ, "the power of God and the wisdom of God."

In conversion there are two factors, God and man. In times past the church overworked the former factor, God. He was expected "to operate" through his Spirit. It did not make much difference about the readiness or the willingness of man. "God can work and none can hinder" is the way it was often put. The soul is like a water-wheel, quiet, passive; but when the "power is turned on" and the water begins to flow, the wheel starts. We have swung to the opposite extreme in much of our evangelism. We no longer tell "man to stand still and see the salvation of God," but we tell God "to stand still and see the salvation of man," and verily our latter state is worse than our former. The way to hold a meeting now is to lay plans and work 'em; to fix strings and pull 'em; "to shell the woods," as Billy Sunday says. If we use the world's methods we shall reap the world's results. If we use God's methods we shall reap God's results. But still the question comes, What shall we preach? I do not, of myself, know how to answer this—you do not. No man has ever answered it; no man ever will. God and God alone knows the disease; God and God alone knows the remedy. No question is easier to answer if you are simple enough and sincere enough to accept the words of inspiration. Peter's great sermon on the day of Pentecost reaches its climax when he cries: "Let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." Acts 2:36.

"Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria and preached Christ unto them." Acts 8:5.

"Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus." Acts 8:35.

"He commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be judge of quick and dead. To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." Acts 10:42, 43.

"We preach Christ crucified." 1 Cor. 1:22.

What has resulted from this magnifying the human, this constant exploitation of what man can do and must do in order to be saved? Let me answer this by giving you some words from the sermon of a bishop of the Methodist church, as reported by a leading daily paper:

"It was before the ordination of a number of deacons and elders that the bishop delivered his address. He said, at the beginning, that he was too far down the vale

FRIENDLY TIP

Restored Hope and Confidence.

After several years of indigestion and its attendant evil influence on the mind, it is not very surprising that one finally loses faith in things generally.

A N. Y. woman writes an interesting letter. She says:

"Three years ago I suffered from an attack of peritonitis which left me in a most miserable condition. For over two years I suffered from nervousness, weak heart, shortness of breath, could not sleep, etc.

"My appetite was ravenous, but I felt starved all the time. I had plenty of food, but it did not nourish me because of intestinal indigestion. Medical treatment did not seem to help. I got discouraged, stopped medicine and did not care much whether I lived or died.

"One day a friend asked me why I didn't try Grape-Nuts, stop drinking coffee and use Postum. I had lost faith in everything, but to please my friends I began to use both and soon became very fond of them.

"It wasn't long before I got some strength, felt a decided change in my system, hope sprang up in my heart and slowly but surely I got better. I could sleep very well, the constant craving for food ceased, and I have better health now than before the attack of peritonitis.

"My husband and I are still using Grape-Nuts and Postum." "There's a Reason."

to preach for effect, and when he did speak it was in the interest of humanity. He said that the statistics told him that there are now 10,000,000 young men in the United States, and that of this number 90 per cent do not attend church services, and 95 per cent do not belong to any church.

"'Also, 85 per cent of the criminal classes are young men, nearly all of whom frequent the saloons and houses of ill fame, where young men are debauched and degraded. In our country in twenty years the homicides have increased from 32 in 1,000,000 to 112 to 1000,000, which is an increase of 400 per cent. In 1903 there were 900 homicides in the United States, 321 in Germany, 323 in Great Britain, 523 in France, and 61 in Canada. By this it is seen that the United States is the most lawless nation in the world—a country free to kill, as well as to think. Still, this vast army going down has not aroused the church."

"Has not aroused the church!"

What should the church be aroused to do first? I answer, Get acquainted with God.

THE CHURCH AND MEN

The Address of which we print this week a third installment was read at the Tenth Annual Congress of the Disciples of Christ, at Bloomington, Illinois.

By Arthur Holmes

Religious and Educational Work Secretary of the Pennsylvania R. R. Y. M. C. A.

What Has the Church to Offer the Workingman?

All the objections of the majority of the employers to the passiveness of Christianity applies to the workingman as well, for his world is like his employers. Is there anything, then, in the actual church to appeal to him?

First, its services are on Sunday, his restday at home. These services are dolefully monotonous. They compel him to sit still, to listen to dissertations about abstractions. No opportunity is offered for expression of his manual dexterity or physical strength, no chance for him to individualize himself, as he can in a saloon. The music is to him a jargon. The frescoes are foolish extravagances. The furnishings above his taste.

The dominant people are socially his superiors and bear in upon his soul the unwelcome fact that one is not as good as another, in church or anywhere else. Brotherhood is a myth, preached, not practiced. The men guilty, in his mind, of every form of vicious exploitation, sit complacently in the front pews, with their wives bedecked in extravagance which his sweat and blood have bought. The minister's dress, manners and cordial alignment with the upper classes mark him as altogether out of sympathy with the workingman, however good his intentions may be.

The sermon breathes what he hates—charity, lowliness, humility, inertness, inaction, passivity. A superintendent writes: "The laboring man wants Christianity dealing with to-day's conditions, reaching his practical needs, spoken in to-day's language, with local illustrations and applications given by men who are familiar with to-day's science, and with the social, political and business methods and conditions of to-day, and not by men whose preparation for their work has been mainly the study of tradition and of dead languages and of ancient history, and who have acquired the ability of 'descripturing' any position they may take. . . . Nor are they interested in the discussion of whether Balaam's ass spoke or the whale swallowed Jonah," etc. ("Association Men," March 08, p. 263.)

More hateful than all is the pride of the church in the benevolences of its rich members. Imagine the exquisite torture wrought upon the soul swaying between the agony of disgracing charity and the cries of his starving family when he hears that the millowner, who has shut down to save expense, graciously deigns to return to him some of his honestly-earned, appropriated wages in the form of alms! To make it more bitter, he is expected to be grateful. To such a man there are just three alternatives: vagrancy, drink or death. The laying low of the eagle with an arrow feathered from its own pinion is a fitting figure of the church which boasts of its charities to workingmen.

The theology preached burns into the workingman's soul like vinegar on a flayed back. The feeling of injustice and oppression has become chronic with him. Daily he endures petty persecutions, restrictions, ignorings, exactions. In church of all places he hears that escape from all punishments for such oppressions is to be had through the death of an innocent workingman, and his daily tormentors can, by mere word acceptance of such a dogma, retain in this world their beast of heraldry and pomp of power, and in the world to come be assured of an eternal immunity bath.

The only message the church seems to have for him, again in the words of our superintendent, is that "labor has more than it deserves of what this world can give, . . . that the unfortunates should be given palliatives and taught Christian resignation, contentment and fortitude, and that they should set their minds on the next world." Yea, verily, let the oppressed soul stay itself with the blessed hope that he that endures to the end shall find his reward in some far blue empyrean, in some "pink-tea, ladylike elysium," with palm fans, white gowns and all social distinctions duly observed.

So far it has been our endeavor to show that the worlds of the workingman and the employer are essentially selfish, and cannot do otherwise that lead to endless opposition; that the church is practically the same, for she has set for herself as her primary object the promotion of her ecclesiastical organization. She has drawn around herself a little circle, labeled it "Morality and Religion," and refused to take cognizance of anything lying outside its narrow bounds.

The workingman has come and uttered his plaint and told his tale of woe. The good church has answered that his economic troubles are not her concern, and he has gone about his business, organized his labor unions, preached his socialism and forgot the church.

The employer likewise has come and told his tale and received his answer, and gone about his business and organized his trusts and corporations and forgot the church.

Suddenly the good church rouses herself to find that she is alone, and the world is busy with other things. Then, like Rachel, she weeps for her children, for they are not.

What Shall Be Done That She May Find Her Children?

The first consideration is the emphasis upon the object. It must be the making of men, not the building of an institution. No amount of serpent-wisdom will hide the difference from the masses; no amount of pleading will ever interest many for a long time in the essentially selfish ideal of sacrificing for the sake of an organization. Therefore, this must be the first and great commandment—Make Men.

The question may arise as to how much of the man the church should make. The answer should be that, directly and indirectly, her field is the direction of all of the activities of all people. As an organization, however, she must limit herself to the direct administration of only such interests as are common to all her members. Since all have souls, her care must be for souls; since all have minds, for minds; and since all have bodies, for bodies. Convenience may lead her to delegate some of these cares to other organizations, but her interest in them should remain as lively and forceful as if she were spurred on by the selfish motive of heaping up members unto herself.

The making of men requires the continuation of that portion of the work which the church has so well done heretofore, namely, preaching of personal salvation through Christ in the world to come. We all need that hope to give shape and purpose to the unmeaning and unfinished events of this world; we need it to rationalize our ethics, to make struggle and sacrifice for the right and for posterity worth while; we need it to bulwark our souls against discouraging pessimism, corroding cynicism and deceiving sin. Let us, then,

COFFEE THE CAUSE Of Various Ailments.

It does not require a scientist to discover if coffee is harmful.

Plain common sense and the simple habit of looking for the cause of things soon reveals coffee in its true light—that of a habit-forming drug.

"My family on both sides were confirmed coffee topers," writes a Penna. painter, "and we suffered from nervousness, headache, sleeplessness, dizziness and palpitation of the heart.

"Medical treatment never seemed to do any permanent good. I thought there must be some cause for these troubles and yet did not find it was coffee until I was forty-one.

"Hearing of the benefit that many had derived from changing to Postum, I quit coffee and used Postum entirely. Now I am like a new man.

"I sleep well, can eat three good meals a day, have no headache nor palpitation, no nerve twitching in my face, and I don't have to pay out hard-earned money for medicines.

"I believe a good hot cup of Postum made strong, with half milk and taken before retiring at night, is the best thing to keep a painter from having lead poisoning. That's my experience anyway."

preach this hope once for all delivered to the saints. In addition, the church should remember that other duties are just as urgent in politics, economics and sociology.

What Shall Be Done in These Realms?

It is clear that the church can not side with any one of the conflicting parties. She must find a basis broad enough for the fellowshiping of all. This, fortunately, is at hand. It is the original purpose of Jesus' mission on earth. It is nothing more nor less than that the church shall take up seriously the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth, the urging of the Golden Rule as the valid, fundamental law of conduct in all social and economic affairs. This may compel a distinction between the church militant and the kingdom of God, and the measurement of success in larger terms than mere additions to the fold.

The times are ripe for such a venture. Dr. Lyman Abbott says: "In these latter times the church is slowly, very slowly, coming to realize that Jesus came to establish a new social order on earth, not to save few or many from the pains of a future hell to the bliss of a future heaven. . . . It is enough to say that the modern movement toward a more fraternal spirit in government and in industry, and a more fraternal organization, both political and industrial, is derived historically from the teaching of Jesus Christ and the pre-Christian teachings of the Hebrew prophets." (Outlook, March 7, 1908; Socialism, p. 537.)

Jesus' teachings of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man laid in the dust the foundations of a nation whose preserving hope was an Anointed One who would put all other nations under his feet. Jesus was willing to overturn such a nation, politically, socially and economically, to bring it in harmony with brotherhood.

The suppression of the implications of his teaching made the Jerusalem church a popular institution until Stephen paid his life for interpreting the Christian doctrine of God's spirituality in such a way that the temple would be rendered useless, that the hierarchy of priests would be cut off from a livelihood, and Jerusalem, the Holy City, would lose much of its prestige and revenue. Paul did not cease to teach such spirituality because it destroyed the trade of a pagan city, let any uproar rise that might.

The modern church has dared to touch the hem of the border of the garment of some economic problems by first waiting until popular opinion interpreted the Golden Rule in such a way as to bring them within the realm of "moral questions." Such was the slave question, in which the church really ignored the moral, and split along exactly economic lines. Such, also, is the prohibition question, in which it is allowed to dabble because it appeared visionary.

If the church has espoused such movements, how can it continue to ignore the injury and death of 1,000,000 workingmen annually; the working of 1,700,000 children; the poverty of 10,000,000 in the best times; the pauperism of 4,000,000; the idleness of 2,000,000 from four to six months annually; the employment of 5,000,000 women, 2,000,000 of them in factories and mills; the sure death of 10,000,000 persons now living by preventable tuberculosis? ("Poverty," p. 337.)

But some may say that the church has been a mighty social force. To quote a modern writer:*

"If we ask why Christianity has not reconstructed society, they will say that it has done so. Has it not lifted women to equality and companionship with man, secured the sanctity and stability of marriage, changed parental despotism to parental service, and eliminated unnatural vice, the abandonment of children, blood revenge and the robbery of the shipwrecked from customs of Christian nations? Has it not abolished slavery, mitigated war, covered all lands with a network of charity to uplift the poor and the fallen, fostered the institutions of education, aided the progress of civil liberty and social justice, and diffused a softening tenderness throughout human life?

"It has done this and vastly more. But the task of the kingdom is far mightier than this; for 'though the church has often rendered valuable aid by joining the advanced public conscience of any period in its protest against some single intolerable evil, it has accepted as inevitable the general social system under which the world has been living at the time, and has not undertaken any thorough-going social reconstruction in accordance with Christian principles.'

"Emile de Laveleye, the eminent Belgian economist, who had the deepest reverence for Christianity as a social force, said: 'If Christianity were taught and understood conformably to the spirit of its Founder, the existing social organism would not last a day.' ("Primitive Property," 31.) James Russell Lowell said: 'There is dynamite enough in the New Testament, if illegitimately applied, to blow all our existing institutions to atoms.' ("Progress of the World.") These men have not seen Jesus amiss. Jesus was not a child of this world. He did not revere the men it called great; he did not accept its customs of social usages as final; his moral conceptions did not run along the groove marked by it."

The Rising Tide for Church Extension

No day in all the history of Church Extension did we have so large a number of churches order supplies for the Annual Offering as on Monday, August 10. This is a most practical evidence of the increasing favor in which this work is held by our brotherhood. A church or preacher seldom orders supplies except for use in taking an offering. If the minister takes the trouble to order supplies of literature, it means that several hundred people are to be educated on Church Extension. This means future church offerings, and in time also bequests and Annuities. On Monday, August 10, the number of churches that ordered supplies was greater than the whole number of contributing churches in 1888, the first year of this Board's history.

Twenty years is a long time for growth! Yes, but it must be remembered that it takes a long time for a practical idea to percolate down through the mind of a great brotherhood, when each congregation is interested in its local affairs. The local congregation idea is apt to get the start of the General Church Extension idea in a religious body that has been so busy growing in all parts of the land. But we are fast learning that no congregation can live unto itself and do its best work locally. The old illustration of the banyan tree is here pertinent. Its nature is first to strike deep roots into the soil. It then lifts loftily its branches. Drinking in the sunshine and showers, these branches get heavy, and tipping over touch the soil all round the central trunk and taking root in turn lift up their branches. These again tip over and start a second circle of banyan trees, until finally, in years to come, the country for acres around is covered with the banyan tree, and the sap of the young trees on the outer circle is flowing back to the original tree, keeping its life fresh. Even so the church grows, and our local congregations are learning the lesson of keeping their life fresh and vigorous by giving it off to the church universal throughout our brotherhood. The increasing interest in Church Extension is to be accounted for on this basis.

Again, a real need always arouses the church to action. If we had no lusty young mission churches crying for shelter and for an equipment with which to grow, the appeal for offerings would fall on deaf ears. At a single meeting of the Board, on the first Tuesday of August, $76,000 were demanded by our vigorous missions in different parts of the Union, and every one presented good reasons why their congregation should be aided first and at once. They were like hungry children waiting impatiently past meal time to be fed. The news of these waiting congregations was sent out to our churches in a personal letter to our preachers the previous week, and the cry of the hungry child is answered by postal cards flying in on every mail, promising aid in the Annual Offering.

Another thing has helped the tide of interest in Church Extension to rise. We have learned to heed the call of our growing American cities. Hitherto we had done work only in our smaller towns, which was well and good. This did not excuse us from entering the cities. We could give more money for adequate buildings in our cities, and we have now begun to do it. We can all remember the time, only a few years back, when the average loan by the Board of Church Extension was only $500. The average size of the loans this year is nearly $2,400. More work is being done in the cities; hence the loans are larger. We are not neglecting the smaller towns, but since the Fund has grown we are able to help the long neglected city missions, that must be fortified if they succeed.

And still another thing is causing the tide to rise. Our preachers are learning that the quickest, most economical and wisest way to answer the numerous appeals that come to them, asking them to enlist their congregations in a new building for some mission church that really ought to be aided, is to send an annual offering to Kansas City to help increase the general church building fund, known as our Church Extension Fund. Money thus contributed is loaned to house one church after another, and in threescore years and ten the same money has helped to build fourteen churchhouses, because the average time of each loan is five years. The practical pastor sees that a mission church is all the stronger because of the effort made to pay back the money in five annual payments. Each mission thus learns the lesson of self-reliance, the first law of growth.

The pastors are also conscious of the fact that no secretary of a missionary society can do the work alone of enlisting the churches in the Annual Offering, and are graciously lending a hand. As a brotherhood we are learning to bear one another's burdens. The number of preachers who are enlisting their churches is increasing each year. Last year 1,416 congregations contributed. At least 2,000 or 2,500 should be found willing and even anxious to send offerings. It is hoped our pastors will select the most favorable Sunday in September to take the offering. September should be sacredly set aside for the building up of this fund, so necessary to the permanency of our growth, and no other interest should be allowed to sidetrack the Church Extension Offering.

May the Lord of the Harvest persuade the churches to do their duty!

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

Bethany Beach is in touch with all the universe. We cross the Chesapeake, the charming "Eastern Shore," Rehoboth Bay, and here we are, looking over the great ocean to Portugal, and up through the infinite blue to the stars. You know the Chesapeake is "the Bay," and the greatest inlet in the Atlantic coast, and the "Eastern Shore" is the original Eden. This has always been a resort for people who love the water courses. Our Presidents have not slighted it. A good story is told of Arthur, Blaine and Windom, who were once on a little visit to this paradise. They were on "the shore," and on the Lord's day attended an Episcopal Church, when the incident occurred.

The President and two secretaries sat in quiet satisfaction. But their peace of mind was suddenly dispelled. The offertory was sung. At the familiar words: "Let your light so shine before men," etc., the President and the secretaries each quietly dropped a hand into a pocket.

"Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth."

Windom drew forth a crisp one-dollar note and held it between his thumb and forefinger, ready for the approaching plate. The President and Mr. Blaine went a little deeper into their pockets. One brought up a nickel and the other a dime. Their faces flushed. It would never do to make such a contribution.

"He that soweth little shall reap little, and he that soweth plenteously shall reap plenteously . . . God loveth a cheerful giver."

The President went to his pocketbook, and the Secretary of State explored his vest pocket with nervous fingers.

"Zaccheus stood forth and said unto the Lord: 'Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have done wrong to any man I restore fourfold."

The plate was only four pews away. What the President found in his pocketbook was one fifty-dollar note and a ten-dollar greenback—nothing smaller. What Mr. Blaine found was two ten-dollar notes—nothing smaller. To put in a nickel or a dime only was not to be thought of. To give $10 was more than either cared to do. Each looked at Windom sitting there calmly with his dollar note in hand. He shook his head.

"Charge them that are rich in this world that they be ready to give and glad to distribute."

There was no time for a further pocket exploration or consideration. With a smile of commiseration at each other, and something like glee on Windom's placid countenance, the President and the Secretary of State each planked down his ten-dollar note for "the poor of this congregation." And the worst of it is, said one of the party afterward, that the Lord would probably give them credit only for a dollar or two, which they intended to give.

But a president is supposed to give freely. Arthur gave twenty-five dollars at my dedication services at Vermont Avenue, and when I dedicated our Whitney Avenue Church, Hayes threw in a check for the same amount. That was when the salary, however, was but a paltry $25,000. Now it is twice that sum, we shall expect William Blank to drop in at least fifty. Noblesse oblige. Even our Bethany Beach frogs have a way of singing around the tabernacle: "Give freely! Give freely!"

As we approach the sea, every influence gives men broader vision. You can not study the ocean and have little ideas of things. The very sea-shells have a story to tell of growth, of largeness, of unfolding. Here is the simple conch—the string of disks, each with its score of tiny conchs, cast up from the sea, then the larger shell, and finally the home of the fullgrown mollusk. Nature provides the infant with its first home, a cell adapted to its small size and needs, while the sea holds all the material required for the growth and development of the body as well as for the enlargement and embellishment of the shell. This done, the creature is left to shift for itself. Instinct or inherited habit is its unerring guide. It builds as its fathers and grandfathers built. So the chambered nautilus erects its dwelling, a long series of chambers, until the largest and last-found home is reached, each deserted chamber partitioned from the next and larger one with a curved wall of pearl.

Oliver Wendell Holmes, on Christmas day, 1879, had one of these shells sent to him by a friend, and you remember the poem, his one immortal contribution to literature. Here it is, with its great lesson:

This is the ship of pearl, which, poets feign,
Sails the unshadowed main—
The venturous bark that flings
On the sweet summer wind its purpled wings
In gulfs enchanted, where the Siren sings,
And carol reefs lie bare,
Where the cold sea maids rise to sun their streaming hair.

Its webs of living gauze no more unfurl;
Wrecked is the ship of pearl:
And every chambered cell,
Where its dim dreaming life was wont to dwell,
As the frail tenant shaped his growing shell,
Before Thee lies revealed—
Its irised ceiling rent, its sunless crypt unsealed!

Year after year beheld the silent toil
That spread his lustrous coil:
Still, as the spiral grew,
He left the past year's dwelling for the new,
Stole with soft step its shining archway through.
Built up its idle door,
Stretched in his last found home and knew the old no more.

Thanks for the heavenly message brought by thee,
Child of the wandering sea,
Cast from her lap forlorn!
From thy dead lips a clearer note is born
Than ever Triton blew from wreathed horn!
While on mine ear it rings
Through the deep caves of thought I hear a voice that sings:

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea!

I see God and his gospel here. "They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters; these see the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep." "Thy way is the sea, and thy path is the great waters." "Thou didst walk through the sea with thine horses, through the heap of great waters." "He gathereth the waters of the sea together as an heap: he layeth up the depth in storehouses." God's resources, God's providence, God's power, God's majesty, God's eternity are here. Father and sustainer of all organic life is the sea, feeding the streams, filling the lake, bubbling in the spring, foaming in the cataract. Dry up the eternal fountains and the blooming earth becomes a naked waste. Magnificence of forests, verdure of meadows, beauty of fields, lusciousness of fruits, song of birds and life of beasts would all pass away. Our very life blood is drawn from the wells of the ocean.

Then the sea has its moral uses. It divides the nations, and by its barriers keeps them at peace. It has kept one part of the world even from the knowledge of the other, preserving it for discovery and occupation till God's own good time and in God's own wise way. At the same time, the sea unites the nations. Disconnecting them for great ends, it has also connected them, bringing all regions and climes into correspondence and commercial relations, promoting civilization, the spirit of brotherhood, peace and goodwill, and the universal spread of Christianity. And not the least of its moral purposes are the lessons of patience and humility it teaches to one who would learn beside its waters. "Deep calleth unto deep," and these are some of the things my ear catches and my heart feels as I lay stretched upon a sand dune, with my face toward the stars. I have come, as Longfellow expresses it:

"To that Cathedral, boundless as our wonder,
Whose quenchless lamps the sun and moon supply,
Its choir the winds and waves, its organ thunder,
Its dome the sky."

There is such a thing as looking up through nature unto nature's God. We behold the Infinite. Carlyle likens man to a minnow to which every cranny and pebble and quality and accident of its little native creek may be familiar, but does the minnow understand ocean tides and periodic currents, trade-winds and monsoons and moon's eclipses, by all of which the little creek is regulated, and may from time to time, unmiraculously enough, be overset and reversed? "Such a minnow is man; his creek this planet earth, his ocean, the immeasurable all; his monsoons and periodic currents the mysterious course of providence through æons and æons." But he can worship. Yes. We sing, with Thomas Moore:

As down in the sunless retreats of the ocean
Sweet flowers are springing no mortal can see,
So, deep in my soul the still prayer of devotion,
Unheard by the world, rises silent to thee,
My God! silent to thee—
Pure, warm, silent to thee.

As still to the star of its worship, though clouded,
The needle points faithfully o'er the dim sea,
So, dark as I roam, in this wintry world shrouded,
The hope of my spirit turns trembling to thee,
My God! trembling to thee—
True, fond, trembling to thee.

The Young Church Versus the Pipe Organ

By W. R. Warren

The Centennial Committee is ambitious to see every Church of Christ in the best possible circumstances and condition in 1909. One of the Centennial Aims is, "Every Church Well Housed; Every Church Debt Paid." We should rejoice to see every Bible school class meeting in its own separate room and fully equipped for its sessions. We should like to have every church supplied with every accessory to helpful and spiritual worship.

Perhaps there are many congregations that ought to have a pipe organ, and possibly Mr. Carnegie exercises rare wisdom when he pays half the purchase price of such instruments. But out of wide observation, we wish to say just a word of caution. The pipe organ is one variety of the Church's White Elephant. It calls for an accomplished and faithful organist. It requires a doubly harmonious choir and congregation. It results in considerable expense for operation and repairs.

About the same amount of money that is required to build a pipe organ will secure a Named Loan Fund under the Church Extension Board. Without expense or care on the church's part, this fund will every year help some young church to build a meeting house, and in its new home each of these happy congregations will be multiplying its membership, making efficient workers out of lukewarm disciples, transforming houses of sorrow and sin into homes of joy and righteousness, and sending forth the Gospel of Truth to the end of the world. The annual reports of this glorious service will give more of satisfaction and joy to the church that made it possible than the most splendid cathedral music could possibly supply.

Even if it is not as large a question as the one proposed above, let the old church forego some luxury that the young church, through the Church Extension Board, may have a necessity. And let young church and old church alike know the joy of fellowship in building up the million dollar Centennial fund that will continue throughout all the centuries making happy homes for all heroic young churches.

Russia's Disciples

By J. L. Darsie

An Open Door in New York.

Attended by a friend who is engaged in settlement work in one of the congested sections of New York, on the east side, an opportunity was afforded to see something of life in what is claimed to be the most densely populated spot on our planet. Much has been published, as is too often the case, of the more exaggerated features of this community, so that my impressions of it, from the view-point of current literature, were somewhat modified by actual contact.

Here is a teeming population of all ages —a motley crowd—filling the streets, stores, houses, roof gardens, places of amusement and other resorts, apparently trying in an orderly, cheerful, quiet way to make the best of their hampered condition. It impresses one as more like a picnic excursion, or some gala day occasion, than anything else I can imagine. There are no saloons in evidence, as in so many other quarters of the metropolis; no boisterous excitement or noisy conversation, no scrapping and fakir confusion. The constituency was largely made up of Jews, Russians, Poles and other races from Eastern Europe. I encountered a small colony of Christians, who could scarcely speak a word of English, who had but recently landed on our shores from Northern Russia. Through an interpreter I had an opportunity of learning from them something of their history. They number more than a million of communicants in their native land, and stand as we do squarely on a New Testament platform, ignoring all denominational names and proclivities. They strenuously refuse to be known by any other name than that of Christian or Brethren, or "believing Christians," which latter term, as nearly as it can be rendered into English, means, substantially, "Disciple Christians." When it was suggested that the disciples were first called Christians at Antioch, almost as quick as a flash one of them produced a New Testament, with which they all seem to be provided, and from its well-worn pages produced the reference in Acts 11:26. This is only one of several communities or societies of these Russian brethren, who meet regularly to attend to the Lord's Supper every "Resurrection day," as they designate the first day of the week. Some of them come fifty miles to be present on this occasion, so highly do they prize this great privilege. They confidently expect that the Lord will come on the Lord's day, and while they are assembled in waiting for him

They have a minister who preaches every Lord's day and three evenings during the week. They are too poor to pay him a salary and he gets a very meager living for himself and family by working in a tailor shop. Their meetings for worship continue never less than two hours at a sitting, and every one is expected to take part. They are very solemn and impressive, and their singing is most inspiring. The Bible is their only book and constant companion. There is an air of cheerfulness, intelligence and genuine sincerity that would command the respect and attention of the most indifferent.

Of course, they are all immersionists. They have no other kind of Christians in Russia. The Greek church has always practiced immersion, and their converts are largely from the national church. Their preparation of the candidate for baptism is exceedingly thorough and eventful, being somewhat after the catechumen methods of the early Christian church. In this respect they might teach us a lesson that would be an improvement on our way of railroading converts into the fellowship of the church. While it is not in any sense a period of probation, it is in a wise sense a thorough work of preparation which must tell on all the future life of the young Christian.

One of their members I talked with had been an anarchist, and if he is a fair specimen of that ilk, I could almost hope that their numbers might increase. He was far from being a reckless, bloodthirsty outlaw. In Greater New York, I am told, there are 50,000 Russians, of which these are a fair specimen, and among whom these Christians are at work trying to win them to their faith. They are meeting with a fair show of success. They are also the most efficient agents for winning the Jews, who are also quite numerous, and upon whose ranks they are even now making inroads.

In Russia this movement began under the leadership of General Pashkoff, about the close of the Crimean War. It is now under the efficient leadership of such men as Count Chuvalov, and is quite aggressive as an evangelizing force. In half the length of time it has won, under most unfavorable circumstances, a constituency almost as large as our own in this country. They had no organized foreign missionary work until the late war between Russia and Japan, when some of their ministers, who had accompanied the army, took advantage of that occasion to work among the Chinese also. They have organized co-operative work in Northern Russia. In the southern part of the empire the movement seems to take on more of the features of a Baptist propaganda, and is also quite aggressive. It is related of General Pashkoff, when the war was over in 1854, that he gave up his commission in the army, surrendered all his honors, emoluments and chances for advancement, which were quite flattering, and decided to identify himself with this very humble and despised people, choosing, like Moses, to suffer affliction with the people of God rather than to endure the pleasures of sin for a season. When I told them that they were singing some of our tunes, they replied that the general got them from England. They have no great conventions, such as are held in this country. The law forbids all such. Their educational work is but meager on account of their poverty. They have only one college of any standing, located at St. Petersburg. When it was suggested that they might have the advantage of a liberal education here, their faces lighted up with eager interest, and two young men at once signified their willingness to go to college if any way could be provided for them to work their way through.

Here, it seems to me, is an opportunity for our people to do a great work, which no other religious people can so well undertake, because of the peculiar relation we sustain to this people in matters of faith and doctrine. The door is already wide open. This people are ready, eager, waiting—nay, rather are already in the field and hard at work in a winning fight, along the same lines we have been working on for years. Here are foreign and home missions combined, at our very door, and, by the logic of the situation, crying to us for help.

Some women's religion runs to Sunday bonnets. Sister, does this hit you?

Some folks sing "Rescue the Perishing," and then sit still while others do the rescuing. Reader, is this your way?

Rock Falls, Ill.

Our Budget

—A rising tide

—For Church Extension.

—Read carefully the statement of the Board.

—There is a foreign people in New York City holding to many of the beliefs and practices of the Disciples of Christ. J. L. Darsie writes of them this week.

—We regret that there were several typographical errors in our last issue, due to some of the staff being on vacations. For instance, the article "Let Fourth Time Mean a Week," was contributed by Robert Simons, our well-known Missouri preacher-evangelist, not one Robert Simmons, who may exist and be a good brother, but did not write for us. Under the heading, "The State of the Cause," appeared the report of the committee appointed by the Missouri convention. To this were appended the initials J. W. S., which have no significance in this connection. The report was prepared by J. H. Garrison, chairman of the committee.

—The Assistant Editor is back at his desk, after a pleasant visit to Pentwater, which he found to be an ideal place for racked nerves. Garrison Park is the choice part, it seemed to him, of all this region.

—We are receiving a number of letters of inquiry about boat rates to the New Orleans convention. For the benefit of these, and others, we will state once more that we found it impractical to arrange for a boat trip. Because of the lack of any through line of boats, and of any vessels of sufficient capacity, we have been compelled to abandon the plan of going by the river, and have arranged for a special train over the Illinois Central. See the notice in our advertising columns.

—The readers of "The Christian-Evangelist" will regret to learn that Sister G. W. Muckley has been compelled to undergo a very serious operation. She has passed the ordeal successfully at the hands of the skilled surgeons, the Mayo brothers, at Rochester, Minn., where Brother and Sister Muckley are at present. Brother Muckley reports his wife as doing nicely, and we know that thousands of our readers will join us in an earnest prayer for her complete recovery.

—Oscar Ingold occupied the pulpit at Canyon City, Colo., on August 16.

—E. L. Kirtley has resigned the work at Ada and accepted a call to Marlow, Okla.

—L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., will dedicate the new church house at Wilmington, N. C., next Lord's day.

—The church at Galesburg, Ill., is making good success under J. A. Barnett. It is well on the way to building a new house of worship.

—The Christian Church at Wapello, Iowa, desires to employ a resident minister. Correspondents should address Mrs. M. E. Blanchard.

—John R. Golden will hold a meeting at Flanagan, Ill., in September, and Charles E. McVay, of Benkleman, Neb., will lead the singing.

—G. P. Clark, of Asherville, Kan., recently preached for the church at Perkins, Okla., and is to enter upon the work there October 1.

—The church at Pasadena, Cal., has raised a special fund of $230 toward the outfit of E. R. Moon, who expects soon to depart for work in Africa.

—J. M. Elam, now of Carthage, but more recently of Litchfield, Ill., has resigned, and will do evangelistic work. He has had very good success in this field.

—The Sunday-schools of White Hall and Winchester, Ill., are in a contest, with the former in the lead at last report.

—John Lord, of Vigan, P. I., reports two schools recently opened among the head-hunter tribes of the interior, and two native chapels recently dedicated.

—The church at Covina, Cal., W. G. Conley, minister, will support E. R. Moon as their "living link" in Africa. This is a bold step for this splendid church.

—John B. Gordinier has resigned at Scio, N. Y., by reason of sickness. The resignation takes effect September 1, and after that date his address will be Troy, Pa.

—After September 1 Sam B. Ross, of Fairfield, Iowa, would like to take work with some church, or churches, within reach of that point. Address him Route No. 1.

—J. S. Raum, of Upper Troy, N. Y., has accepted a call to become corresponding secretary and evangelist in the state of Montana, and begins his work there about September 6.

—Joseph Gaylor, state evangelist of Missouri, can put churches desiring meetings for the fall in touch with three or four good evangelists. Address him at 408 W. Chase, Springfield, Mo.

—Alfred Farrar can be had for evangelistic work after September 1, when he retires from the pastorate at Glouster, Ohio. He has had sixteen years' experience as pastor and evangelist.

—A friend in Southern California pledged $600 for the support of Mrs. E. R. Moon, who expects to go to Africa as a missionary of the Foreign Society. This makes another "living link" for California.

—E. W. Thornton's Bible class, of Long Beach, Cal., numbering thirty, have pledged themselves for a "living link" in the Foreign Society. We congratulate Brother Thornton and his splendid class upon this bold step.

—The Editor of this paper knows of three or four of our best pastors and preachers who are contemplating changing, and who can be secured by the right churches. Those interested may communicate with him on the subject.

—The corner stone of a new church building has been laid at Memphis, Tenn., and a great service was held on this occasion. We hope to give a fuller account of it than this notice. W. H. Sheffer is the minister, and the building is to cost $40,000.

—J. H. Wenz, of Sacramento, Cal., is the chairman of the Centennial Committee for Foreign Missions in Northern California, the object of which is to raise a special fund of $10,000. The Northern California brethren will be glad to co-operate with him heartily.

—The work of Z. E. Bates, with the First Church at Atchison, Kan., has proven to be so satisfactory that a three years' extension call has been made, with a yearly increase of salary. The daily press of the city commented upon the pastor and his work most favorably.

—O. L. Cook, who has recently gone to Hutchinson, Kan., writes that his reception there has been most royal, and that the field presents great possibilities. We notice from a card sent that he is organizing a "Men's Bible Class." He says: "Our new $35,000 building is well under way."

—Edwin Priest, pastor at Defiance, Ia., writes us that B. S. Denny, state corresponding secretary, preached two helpful sermons there during the recent all-day meeting. Brother Priest is closing his second year as student-minister, and is able to report a live membership and bright hopes for the future.

—J. Tilden Sapp, who is located at Canton, Mo., has closed his work with the church at Hazel Dell. This church and the Bible school are in good condition. It reported the largest Children's day offering in the county. There was one baptism at Brother Sapp's last service.

—Guy B. Williamson has just entered upon his work as assistant pastor to E. W. Allen at Wichita, Kan. He writes us that it is a most delightful people and an active and well organized congregation. Everything, he says, dates forward to the beginning of the Scoville meeting.

—The Ministerial Association of Northwestern Ohio, at a recent meeting, passed resolutions heartily commending T. J. White, who has been called to the South Ohio field as general evangelist, and W. P. Alexander, who leaves the fellowship of the Association to go to the foreign field.

—W. G. Conley, Covina, Cal., has been appointed chairman of the Centennial committee of Southern California, the special object of which is to raise a Centennial fund of $12,500 for foreign missions in that region. Under the inspiring and wise management of Brother Conley we have no doubt of success.

—Mrs. A. R. Adams, of Milestone, Sask., Canada, was recently elected Superintendent of Evangelism for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She is also president of the local aid society, and of the C. W. B. M., Superintendent of the Junior Endeavor work, teacher of a class in the Bible school, and church organist.

—H. W. Hunter, we are informed by Brother Monser, desires to locate with some church in Missouri, in a town of 2,000 or more inhabitants. Brother Hunter is state superintendent of Christian Endeavor work, and has been pastor of the church at Mt. Washington, Kansas City. He makes the change, primarily, in order to have a less exacting field. We cordially commend him.

—Fred E. Hagin and family, missionaries of the Foreign Society, sailed on the "Manchuria" from San Francisco August 15. They have been home on furlough and go back to Toyko, Japan, to resume their missionary work. Their stay in America has been an inspiration to the work. Brother Hagin stirred the churches greatly with his strong addresses during the rallies last winter.

—J. L. Greenwell, minister of the Queen Anne Church, Seattle, Wash., has been preaching a series of evening sermons on the parables of Christ. The following are some of the subjects discussed: "The Soil of the Human Heart"; "The Devices of the Devil"; "The Dialogue of the Dead"; "Ability and Accountability"; "Vigilance and Virtue"; "Christ's Conquering Kingdom."

—Prof. C. T. Paul, of Hiram, Ohio, is to conduct a mission study class during the convention at New Orleans. This class will be held from 8:30 to 9:30 each morning, just before the regular program begins. This will be a great class, and every delegate ought to be in it. Prof. Paul is one of the most successful mission study teachers in the world. He will use a book on home and one on foreign missions.

—The semiannual convention of the Christian church in that part of northeast Texas known as the Palestine district, and comprising twenty-six counties, will be held at Long View, Gregg county, August 31-September 2. J. A. Holton, the pastor there, sends a hearty invitation to enjoy the hospitality of the church and learn what there is in store for consecrated workers in this large field of great possibilities.

—The dedication of our church at Marble Falls, Texas, took place on August 16. We have not yet received the particulars.

—W. A. Meloan, who is at Eureka Springs, Ark., for his health, is supplying the pulpit in that city while he remains there, T. L. Young having been called to California.

—Roy Linton Porter has closed his first year with the church at Baton Rouge, La., receiving a unanimous call to remain indefinitely. This he has accepted, but has refused to take the month's vacation voted to him.

—J. T. Ogle, of Paris, Texas, who recently closed a two weeks' meeting at New Boston, reports that this place, with one or two other adjacent towns, will be able to employ a preacher, and that it will be a good work. Those interested should write to C. A. Wheeler, New Boston, Texas.

—C. R. Wolford has accepted a unanimous call from the church at Blandinsville, Ill. He has preached at Indiana Harbor for the past several months, while completing his course at the University of Chicago, and during that period eleven were added to the membership—five by confession and baptism.

—J. E. Lynn returns to Warren, Ohio, in time to occupy his pulpit at the Central Church next Lord's day. En route from Colorado, where he has been spending five months in recuperation by leave of and with expenses of himself and family paid by his church, he spent a week at the Winona Bible conference.

—A Men's Brotherhood was organized recently in the First Church, Joplin, Mo., where W. F. Turner is minister. It starts with fifty members. A banquet was held at which G. L. Peters and J. W. Famuliner, both of Joplin, H. W. Barnett, of Webb City, and D. W. Moore, of Carthage, responded to toasts. Evangelist W. E. Harlow and helpers, Fred G. Dakin and wife and Miss Helen Hite, will hold meetings in this church in October.

—Ben F. Hill, who some months ago left Missouri to take charge of the work at Okmulgee, Okla., has been having a busy time there. A $3,000 home for the preacher has been built, ten added to the fellowship, the Bible school enrollment increased to 80, and a teacher training class is to be organized next month. Brother Hill and his son Harry can be engaged for a meeting in September. He is to hold his own meeting at Okmulgee in November.

—William Remfry Hunt sails from England to China early in September, and his family also return after furlough. They have spent their vacation largely in England, where their relatives reside. They were in America a few weeks. The Seventh Street Church, of Richmond, Va., supports Brother Hunt. This church was greatly stirred by his recent visit to them. Brother Hunt's new book, "Heathenism Under the Searchlight," has evoked wide and favorable comment in England.

—The beautiful new building at Findlay, Ohio, which is to be the church home of the Central Church of Christ, is being rapidly completed. It is to be dedicated on September 20, by F. M. Rains. Pastor G. H. Sims hopes that there will be no debt remaining. Seven months ago the congregation met in a hall without a dollar to begin the work upon. Eight months later it will possess one of the most beautiful and comfortable churches in the city. Those who feel it in their heart to have fellowship in this work, may communicate with Brother Sims, or Dr. C. R. Griner, treasurer.

—H. A. Pearce informs us that Elbert Taylor and Elmer Schenk go to Oklahoma Christian University, where the latter is in his senior year. These two young men are products of the church at Lamonte, Mo., which is very proud of them. Brother Taylor has been preaching acceptably for the church at Bunceton for several months, and any church in Oklahoma that can secure his services, Brother Pearce says, will have reason to congratulate itself. Brother Schenk has been preaching regularly while in school.

—Mrs. E. T. Rummell, of New York, who represented the Christian Woman's Board of Missions at the Interdenominational Conference of Women's Missionary Boards, held at Northfield, Mass., in July, reports a most interesting and helpful time at "old Northfield." The literature of our Woman's Board excites favorable comment among the ladies of the different denominations. Prof. J. H. Derthick, of Hazel Green, Ky., made a splendid plea for the mountain people. It would be well if more of our women could attend these conferences.

—E. W. Thornton, of Long Beach, Cal., writes as follows: "Two years or more ago I united in marriage Mr. Benj. F. Gurney and Miss Lillian Blandin. Afterward I baptized Mr. Gurney. They have been active and loyal in our local work, and have now determined to enter the foreign field. Their Sunday-school teacher, one of our elders, C. A. Buffum, will give $600 toward sustaining them. The class will assist. C. S. Medbury is beginning a fine meeting with us. About September 1 I start east on a tour of Sunday-school visiting and study. F. M. Rogers, of Springfield, Ill., takes up the work here October 1."

—A brief message from Dr. Royal J. Dye gives the further information that Southern California takes up as its slogan for a Centennial aim for African missions the raising of $12,500. Toward this amount $4,500 was pledged at the convention and $600 toward the salary and traveling expenses for E. R. Moon and wife, of Castle Rock, Wash., who are to leave this autumn for the Congo. Brother Dye reports great enthusiasm, and says that gold watch chains and several rings were among the offerings. Last week we reported that Northern California had taken as its Centennial aim the raising of $10,000 for the founding of a new mission station in the great "region beyond" of the big Bosira.

—At Dalton City, Ill., a new church building was dedicated last week by Charles Reign Scoville, all the money necessary being raised. J. H. Smart, of Decatur, has been serving this church every other Sunday during the past year. The membership has been doubled and now the church house has been rebuilt. The old building was raised and a new concrete basement and foundation was put in, a good furnace installed, art glass windows added, an incline floor and modern pews, baptistry, etc., put in. In fact, there has been a complete remodeling and renewing. The total cost was $2,700. Brother Smart writes that Scoville is "a great general in dedications." In the afternoon there was a union communion service and in the evening Brother Scoville had an evangelistic meeting, when there were seven confessions.

—E. F. Daugherty, pastor at Wabash, Ind., has been spending the summer with his mother at Cedaredge, Colo., where, also, an old college chum, pastor of the First Baptist Church, resides. He occupied his pulpit at both services on one Lord's day, and received into fellowship some "scattered disciples" who are living thereabouts. He also, at the close of his discourse, gave the invitation, and received the confession of two young ladies. Pastor George had told him to conduct the service as he would his own at Wabash. This was a unique experience with Brother Daugherty, which he enjoyed very much. He also writes: "A week ago yesterday I was in the morning service at Grand Junction with Pastor McCartney, and heard the good confession made on the part of the new wife of Arthur Wake, former singer for Yeuell. On Monday night I was in Charles Stout's tent meeting at Fruita, where he was in fine shape for a new organization after three weeks' effort with about thirty-five." Brother Daugherty returns to his work in Wabash the first Sunday in September.

—F. M. Rogers, pastor of the West Side Church, Springfield, Ill., has accepted a call from the church at Long Beach, Cal., where E. W. Thornton, who takes special work, has been. The removal of Brother Rogers is deplored by his church and the citizens of that vicinity. No church in the residence district has grown so rapidly as the one which he has been serving. Organized only six years ago, it has received 804 into its membership. There is a splendid property, free from indebtedness, the last note having been cancelled two years ago. During Brother Rogers' pastorate of four years, the congregation has expended for local work $18,135 and for missions and benevolence $4,135. In its department work it has made a fine showing. Some time ago the congregation showed its appreciation of the minister by voting him a unanimous call for three years, with promise of annual increase of salary if the work continued to grow. He has been elected to the presidency of the Ministerial Association of the city, for two years was a member of the State Board of Missions, and for the same period secretary of the Fifth Missionary district.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Having just read the article of Brother Ames, as quoted in your "Notes and Comments," may I give you "just a piece of my mind"?

I have been a reader—and lover—of "The Christian-Evangelist" since I first set foot on these shores in 1882. During this quarter of a century I have certainly failed to mark the slightest inclination towards "the reception of unimmersed members of other churches into an associate membership in our own congregations." As to "a savage attack" on Brother G. A. Campbell, or any one else, why, Brother Ames, that word is singularly infelicitous, I had almost said that "savage" was a "ferocious" choice of a word. A "savage" attack in the pages of "The Christian-Evangelist"! I should as soon expect the pall of night to fall from the midday sun. No, through years I have seen the same kindly spirit towards those who differ; the same frank readiness to let them express their views; the same generous desire to co-operate with any, with all, when co-operation would not seem to be sacrifice of principle or disloyalty to the Lord Christ; the same unswerving allegiance to "the faith once for all delivered to the saints." And over all and through all the richness, the deepening richness, which ripening years of growing grace and love and wisdom bring. Now, these are the distinguishing features which I have seen in "The Christian-Evangelist" all along the years. And they have made it to me, as to multitudes, a dear and trusted friend and guide.

So I wish the Editor Godspeed, and "some sweet day," a very long way off, I hope, may he rest from his labors and especially from all unmerited reproaches.

St. Louis, Mo. G. E. Ireland.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Unadilla, Neb., August 24.—Great victory; 35 added; meetings continue; William Thompson, evangelist, strong man in the right work.—M. G. E. Bennett.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Butler, Ind., August 24.—I dedicated the new and remodeled church here in my old home town, where my parents and relatives are members. Morning and afternoon services in the grove, and undoubtedly the greatest throng that ever assembled for a religious service in Butler. Dedicatory service in the new church at night raised $66 more than total indebtedness. S. B. Braden, our pastor here, is doing grand work. Butler is also the home of Brother Sturgis and Brother Haley, two of our best singing evangelists. They assisted in the music yesterday. We had eleven confessions at the night services.—Chas. Reign Scoville.

Oklahoma.

The state convention is just at hand—August 24-28. It will be at Shawnee, where a new and commodious building has recently been completed. It will be the greatest convention in our history and the first one for Greater Oklahoma. Frank L. Van Voorhis and the Shawnee Disciples are making ample preparations to welcome and to entertain it.

The Sixth Missionary District was organized at Custer City August 10, with the following officers: President, George Wolfe, Weatherford; vice-president, A. R. Davis, Clinton; corresponding secretary, S. A. Cook, Custer; treasurer, W. E. Bates, Thomas. Executive committee, Dr. W. W. Parker, Custer; Dr. Hale, Weatherford, and E. M. Pinkerton, in addition to the officers of the district board.

The day for the church extension offering is at hand. We "point with pride" to Oklahoma as a demonstration of what a glorious work the church extension is doing. It is the solution of the problem in Oklahoma and other Western states. In more than 100 instances it has enabled a struggling band of Disciples to become housed. It saves years of struggling in a hall or schoolhouse. Oklahoma will be filled with everlasting gratitude for the help given by the church extension board. The economy in handling this fund is a marvel. The brotherhood may well be proud of the fidelity of the board. All the churches that have been helped should regard it a privilege as well as a duty to have fellowship in the offering. Fifty towns in Oklahoma await the assurance of help before starting to build. A liberal offering from the churches will enable the extension board to respond to our calls for help.

The Hon. Dick T. Morgan has been nominated for Congress on the Republican ticket in the Second District. Last autumn the moral vote of Oklahoma, under the guidance of the Anti-Saloon League, was given to the Democrats, because they gave Prohibition to Oklahoma. The same vote will be given to Brother Morgan in the Second District because he is a good Christian, a clean man who will not resort to an unmanly thing to further political interests. Brother Morgan has been the president of our state convention for fifteen years.

Randolph Cook has taken the pastorate of the Enid church. He is an organizer and is bringing much vigor to bear in the work of building up a great university church.——During successive Sundays dedications will occur at Avard, Pawhuska, Wann and Helena.——Prof. C. M. Bliss has moved from El Reno to Oklahoma City, where he will establish a conservatory of music.——W. M. LeMay and W. L. E. Shane, students of the university at Enid, have just returned from a tour of the Holy Land and will continue their course in the university.——A largely increased attendance will be at the university this year. The brotherhood is gratified with the splendid work done last year by the university.

J. M. Monroe,
Corresponding Secretary Western District.

HOME MISSIONARY NOTES.

We have likewise received $500 on a Permanent Named Memorial Fund, which completes the fund to be a memorial for Daniel Wirebaugh,—Ohio. The interest on this fund will perpetually guarantee the support of a missionary. What monument so noble or enduring as a preacher of the Good News! Commend this plan to your friends.

Our receipts feel the summer slump and the hard times. We have received as much money as last year at this time, but our gain of about $20,000 reported earlier in the year, is about wiped out. It will require a strong effort to report as much in New Orleans as was reported in Norfolk last year. We urge all churches, schools, and societies not having sent an offering, to do so at the earliest possible date. Our books close September 30. American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The American Christian Missionary Society has received a bequest of $1,000 from the estate of the late H. N. Hewitt, of Ohio. Brother Hewitt did not mention this in his will, but told members of his household that he wanted to do more for missions. This desire of the sick man was made his will by the heirs, who, through Bro. W. H. Boden, of Athens, Ohio, sent us the money. We accept it as a gift for special work, and will use it for the support of a preacher in Harrisburg, Pa., so that our missionary in that important capital city will be supported by the "H. N. Hewitt Memorial Gift." What a commendable example—the unusual action of these heirs!

Northern California Convention

We had a great convention at Santa Cruz. Great in numbers, one of our very largest; great in the good things provided, as practically all our regular convention-goers agree that this was the best program ever given, and great in the reports of the year's work. Secretary D. A. Russell's report showed more money raised than ever before in recent years—$4,307—and had the money raised by our evangelists in the field been counted in, as is the case in most of our states, the total would have gone to $7,500. The report also showed 925 persons added to the churches under the work of the State Board of Missions, and in a general way more church houses erected and of a better character than ever before in a like period. Considering the times, it was a wonderful report. Great credit is due the churches, the missionaries on the field, and the indefatigable state secretary, D. A. Russell, that it is so. There was a deficit of $2,200, of which $750 is due from the A. C. M. S., which can not be remitted until our churches generally remit to the mother society. The balance of the deficit was laid before the convention at Santa Cruz as a matter deserving attention. To start the ball, State Secretary Russell himself pledged $250 of it, and the balance was raised in just sixteen minutes and a half, amid great enthusiasm.

Among the good things on our program were a speech on "Civic Righteousness" by the great graft prosecutor, Francis J. Heney, a strong address by Mrs. Louise C. Kelley, two sermons by Charles S. Medbury, a talk by A. C. Smither, and addresses by Mr. and Mrs. Royal J. Dye, of Bolenge, Africa, were slipped in several times where a gap in the program afforded it, and always to our great profit.

A particularly splendid feature was a business men's banquet, which was held at the Sea Beach Hotel. The attendance was large. E. W. Darst was chairman of the committee of arrangements. H. W. Brunk acted as toastmaster, and Charles C. Chapman, of Los Angeles, made the principal address. Several other prominent business men spoke, and it was voted a rare treat and the beginning of things still larger of the same order.

There never was a better spirit at one of our conventions. The idea that we who plead for unity must ourselves be a unit, that unity is as unity does, and that unity in the doing expresses itself in the closest co-operation of all our missionary, Bible school, educational and journalistic interests, was a dominant one throughout, and it is safe to say that the Disciples of Christ in California were never so determined to be one in deed and in truth, as well as in spirit, as now.

The State Board of Missions elected was as follows: Peter Colvin, Santa Rosa; G. A. Moorehead, Watsonville; J. R. Perkins, Fresno; H. J. Loken, Colusa; Dr. R. L. Rigdon and Frank S. Ford, San Francisco, and P. C. Macfarlane, Alameda.

The convention also availed itself of a provision of the State Constitution and elected a Sunday-school board to look after our Sunday-school interests with a view to more efficient development of this part of our work, and a closer articulation of it with our other interests, to the end that they all may be one. The new Sunday-school board is a very representative one, and if memory serves the writer is as follows: George W. Brewster, Healdsburg; W. F. Reagor, Sacramento; Mrs. M. L. Westover, Fresno; Mrs. W. E. Taft, Alameda; Chas. H. Waterman, San Jose; C. W. Jopson, Stockton; Will H. Brown, Oakland. The board organized by electing George W. Brewster president, and Mrs. W. E. Taft secretary. The names of vice-president and treasurer are not known to me. The individual programs of the Christian Endeavorers, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and the Sunday-school department were each admirable of their kind.

Among the new preachers whom our people heard for the first time at a state convention were I. N. McCash, late of Iowa, now at Berkeley; J. R. Perkins, late of Paris, Mo., now at Fresno, and D. F. Stafford, late of Louisville, now at Watsonville.

A great feature of the convention this year was the music, which, under the direction of Shirley Shaw, was a chorus of one hundred voices and frequent solos, quartets and the like, was a continual source of delight and of spiritual blessing. Too much praise can not be given Brother Shaw for his really wonderful leading. "A second Alexander," said some one, having in mind Mr. Torrey's great associate.

As expected, the piece de resistance of the convention was the great course of lectures on "The Heart of the Gospels," by the brilliant and scholarly George Hamilton Combs. From the hour when he began his first lecture by having the congregation sing with him "Nearer, My God, to Thee," he became the man of the hour, and night after night he drew aside the veil and showed us the mysteries of the Gospel as it is in Christ Jesus.

There were many other features of the convention well worth mentioning, but space forbids. Something, especially, should be said of the Loyal Sons' part in the Sunday-school program, but the writer was compelled to miss this and leave it for others to write of. Almost without exception speakers kept their appointments upon the program, and in every instance the thing done was of high order.

It was truly a great convention, and as it is now a part of the closed-up record of the church year we begin again to go, remembering the injunction of our Lord, "And as ye go, preach." P. C. Macfarlane.

If you attended our last convention by the sea, and if you could have reviewed our church work in California as my wife and I did—for we have not missed a convention for 35 years, more than any other living persons—you would have said this is surely a record breaker.

The reports showed more money raised, more churches built and more additions to the church than any previous year of our history in California. It is certainly one of the delights of life to meet with the Christian people in that beautiful Garfield Park by the sea.

The convention began on a broad sea level, with the motto, "Stand by the Work," with a program brim full of good things. In fact the good things began two days before the appointed time, when Dr. Royal Dye and wife spoke of their work in Africa in both the Tabernacle Church and the city church the same day. As the work of the general program began to be filled up the tide rose higher and higher each day and when the convention seemed to set on the crest of the highest waves, crowned with a halo of delight, it left the jubilants of the tide-water and started up the mountains with cheers and acclaim at every step till it rested on the Mount of Transfiguration, there to view the great landscape of possibilities that open up to the churches of California. Our evangelists, Darst and Brown, have done a good work. They will be retained and one or two more be added if possible. The number of delegates was larger than ever before. The Christian Endeavorers had a good day. Their "Student Loan Fund" is increasing. By it they are enabled to help young men through "Berkeley Bible Seminary." One evening was devoted to the graduating exercises of the Bible Seminary. Everything was first-class and six diplomas were awarded, and all the young men are worthy young preachers and would do honor to any institution. They are all at work.

Our Christian missionary women, with Sisters Murphy and Brunk at the head of affairs, gave us a fine program. The ubiquitous, silver-tongued orator, Sister Kelley, of Kansas, added much to the interest of the women's work. Her readiness to develop possibilities and overcome difficulties made her presence invaluable. Brother Bentley, who is engaged in the Oriental work, gave great encouragement in his report of the conversion of the Chinese and the funds raised for a hospital and school. The Chinese themselves are becoming interested in the movement and will lend a helping hand to complete the plans now on the way by Brother Bentley. Then when Thomas G. Pictou, of Woodland, called together the Sunday-school workers another feast of good things was before us, and a crowd of Sunday-school workers assembled to gather new inspirations. One afternoon was devoted to the "Loyal Sons" with a program running over. This is a department of Sunday-school introduced by one of the greatest Sunday-school workers in the state, Will H. Brown. Their themes, "Young Men in the Sunday-school." Their motto, "The Other Fellow." Their text, "Remember now thy Creator in the Days of thy Youth." Their colors are "blue and white." Their emblem, "Shield and Sword."

Our convention was delighted and greatly benefited by George H. Combs' lectures, Brother Medbury's sermons and the addresses of I. N. McCash, who has lately located with the Berkeley church.

The business men's banquet at the "Sea Beach Hotel," was a brilliant success. Bros. C. C. Chapman and A. C. Smither, of Los Angeles, were the chief speakers. They, with the other speakers, gave inspiration to the business man as to his possibilities as a worker in the Lord's vineyard. Dr. Royal J. Dye and his blessed wife gave heavenly inspiration to the whole convention. The people hung on their words as nectar droppings from the sanctuary of the Lord. Our convention made a move to raise $10,000, asking Southern California to join hands with us to open a new mission in Africa.

One unique feature of the music was that there were present a quartette of the old College Glee Class that sang together fifty years ago in Abingdon College. They were: J. M. Martin, of Los Angeles; J. Durham, of Irvington; Mrs. Annie Bradbury Fisher, of Pacific Grove; Mrs. Mary Harris Thompson, of Lodi. They sang Brother Fillmore's "No More Goodbyes." We were called on to repeat the song on the last Saturday of the convention when our oldest preacher in the state, J. D. Wilmot, preached an excellent sermon on his ninetieth birthday. The music of the C. W. B. M. was ably conducted by Sister Elda Cutler, of Palo Alto.

The presence and greetings of J. J. Haley, who has lately cast his lot among the fruits and vines of San Joaquin county, were a delight to all our church workers. We hope the fruits will so rejuvenate him that his voice will echo all through that fertile valley.

Another very important brother met with us for the first time, Professor Stairs, who comes to take a place as instructor in the Berkeley Bible Seminary. We gave him a warm greeting, and hope he will hang up his hat and stay with us till we whiten his locks with the almond blossoms. Our Baptist brethren held their convention at the same time at Twin Lakes, east of Santa Cruz. There was an interchange of visitors.

Our Presbyterian brethren were in session at the same time on their Mount Hermon, ten miles from Santa Cruz. They had an interdenominational conference on missions in which Doctor Dye, Sisters Kelley, Murphy and Brunk were programed to take a part.

Another interesting feature of our convention was at the Christian Endeavor sunrise prayer-meeting on Endeavor Rock, on the beach, when several young people came forward and offered themselves as God's messengers to carry the gospel to foreign lands. Both of our great universities were represented by them.

Santa Cruz is the place for conventions. Its facilities for enjoyment and work are unexcelled. During last year a concrete walk six feet wide has been built through California street to the park around Errett circle, down Garfield avenue to the sea shore; three stores supply the wants of the Park people, a large number of beautiful cottages have been added to the Park and flowers bloom everywhere in rich profusion. A Church Extension Case

The church here is feeling very grateful to Church Extension for the help and courage which they gave us. While they thought $700 was a large debt for them to assume, they felt if it was divided into five equal annual payments, they could handle it easily, and so they thanked God and took courage.

Our Church Extension work is just what it purports to be, "Business in Christianity," and business which will return three hundred fold to the church, for when the board lends one hundred dollars, three hundred are raised on the field to go with it, and finally, when the loan has been returned, the other one hundred has been raised on the field with the interest on the same. We thus help weak churches to build by carrying their debt for them for five years, when it is returned with interest. I am sorry so few of our churches contribute to Church Extension.

Christian Church, Luther, Mich.

Brethren, may I ask you to take up this work more generally? One of our greatest needs is to be able to house our weak churches, that they may live and present the gospel in their different localities, and win souls to Christ. You will not miss the small amount you may give to this work, but it will make them happy and influential, and will honor the Christ we serve.

What has church extension done for Luther, Mich.? It is a town of about 700 inhabitants, situated in Lake county, on the Manistee & Grand Rapids Railroad. Ten years ago a Church of Christ was organized here under the labors of Judson Brown. The problem of building a house of worship proved to be a very difficult one, as the church only numbered eighty members, and as it was eighty miles north of Grand Rapids it was in a comparatively new country. This little organization has from the first been compelled to be self-supporting, and has responded to the calls from our different societies for mission work. The little church felt she had about all she could carry to do this. Then, to add to this, the expense of building a house seemed to be a greater burden than she could bear. But, after much consultation and prayer, the work was undertaken. We needed about $2,500. A subscription of $1,000 was raised, and the Church Extension Board kindly granted us a loan of $700. We proceeded to build a neat little brick structure 36x46, raising the other $800 while building. When it was completed and the people of the place could see what a nice little structure it was, they said it was an ornament to the town, and at its dedication we easily secured pledges enough to pay the debt remaining on the house. Then just think of this problem: When we shall have builded hundreds of church houses and some careful financiers begin to ask, "Are we not running out of money?" "How much have we now?" we may answer, just as much as we had before building those houses. We may build thousands of houses and still this fund is not consumed. I ask every Christian business man, is it not wise to invest something in such an enterprise as this? It is like the widow's meal. The more houses we build the more money we have.

Brethren, this is not merely an opportunity, but a duty. Please let us esteem it a privilege. Then thank God for the privilege of having fellowship in this work. Just consider it an open door which God has kindly opened for our benefit, and thank him for it.

John Grice.

Western Canada Convention

What was pronounced the best convention of the Western Canada Christian Missionary Association was recently held in the Church of Christ, Winnipeg. It was the ninth annual convention and reached high water mark in the splendid spirit manifested and the magnificent level maintained by the addresses and papers given. Ernest C. Mobley, pastor of the Winnipeg church, presided.

The first address was delivered by Ernest C. Mobley on "Christian Work in England." He pointed out five distinct disadvantages and five conspicuous advantages incident to successful Christian work in England, closing with a parable of the Thames as a symbol of the origin and history of Christianity, and a prophecy of its future in England.

A. McMillan, retiring corresponding secretary and treasurer, presented a carefully compiled report. Brother McMillan was warmly commended by the convention for the thorough manner in which he had collected statistics.

The splendid report of J. A. L. Romig, superintendent of missions, was inspiring to all. His outline of the union propaganda and the marvelous strides during the year in actual unions between Baptists and Disciples, thrilled every one present. He told, in a concrete way, of the great moral and spiritual transformations effected in consequence of different unions. He related how that confirmed atheists had been converted and were now teaching in the Sunday-schools. He illustrated how the work of brethren Marshall, Bennett, and Dafoe among the Baptists had been abundantly blessed of God. There are ten actual union churches in the West doing work for the Master, harmoniously, satisfactorily and successfully.

M. P. Hayden read a great paper on "One Hundred Years of Restoration History." The convention voted to put it in tract form for general distribution in Western Canada. The "Free Press," one of Winnipeg's leading dailies, printed most of the address in good form, thus getting the history and growth of this wonderful movement before many thousands of people.

The C. W. B. M. session carried the convention to the mountain height of spiritual enthusiasm. Mrs. Chas. Cornelius, of Winnipeg, presided with her usual grace and dignity, Mrs. Craig, of Buffalo, N. Y., read a fine paper, and Mrs. Van Hagadorn, of Kenora, and Miss Yeuill, of Portage la Prairie, made good talks. Mrs. Craig created a Western Canada C. W. B. M. organization, with Mrs. Romig, of Portage la Prairie, as president.

The real climax was reached on Wednesday night, when the convention was held enrapt by two masterful addresses—one by Dr. W. T. Stackhouse, superintendent of Baptists missions in Western Canada, and the other by our own W. J. Wright.

Those readers who were swept on by the manifest sincerity and genuine eloquence of Mr. Stackhouse at our last International Convention, can understand the treat that was ours. It was a great address by a great man on a great, broad, Christian theme, and enthusiastically endorsed by the entire convention.

W. J. Wright is known to all. The plea shone brilliantly in its superb presentation by him that night. Wright is every inch a man—a real prince of the King, and will make the A. C. M. S. rank first among our national enterprises. May the loyal sons of this royal priesthood help answer the yearnings of his heart by making the American Christian Missionary Society equal to out greatest missionary organizations.

The symposium on work among the Baptists by our evangelists was of unusual interest, since it brought out from different view points the striking similarity between the two bodies. This was participated in by J. W. Marshall, of Chicago, H. Gordon Bennett, of Kansas City, W. F. Dafoe, of Winnipeg, and J. A. L. Romig, of Portage la Prairie.

M. P. Hayden was elected president, J. A. L. Romig, superintendent of missions, and Ernest C. Mobley corresponding secretary and treasurer for the ensuing year.

Winnipeg, Can. Ernest C. Mobley.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Kansas, Wyoming and Montana.

I found the work in my home church in very good condition. Ellis Purlee will remain with the Coffeyville church and plans are being laid for a big revival this fall and a large work.

August 1 and 2 I visited Sheridan, Wyo., a beautiful city of about 10,000 population. Our church people, under the splendid leadership of O. A. Adams, are surprising the whole community. One hundred and seven have been added to the church since January 1, 1908. About $900 has been put in improvements inside the building. The membership is over 200, and the Sunday-school numbers nearly 300. Brother Caywood, a young real estate man, is superintendent and certainly means business. The Senior Christian Endeavor has a large enrollment and the Junior will be organized this fall. On this Sunday morning I gave an address in the interest of our C. W. B. M. work. In response to an invitation to become members of the association nineteen women came forward and also six people to unite with the church. Later we met to perfect the organization and two more women with four men gave their names, making in all twenty-five charter members. The church is planning for a revival in October when Wilson and Miller will be with them.

From Sheridan I left for my work at Joliet, Mont., spending one day in Billings, arriving in time to help about thirty of our church people give Brother Jordan and his wife a "pounding." The prospects for a splendid meeting at Joliet are good. O. J. Shanklin and his wife have thoroughly prepared for the revival, having visited every home and given personal invitations to these services. Brother Shanklin has been here eight years. Every Lord's day he preaches three sermons, riding twenty-five miles, and attends two Sunday-schools. We need more such workers in Montana.

Kentucky.

Many of our preachers and active workers are away from home at the seashore, at lake sides, along rivers, in the mountains, in the country, here, there and everywhere, some even across the ocean, our leaders are resting and pleasure-seeking. This puts the work at much disadvantage. Recently in a city church very many of our best workers were conspicuous by their absence.

Our work of Kentucky missions goes bravely on in spite of short receipts. The secretary was busy all the month of July at home and abroad seeking to keep the work before the people. The total amount is $406.52, and of this amount $167.51 went to a special field that gave it for county work—only the remaining $239.01 being available for the payment of salaries to our corps of men. This was about one-third the amount needed to meet the month's expenses.

W. J. Evans says that Lebanon Junction is showing some improvement.——South Louisville will lose Edw. B. Richey September 1. About $800 raised recently on the debts.——Arlington Heights mission, Lexington, has had 26 additions during the year. Prof. H. L. Calhoun preaches for them Sunday nights and a student supply is had for morning service.——Bromley is reported by Louis A. Kohler as showing some improvement. Forty-five added is a part of the results of the work of D. G. Combs. He has helped in building a house of worship at Omer. It will be paid for at completion. He is now unable to preach—has to rest.——Ten added in Breathitt county by J. B. Flinchum; house to be dedicated soon that he has helped to build.——Z. Ball has added 34 during the month of July and James Lunsford has been with him some. He had 24 additions.——C. M. Summers finds it necessary on account of the financial conditions to preach one Sunday elsewhere than Jackson. It is hoped that Beattyville will use the date.——Nine added by W. L. Lacy and an active campaign ahead of him.——A. Sanders reports progress good. Ministerial association formed at Paintsville, of which he is president.——Seven added in the work of Robert Kirby in Cumberland county.——Twenty-five added by W. J. Cocke in meetings in Fleming and Garrard counties. A good month in finances for him.——Three confessions at Jellico, as reported by R. G. Sharrer. Plans being made by church and preacher for future work.——Fifty added in work of J. W. Masters. Church at Harlan Courthouse organized with 48 members. House to be dedicated second Sunday in September.——Fifteen added by H. L. Morgan in his Southeastern Kentucky field.——A dozen added in the work of J. P. Bicknell. This work is in Wolfe, Morgan and Menifee counties.——Latonia does well in midsummer and Harlan C. Runyon goes right on through the heated term.——Lebanon is improving house at cost of about 3,000.——Work going on as usual at Campbellsville.——H. H. Thompson is pushing the work in Pike county, with hope of good results in summer and fall campaign.

Brethren of Kentucky, what kind of report shall we make at Hopkinsville as to our support of this great and inspiring work? If we are compelled to report as our books show now we will be ashamed before our brethren of Western Kentucky. We urge every church to lend a hand now.

H. W. Elliott,
Sulphur, Ky. Secretary.

Kansas.

Organized work in Kansas is fifty years old this year. We hold our jubilee convention in Topeka October 22-28. The Auditorium will seat 4,000 people and has a $10,000 pipe organ. The Editor of "The Christian-Evangelist" will be one of the speakers.

The Kansas Christian Missionary Society's report of work will be better than the one of last year in the number of additions added to the church and for the enthusiasm created in Bible school work. Eighteen churches have contributed double their apportionment of last year. Longer lists have equaled their apportionment of last year and there are a number of churches yet to make offerings before September 30, the close of the missionary year.

State Evangelist B. E. Youtz is holding a series of meetings in Southwestern Kansas. He closed at Garden City with 17 additions and is now at Pierceville. He will probably go next to Deerfield, Kan. O. L. Adams is in a meeting at Potter. Edward Clutter is having a successful meeting at Latham. There are but few meetings in progress this month.

A union evangelistic movement, led by W. E. Beiderwolf, is to sweep Kansas between September 1 and June 1. Plans have been put into effect to evangelize even the small towns. A number of evangelists will be brought in from other states and Kansas preachers will be used. Christian churches should awake to their opportunities during thees meetings and systematically gather results as they close.

George E. Lyon,
Superintendent Kansas Missions.

National Christian Endeavor Conference and Rally.

For a number of years Bethany Park, Ind., has been the mecca for Indiana Disciples, the last of July and first half of August. Year by year the attendance has increased until this assembly has come to be regarded as the National Chautauqua of the Disciples. The meeting at the park this year was of unusual interest.

On Friday, August 7, a great conference was conducted in the interest of Christian Endeavor. The conference was planned and presided over by Claude E. Hill, Mobile, Ala., national superintendent of Christian Endeavor for the Disciples of Christ. While the attendance at this meeting was not as large as on the preceding days, still the people were there in sufficient numbers to make the meeting both interesting and profitable. The program was exceptionally strong and among the many who participated in the conference were the following: Austin Hunter, Indianapolis; John E. Pounds, Hiram, O.; R. H. Waggoner, Cincinnati; Stephen J. Corey, Cincinnati; W. R. Warren, Pittsburg; Earl Wilfley, St. Louis; Miss Mattie Pounds, national Junior superintendent, Indianapolis; H. A. Denton, Cincinnati, and J. L. Deming, Norwalk, O.

It was an enthusiastic gathering of the leaders in young people's work among the Disciples. In all that was said no note of pessimism was sounded. The conviction prevailed that Christian Endeavor has not only rendered a large service to the church, but that it promises infinitely more for the future. In Christian Endeavor work the Disciples are rapidly forging to the front. And it looks now as if their Centennial aim, "First place by 1909," would be realized.

The success of this conference is a prophecy for larger things during the year and for a greater meeting at Bethany Park next summer.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Harrison, Aug. 20.—One added by letter and one from another religious body baptized since our meeting. This lasted two weeks and was conducted by H. A. McCarty, of Little Rock, assisted by his daughter with the music. There were 34 additions by letter and primary obedience. Brother McCarty is a forcible speaker and did good work.—R. A. Staley.

Okolona, Aug. 17.—In this little town of 500 people we have had 34 additions to date, 24 having been immersed in the Little Missouri River. E. S. Allhands is doing an excellent work in this country. His godly life and persistent efforts have largely made possible the victory. We continue another week, beginning at Prescott on Aug. 23 with R. A. Highsmith. I have some open dates.—Percy G. Cross.

Georgia.

Harrison, Aug. 17.—We have held a meeting at Bethesda Church, Washing county, for five days. There were 35 additions—18 by baptism. The church has been revived and the members are rejoicing. T. J. Linkhous is the pastor. I am now at Harrison, Ga., where the meeting is two days old with eight added. The prospects are for a great meeting as we do not have standing room to spare. The whole town is stirred. J. H. Jensen is the pastor.—William B. Shaw, evangelist.

Illinois.

Rock Falls, Aug. 17.—There were two baptisms at the close of our regular service. We are having a fine attendance during the warm weather.—C. F. Ladd.

White Hall, Aug. 21.—There have been five additions here not reported.—Herbert A. Carpenter, pastor.

Indiana.

La Fontaine, Aug. 16.—Three added since last report—two by confession and one from the Baptists. Every department is in good working order.—A. L. Martin.

Hammond, Aug. 22.—Four added here—three by confession and baptism and one from another religious body.—C. J. Sharp, minister.

Middleton, Aug. 20.—We had two baptisms in the last two weeks. I take a two-weeks' vacation.—L. E. Murray.

Iowa.

Newton, Aug. 17.—Two young men added since last report by confession and baptism. We are preparing for a tabernacle meeting to begin September 6 with the Smalls and St. John. We are preparing for a great meeting and advertising extensively.—W. H. Betts.

Kansas.

Garnett, Aug. 20.—One recently added by baptism and four by letter.—F. W. Collins, pastor.

Chanute, Aug. 17.—I am not taking a vacation. We had a full house last night and five added by letter and statement. There were two additions a week ago.—G. W. Kitchen.

Kentucky.

Augusta, Aug. 18.—I closed a meeting at Union City last Sunday night. There were seven added—five by confession and baptism.—J. W. Ligon.

Ghent, Aug. 17.—We closed a successful two-weeks' meeting at Whites Run Church, there being six confessions. W. J. Clark, of Carrollton, did the preaching in a satisfactory way. He always does substantial work and we hope to have him again.—J. B. Yager, minister.

Morning View, Aug. 17.—I closed a nine-days' meeting at Flat Fork, in Carter county, with seven added. At the regular services yesterday at Bank Lick Church there were 14 added—13 by baptism and one by statement. We raised $530 for state work.—J. P. Bornwasser.

Ruddles Mills, Bourbon County, Aug. 18.—The local Christian church has completed a successful protracted meeting. J. W. McGarvey, Jr., presenting the New Testament of salvation to large audiences with earnestness and spiritual power. There were 47 additions—31 of them being by confession. I had charge of the singing, rendering solos every evening.—Edmond A. Osborne, minister.

Missouri.

Canton, Aug. 20.—Our meeting of 19 days at Breckenridge, Ill., closed with 11 additions—8 by confession, two reclaimed, one by statement. C. F. Pearce did the preaching 11 days.

Kearney, Aug. 18.—Edward Clutter, a fine evangelist and a good, clean man, has stirred this town and men and women are responding to the invitation.—C. C. Atwood.

Tipton, Aug. 17.—We closed a good meeting six miles north of here. Harry Hill, of Okmulgee, Okla., lead the singing and did good work. It was a tent meeting out in the country. With four members to start with we had 25 confessions, and organized a congregation of 27 members. A good building is assured.—Joseph Gaylor.

Chaffee, Aug. 19.—A tent meeting conducted by B. H. Whiston and wife, and lasting 30 days, resulted in 62 additions to the church. We had 19 charter members to start with. A lot has been secured and arrangements have been made for a building. We ask the prayers of all for our ultimate success.—Mrs. F. A. Curtis.

Canton, Aug. 17.—We closed a protracted meeting at Union, Monroe County, with 19 confessions and baptisms and two added by letter, V. T. Wood, of Canton, doing the preaching. He is an untiring worker and is now in a meeting at Tangier, Okla. I begin a meeting for Brother Wood to-morrow at Peaksville, Mo.—A. L. Cole.

Oregon, August 10.—J. W. McGarvey, of Lexington, Ky., has closed a two-weeks' meeting here, his preaching being all we could wish. Though we had but five additions—two by letter and three by confession—I am sure the church will reap a great harvest from the seed that has been sown.—Bert H. Dawson.

Lawrenceburg, Aug. 18.—Our meeting at Mt. Home church is two weeks old. There has been one addition by confession and baptism. The church is filled to overflowing. We still continue.—W. S. Hood.

Dearborn, August 20.—The Bethel Christian Church, near St. Joseph, has just closed a meeting led by Jesse Logan Wilkinson, evangelist, of Indiana, and V. E. Ridenour, singer, of Topeka, Kan. There were 19 baptisms and a strengthened church as the result of the effort. These workers are now in a meeting at Dearborn. Each is gifted in his special field.—Frank G. Richards, minister.

Breckenridge, August 21.—There were four added by statement to the church at Braymer.—E. G. Merrill.

Canton, August 21.—In our two weeks' meeting at Liberty Church, in Lincoln county, there were nine added—eight by primary obedience and one from the Baptists.—T. C. Hargis.

Triplett, August 17.—A vacation tent meeting here is eighteen days old, with 46 added—34 by baptism. Most of the converts are adults. This is the second meeting here this year. W. D. McCully is the pastor. We continue.—Louie S. Cupp, evangelist.

Columbia, August 22.—I closed a three weeks' meeting at Clarksburg, with ten additions. Chas. H. Swift, of Syracuse, N. Y., now a student at the university and also in the Bible College of Missouri, did the preaching. His messages had the logic and earnestness that were needed in a successful revival meeting. Miss Otta Stevens, of Columbia, had charge of the singing. She is a coming power in our brotherhood in song. The church work was given an impetus that will count for much.—E. B. Shively, minister.

Nebraska.

Fremont, August 17.—We had a splendid attendance yesterday evening in spite of the extreme heat. Many of the churches are closed, but I am preaching three times every Lord's day, and have training classes during the week. On August 9 I delivered the baccalaureate sermon for Fremont College, a splendid school, with from 1,200 to 1,400 pupils. Two of our elders are among its professors.—I. H. Fuller.

New York.

Buffalo, August 19.—A young man was baptized Lord's day at Forest Avenue Church. A hopeful spirit prevails.—B. H. Hayden.

North Carolina.

Beetree.—I am spending a short vacation here at my old home on Beetree Creek. I closed a little meeting of one week's duration with 34 accessions, 32 by confession and baptism and two by statement. R. S. Cressman, who is the product of Beetree, will preach here once a month.—L. B. Coggins.

Ohio.

Marion, August 17.—One added by statement. Our work is gaining headway slowly.—Charles E. Smith, minister.

Clinton, August 9.—David D. Dick and wife are in a meeting here. They have some open dates. Write them at Cuyahoga Falls.—S. P. Moody.

Farmer, Aug. 22.—Our revival is less than a week old. We have had 48 additions and splendid audiences. Several years ago Charles Reign Scoville held two meetings here with good results, but the work has since gone down and the church has neglected to meet and break the loaf. We expect a good meeting.—I. H. Durfee and daughter, evangelists.

Oregon.

Springfield, August 17.—One added by baptism since last report.—E. C. Wigmore.

Virginia.

Enon, Aug. 8.—P. A. Cave, of Charleston, W. Va., lead us in a week's meeting at Mizpah. The interest was good and there were eight confessions, six of whom were baptized yesterday.—W. L. Burner.

Portsmouth, Aug. 18.—I assisted W. C. Wade three nights last week in a meeting at the Kola Church, Princess Anne County. There were eight confessions and three restored. Brother Wade had preached a few nights, having three confessions and a deep interest created. I. J. Spencer is with us here in a ten-days' meeting with prospects of good results.—William Burleigh.

Texas.

Wichita Falls, Aug. 17.—The Northwest Texas camp meeting closed. The attendance was large and there were 90 additions. Williams led the music.—James T. McKissick.

Van Alstyne, Aug. 22.—Two more baptisms this week, making 75 added in the past ten months. The church has granted me a vacation which will be spent in Kansas and Missouri. Our meeting, conducted by Richard Martin and L. D. Sprague, closed with 45 additions.—G. F. Bradford.

Sulphur Springs, Aug. 22.—We have been on our vacation most of this year, but held two short meetings, neither of which has been reported. There were 22 accessions at Marietta, Okla., about half of them being baptisms. I also preached a week for Brother McCarthy, at Leonard, Texas, where there were seven additions—six of them baptisms. We begin work at Utica, Miss. September 20, and are open for the fall and winter campaign.—John A. Stephens.

Biardstown, Aug. 19.—Our meeting closed here last night with 24 coming forward at the last invitation. This is pronounced the greatest victory our people have had in the history of the county, there being 108 additions in 20 days—about 8 baptisms. This congregation separated three years ago from the nonprogressive brethren, and from a handful now number more than 300 members. We begin at Quanah, Texas, next Sunday.—Hamlin and Daugherty.

Laying the Corner-Stone of the Missionary Training School

A thoroughly representative gathering of over five hundred Disciples from all over Indiana and from many other states was present at the corner stone exercises of the Sarah Davis Deterding Memorial Missionary Training School at Irvington. The day was ideal, and every feature of the occasion went to impress those present with the importance of this advance move in our missionary work.

As was said by Mrs. Cunningham, president of the Indiana C. W. B. M., "this school is the gift of our woman's organization to the brotherhood. It is to train our youth for increased service and efficiency on all our fields." In keeping with this thought, President McLean, of the Foreign Society, and Secretary Wright, of the American Society, gave most helpful and inspirational addresses.

President McLean declared that the building under erection was a prophecy of better things among the Disciples of Christ. "Other corner stones will be laid," he said, "because this one has led the way. This will be one of the most useful and influential buildings on the American continent. It will surpass the influence of the pyramids or of the Parthenon in the world's history. It will be a great power house from which currents of spiritual influence will go forth to transform lives and hearts in the uttermost parts of the earth."

Preceding the actual placing of the corner stone, morning and afternoon sessions were held in the Downey Avenue Church, near the school. After a brief and interesting sketch of the beginning of the training school enterprise by Mrs. Frank Wells, W. R. Warren gave the principal address of the morning, taking as his theme, "She Hath Done What She Could." Mr. Warren held that the measure of service was not quantity, but the limit of each individual's capacity. He paid a glowing tribute to the men and women whose lives have made this school possible.

"This building bears one name," he said, "but lifts a manifold memorial, as it renders a manifold service. Through it a loving daughter testifies of her sainted mother to all generations, 'She Hath Done What She Could.' But all motherhood is honored in the memorial to Sarah Davis Deterding.

"This instantly saddens our rejoicing hearts, for Helen E. Moses, who, most completely of all we have known, gave both her living and her life to her King, will not need the room that loving hearts were preparing for her. No tablets or inscriptions are needed to make this truly and perpetually a memorial, not only to her, but to other builders of this fair structure.

"This training school will furnish young missionaries more than extra technical fitness for this work abroad. It will turn back an occasional person who has volunteered for the service without sufficient knowledge of the labor to be performed, the trials to be met and the sacrifices to be made, and lacking some of the many personal qualities requisite. As Mrs. Moses put it, 'this will be a testing school as well as a training school.'

"Its students will have courses of lectures and invaluable conferences from time to time with missionaries on furlough. A material reduction will be made in the time that must elapse after reaching the field, before taking up active work even if it is not found advisable to begin language study here.

"Not the least advantages of the training school will be its close affiliation with Butler College. It will not be necessary to duplicate instructions on any subject, but all the classes of Butler will be open to the missionary students. The standards and traditions built up by many years and many mountaintop lives in the college, will become at once a part of the school's inheritance.

"In turn it will make a distinct contribution to the college through the inspiration of its instructors' lives and character, and its students' lofty purposes and ideals. Much of the missionary instruction will also be sought by the college students, particularly those preparing for the ministry."

President T. C. Howe then extended the greetings of Butler College and of the citizens of Irvington to the C. W. B. M. He complimented them on their work and the site they had chosen, and paid high tribute to Mrs. Moses, Mrs. Burgess, Mrs. Jamison and other presidents of the board whom he had known personally.

Brief talks were given by Mr. and Mrs. Menzies and Miss Vance, of India; Jasper T. Moses and Miss Vera Wise, of Mexico; W. D. Cunningham, of Japan, and by several of the home missionary workers of the C. W. B. M. who were present. The music was in charge of Miss Una Dell Berry, who sang two solos, "Far and Near the Fields Are Waving" and "Building for Eternity."

The afternoon session was opened with prayer by Mrs. Harlan. Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, in outlining the future of the work, pleaded for a high pitch of appeal to prospective missionary candidates; for nothing less than fellowship in the sacrifice and sufferings of Jesus Christ. She was followed by W. J. Wright, who said that it seemed most eminently fitting that this building, which combined the features of a home and a school, should be erected by our women, because the home is woman's peculiar sphere, and she is also supreme in the training of the young. While bemoaning the fact that the parent society, which he represented, had been so long homeless. Mr. Wright extended his heartiest congratulations that the work of the C. W. B. M. was to have the benefit of the permanency and solidity of a real home. He spoke with feeling of the reasons for such a school, and how it would develop the man with even one talent so that this talent would be used to the very best advantage in the Master's service.

President McLean's address, which has been referred to already, followed that of Secretary Wright. The audience was deeply impressed at the high spiritual ideals held forth by Mrs. Harrison and Mr. Wright, and was profoundly silent when President McLean arose. He suggested that it was time for some enthusiasm and applause, which was liberally accorded. In speaking of the great need of a home for the Foreign Society, he said that they had been obliged to move five times in the past twenty years, and that in these moves they had lost tons of valuable documents. He prophesied that the efficiency of every worker would be increased 50 per cent by the added facilities of the new building. After singing the Doxology, the audience was dismissed with prayer by Dr. A. R. Benton, and went directly to the training school site.

After the song, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," Mrs. Harlan read a long list of the articles deposited in the sealed copper box that was to go in the corner stone. These include a Bible, an American flag, copies of the first and last issues of "Missionary Tidings," a copy each of the books issued by the C. W. B. M., the "Declaration and Address," photographs of past and present national officers of the board, a signed photograph of A. McLean and Secretary Wright's autograph, beside many other documents representing the work of the society, and photographs of the most generous donors to the building fund.

The box was then lowered to its final position within the stone by Mrs. Maude D. Ferris. Prayer was offered by Allan B. Philputt and the service closed with the singing of the Doxology.

The building, which is now in process of construction, is built of colonial brick and Bedford stone, and will be 165 by 95 feet and four stories high, containing about 75 rooms. Mrs. Effie Cunningham and Mrs. Frank Wells, of Indianapolis, the Centennial committee for Indiana, have visited all the training schools of the country and are embodying in this new building the ideas gained in this tour.

There will be a well-equipped gymnasium, kindergarten rooms, domestic science and music rooms on the ground floor. On the main floor will be a museum containing curios from the different missionary fields; also the offices of the national board, missionary library and rooms for the meetings of the executive board. Class rooms and dormitories for the women will occupy the third floor, while the dormitories for the men will be on the fourth floor. Here also will be a large dining room at one end and a thoroughly modern kitchen, with a cold storage room, etc.

The school is located between Downey, University and Ohmer avenues, and in close proximity to Butler College. The college library is the only building on the plot of ground above described and as it is under the administration of the city it will be open to the students of the training school.

A Voice From the Pew.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

We read carefully and thoughtfully Brother Todd's paper and we have also read every comment, criticism and protest from evangelists and preachers we could find, some mild and some otherwise. As our viewpoint largely determines how we see things, I thought perhaps some one might be interested in a voice from the pew. Brother Todd hits and hits hard at existing evils in our evangelism. Lest some one should say I am not "loyal to our Plea," I would state that I have been in the church since childhood, forty years. I have been identified with our C. W. B. M. work for twenty-five years. I have been State C. W. B. M. organizer of our own state. I have gone into churches, conventions and evangelistic meetings for almost a score of years. I love the church and have almost given my life for it. But I believe there are some things among us we ought to grow out of. I know evangelists with big brains and big hearts whose message and every word and act honor God. I thank God for them and am ever ready to hold up their hands with prayers and offerings. But I have known others whose names have been widely heralded in our church papers, whose coarse jokes and slang phrases have brought the blush of shame to our faces, and I have known others whose sensational attacks upon other churches have so grieved and humiliated us for the time we could scarcely sleep.

To eradicate any disease is a painful process. Brother Todd, with his clear brain and courageous hand, in his diagnosis has found diseased spots in our evangelism. We are praying that God will give us men who with equal courage will find the remedy, that the world may learn that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation and needs no coarseness to emphasize or make it effectual.

AUSTIN.

John De Forest Austin, who passed to his reward July 23, at Inglewood, Cal., where he had recently made his home, was born at Rockford, Ill., June 15, 1877. In 1879 his parents moved to Nebraska. Here he received his early schooling and began the active duties of life. After graduating in the high school at Ulysses he entered Cotner University, but owing to poor health did not continue his course to the end. He was a very bright student and regretted his inability to realize his ambitions. For a time he conducted the commercial department of the college with marked success. Later he entered business with a publishing house and succeeded in making money. But his ambition from childhood had been to enter the ministry. His first work was in a mission church in Bloomington, Ill., in connection with his business in that city. Later he filled pastorates in Estherville, Ia., and Belvidere, Neb. In 1902 he entered the evangelistic field and at once became prominent on account of his success in winning souls to Christ. He was not emotional but clear in his exposition of the gospel. He was very loyal to the scriptures. His most effective meetings were held in Havelock and North Omaha. He labored in Nebraska, Kansas and California. His health, always a handicap, compelled him in 1906 to leave the field and remain at home in Bethany. He began the publication of the "Christian Reporter," which became the state paper of Nebraska. By his ability and energy he raised it to a marked success. Finding a change of climate advisable he sold his paper and removed to California about three months since. But it was too late. His work was ended. After a heroic struggle for life he passed away in the midst of his family, honored for his useful and consecrated life. He lived an intense life and always seemed to be driven with the thought that his days of work were few. Impressive funeral services were conducted at his home in California and at Bethany, Neb. His family have the sympathy of a large circle of friends.

The Favorite Range With Housewives.

In the big majority of American homes when the "range question" is brought up for discussion and final settlement, the last word is conceded to the women folks and with them is left the selection.

The housewife of experience has pronounced ideas on the subject. To her the ideal range must be one that meets her most exacting requirements. She insists that it be, above all things else, dependable. It must be a good cooker and a good baker, not one day but every day. And it must be economical in its consumption of fuel. That is a point she lays much stress upon and wants to be sure about. If it meets those requirements and she is further assured that the range is durable that is the range she wants and insists upon getting.

The inexperienced young housewife simply asks that it be a "range with a reputation."

Both the experienced and the inexperienced housewife, before deciding upon a range purchase, should examine closely into the merits of the Great Majestic Range. It is a perfect baker at all times. It saves half the fuel bill, because it is scientifically built in such a manner that no heat can escape and no cold air can enter. It has a fifteen gallon all copper reservoir which gives not only hot but boiling water. The body of the Great Majestic is made of charcoal iron, which gives it a durability that will outlast three ordinary ranges. Moreover, it is the "range with a reputation," because it has the reputation of the plant behind the range and also because there are hundreds of thousands of Majestics in use all over the country and every one is giving perfect satisfaction.

Majestic Ranges are for sale in nearly every county in forty states, but if your dealer does not handle them you should write to the Majestic Mfg. Co., of St. Louis, Mo., for their interesting booklet "Range Comparisons" and they will also tell you where you can see and examine a Majestic.

Ministerial Exchange.

D. T. Stanley, now of Little Rock, Ark., and Prof. Harry W. Miller, of Troy, N. Y., have united their forces for evangelistic work, and are making dates for the fall and winter. Address 134 Riverside avenue, Little Rock, Ark.

Churches wishing an experienced chorus leader, vocal and trombone soloist, as well as personal worker, may address A. L. Haley, Butler, Ind.

Charles R. Oakley, pastor of the church at Wauseon, O., will close almost six years of service for that church next month. He would like to hold several meetings before locating again as pastor. Any church in need of a meeting, or looking for a pastor, would do well to correspond with him before his time is taken.

Two good preachers are wanted for district evangelists. It is a splendid field, and a good opportunity for the right men. We need twelve good preachers for settled work. Address J. J. Taylor, box 397, Little Rock, Ark.

Churches within easy reach of Marshall, Mo., who can use a student preacher, may address M. Ward Ellis, 420 East Yerby street, Marshall.

Miss Lyda B. Seamands still has some time not taken for fall meetings. Those desiring evangelistic singer may address her at 217 Lobban street, Warrensburg, Mo.

Churches desiring the services of a competent evangelist, with or without singer, on reasonable terms, may address S. V. Williams, 355 Greenwood avenue, Kankakee, Ill.

Hugh T. Morrison has closed his work with the church in Lismore, New Zealand, and his address, until further notice, will be Perth, West Australia. He may remain in that state until the winter, when he will probably start for the Orient on his way back to America.

What strength and confidence comes to us as we read this grand psalm! What a mighty confession of faith it was for the author to make and what a confession of faith it has been for the countless millions of those who have dwelt "in the secret place of the Most High!" No other religion has such a psalm as this. It should be committed to memory, so that at all times of need its strong voice can speak courage and peace to our hearts and lives.

The "secret place of the Most High," the "shadow of the Almighty"—to dwell, to abide there. If no other words had ever been written for weak and weary hearts, these had been enough. No harm can find us or hurt us in such a strong refuge. No threatening shall dare to come nigh our tent, covered, as we are, in the secret place of the Most High. "He shall cover thee with his pinions, and under his wings shalt thou take refuge."

In reading this psalm one is inclined to give all these words what is called a spiritual interpretation. Why not, first of all, take "that which is natural, and then that which is spiritual?" Why should not one have freedom from fear of dark nights full of dangers as he reads verses four and five?

Why should you not be free from fear of illness when you read verses 6 and 10? Is not good health frequently a matter of a quiet heart free from fear? How many of God's people are worrying themselves sick by fearing sickness? Why not take this refuge from such fear in such a faith in the keeping power of the Almighty? If you do not have better health after reading this psalm it will be on account of your lack of faith.

Why should you worry about troubles? Read the fifteenth verse. You will not escape the common lot; you will have troubles, but, "I will be with thee in trouble, I will deliver thee and honor thee." What better friend do you need with you than the Almighty, and where are you more likely to find comfort and help than in the secret place of the Most High and in the shadow of the Almighty?

Do you recall Jesus' use of this psalm when he was in trouble? In the moment of his temptation Satan quoted verses 11 and 12. Jesus' reply indicated that in claiming these promises we are not to impose upon the power of God. God has not promised to protect a rash fool from the consequences of his folly. God had not told Jesus to cast himself down from the pinnacle of the temple. To have done so would have been to invite disaster. If God had told him to do it then angel hands would have borne him up.

Have you thought of the hymns that have been inspired by this psalm?

Luther's great hymn, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," the sweet hymn of the Hindoo convert, "In the Secret of His Presence How My Soul Delights to Hide," and our familiar hymn, "Under His Wings." What soul could help singing as it reads this psalm? Commit it to memory and have its comfort and strength.

THE BEAUTY AND BLESSEDNESS OF A HOUSE OF WORSHIP.

Topic September 2. Psalm 84.

How amiable are thy tabernacles,
O Jehovah of hosts!
My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth
For the courts of Jehovah;
My heart and my flesh crieth out
For the living God.
Yea, the sparrow hath found a house,
And the swallow a nest for herself
Where she may lay her young—
Even thine altars, O Jehovah of hosts,
My King and my God!

Blessed are they that dwell in thy house:
They will be still praising thee.
Blessed is the man whose strength is in thee;
In whose heart are the highways to Zion.
Passing through the valley of Weeping
They make it a place of springs:
The early rains covereth it with blessings.
They go from strength to strength,
Every one of them appearing before God in Zion.
O Jehovah, God of hosts, hear my prayer;
Give ear, O God of Jacob!

Behold, O God, our shield,
And look upon the face of thine anointed.
For a day in thy courts is better than a thousand.
I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God
Than to dwell in the tents of wickedness.
For Jehovah is a sun and a shield;
Jehovah will give grace and glory!
No good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly.
O Jehovah of hosts,
Blessed is the man that trusteth in thee!

If this heart-throb of devotion does not move you to worship, surely nothing that I might add would be worth while. The pulse of praise beats strong through these great processional psalms. They are the highways of praise and thanksgiving in Zion unto the ends of the earth and until the end of time. They are tender with the touch of human longing, passionate with yearning, thrilling with hope, triumphant with rejoicing. The springs of spiritual power break out of them as springs in the Valley of Weeping. They are as rain upon the parched desert. Grace and glory and strength and salvation are in the shoutings of the worshiping throngs. Beauty and blessing are the portion of God's people. Praise indeed is comely. "Blessed is the man that trusteth in thee!"

To love the house of God is a part of all true worship. As the passionate devotion of the psalmists and prophets and people of Israel gathered around the tabernacle and the temple, so should our hearts turn toward the house of God. Not always, but ordinarily, you can judge of the real devotion of men and women by their attitude toward the house of God. Indifference to the affairs and to the place set apart for worship is almost a certain sign of low spiritual aspiration. Love for the house of God represented the very best that was in the Hebrew people. The degradation of the temple court by the money-changers roused the righteous indignation of the grea Master. True he prophesied its destruction, yet with such a pathetic lamentation as showed the passionate love he cherished for the temple, in common with his own people.

To build a house unto the Lord was in the heart of David, and the work of preparation inspired him to the most devoted service of his splendid career. So our interest in the building of the "home" church, and in the work of "church extension," measures in a large or small way our love for the Christ and his Kingdom. The "highways of Zion" still run along by the country church, the village place of worship, and, despite much of foolish pride and vain-glory, through the splendid cathedrals of the crowded cities. Only let us be careful lest we substitute worship of the house for the true worship of the Lord of Hosts.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

To Make it Personal.

Most of the uses made of the "Double-up Campaign," whether for doubling schools or classes, lack one very essential thing: that of placing an individual responsibility upon each person. Here is a plan which has been found very helpful in overcoming the difficulty mentioned. After deciding upon the duration of the campaign, prepare a good-sized chart, with lettering prominent, or have the same upon a blackboard (if convenient), in the following form, if it is to be a campaign conducted by one class, the same to be kept in a conspicuous place:

DOUBLE-UP CAMPAIGN

MOTTO: "Each One Get One."

I HAVE MINE and	HERE'S HIS NAME.
Charles Smith	.....
Walter Cornell.....	....
Clyde Jenkins	.....
Will Perkins.....	....

The name of every member of the class on the roll at the beginning of the campaign should be placed on the chart, in the column as shown above, and in the opposite column, just as many blank spaces. As fast as each one brings his new scholar, place the new one's name in space opposite the name of the one who brought him. Should any bring more than one, hold on separate list for "extra measure," to be announced at end of campaign.

It would be a very dull or indifferent member of the class who would not make a sincere effort to wipe out the blank space opposite his or her name by bringing a new scholar. Will H. Brown.

Is This Your Picture?

As I sat in this teacher's class I wondered how many more were like him. He was a prominent and successful professional man in his community. I was proud to see that with it all he loved the church and was willing to share its work. He had a class of eighteen fine young men the morning I was a visitor. As I looked them over I was moved with the thought of the opportunity such a teacher had before such a class.

The lesson was the story of the loaves and the fishes, the gift of the little lad which fed five thousand people with plenty to spare. What an opportunity to that business man to impress the power of God through Christ upon these young men, and the opportunity to call them to consecrate their gifts to his service! Who can tell what might have come to the kingdom of God through such a presentation of the lesson? But what did this teacher do?

He took the most of the time to discuss the curious question why Jesus asked Philip, rather than any other disciple, "whence are we to get bread to feed the multitude?" The conclusion he drew out of the young men was, that Philip was quicker at figures than any other disciple and quickly estimated how much it would cost to feed the five thousand.

What a pity that from that day on the only thought those young men will have of that great day in the life of Jesus will be that Philip was good in arithmetic! Do you waste opportunities like that by wasting your time upon curious and nonessential questions?

Add One for Pennsylvania.

In the list of Adult Bible classes given in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST I find but two from Pennsylvania. Add one for the Third Church at New Castle. We organized it in February and have out certificate from the state association. It is now the largest class in the school with twenty-four enrolled, but plenty of chance to grow. I would like to see the Adult Bible Class page become a permanent feature of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, giving methods and plans used by different classes.

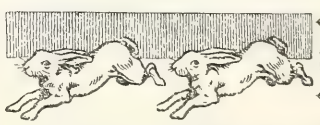
The Hammett Place Bible-school and the Second Church school, both of St. Louis, Mo., had a lively contest. The Hammett Place "Boosters" sent out post cards like these:



SHALL WE OVERTAKE THEM?

The Second Church Bible School is slightly in the lead in the contest, but Hammett Place Bible School can readily overtake and pass it if we ALL BOOST!!

In this contest "On Time" (before 9:30 A. M.) counts 3 points; "Tardy" (before 9:45 A. M.) counts 1 point; "New Pupil" counts 5 points. Visitors count the same for attendance as members.

Sunday, December 15, is Visitors' Day.

Bring your friends and neighbors. Your aid in this respect is absolutely necessary

A prize will be given to the person bringing visitors counting the greatest number of points.

Whatever You Do, Be Present Before 9:30 A. M.

Your friends,

The Solution of the Problem.

We have found the organized class to be the solution of the problem of "How to interest the adult element of the church of any community in the Bible school." My class of young married people was organized a year ago with a membership of 8, and our enrollment has reached 104—it is now 86—average attendance about 60.

Music—"The King's Business."

Words by I. U. Doust.

I'm not a stranger here
Within this Bible school,
My love for it is dear
And must not pass away.
For here we learn to be
Like him beyond the sea,
We're here on business for our King,
This is the lesson that I learn,
A lesson old but always new,
That Jesus lived and died
For weak men such as I,
O, be you faithful unto God.

This is the Church of Christ,
Where wise men young and old
Confess and serve the Lord,
And do not leave the fold.
The dear old Central Church
With us shall ever be
The place to labor for our King.
These are the teachers that I love,
Whose message fair is from above,
This say we one and all,
God bless our leaders true,
O, be you faithful unto God.

Then shall we one and all,
Wherever we may be,
At home or far away
Upon life's stormy sea—
Our prayers for thee ascend
To God who reigns above.
You'll stay in business for our King,
This is the lesson that I learn,
A lesson old but always new,
That Jesus lived and died
For weak men such as I,
O, be you faithful unto God.

Remarkable Class of Young Men.

Among the Loyal Sons classes in California, the one in the capital city, Sacramento, gives promise of becoming one of the most active, in a general way. Soon after the class organized and got well under way, Will H. Brown, of Oakland, founder of the Loyal Sons movement, visited Sacramento, and the Loyal Sons there held a special meeting in his honor. This meeting was also attended by several young men from the Presbyterian and Baptist schools of that city, who wished to investigate with a view of organizing classes of the same name in their schools. The class already organized is in the Christian church.

Of this class Mr. Brown writes: "While the class is not yet a very large one, it is already quite a remarkable one. At the time of my visit it had an enrollment of 15, with 11 of them members of the church, eight in the church choir, several serving in various capacities in the work of the church, and two of them preparing to study for the ministry, with a third one seriously contemplating the same step. Not a member of the class uses tobacco in any form, nor liquor, nor profanity. The class is evangelistic to the extent that when a new member is enrolled he is urged to attend the church services and to become a Christian. Several conversions have already resulted, one a railroad fireman, who in turn is working to enlist several of his railroad companion. The class will start a paper of 16 to 20 pages in October, and is sure of liberal advertising patronage, as quite a number of the leading firms of Sacramento are members of the Christian church. The class has a room of its own, fitted out with large desk and telephone, and tastily decorated with pictures, mottoes, etc. The present splendid foundation of the class insures a rapid and substantial growth."

Missouri Bible School Work.

Examination questions for teacher training have recently been sent to the following classes: J. J. Flint, Etterville; Roy O. Youtz, Burlington Junction; J. G. Engle, Webster Groves; W. J. Frost, Houston; Jos. M. Brewster, Aud; J. E. Todd, Osgood; George L. Peters, Joplin; C. C. Atwood, Kearney; E. N. Hargood, Mt. Vernon; E. O. Sweaney, Kidder; E. M. Peters, Rushville; F. M. Venable, Agency; C. H. Burton, Golden City; C. D. Haskell, Fredericktown, and Mr. Branstetter, Budd Park, Kansas City.

The examination papers which have been sent in have been good, and many of them fine. It is only necessary for our classes to study the lessons, drill and review, and have occasional written tests, and send in for questions frequently instead of waiting until the end of the course, to be able to pass creditably.

New classes are being reported as organized and many promised for organization in September. We want a full list of all our training classes in Missouri by September 1. Be sure and send yours in.

Diamond now has an organized class of young women.

The Dr. Hudson class of young ladies of Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, gave their quarterly banquet on Aug. 14, and decided they would undertake to increase their enrollment to 100 in 100 days.

The organized class of South Prospect, Kansas City, expects to increase its enrollment from 125 to 200 this fall.

The Centennial aim, "All the church and as many more in the Bible school," seems destined to be realized in a large number of Missouri schools this fall. Among those which expect to reach the aim are Weston, which had last week a corps of 25 workers in the field; Booneville, which is thoroughly organized and will open the campaign the first Sunday in September; Budd Park, Kansas City, which already has 500 in their Sunday roll, with 238 on the church record, but has a number of church members not reached; Osceola, which voted to reach the aim in sixty days after September 1, and Roscoe, a school in an inland village, which decided that if Osceola could, it could, too.

All Baraca and Philathea classes will be interested in knowing that I have just received a letter from Marshall A. Hudson, president of World Wide Baracas, in which he urges all these classes to enroll with the secretaries of their states as organized Adult Bible classes, and receive the certificate of recognition. We join with him in this, and hope that all our classes will enter this international fellowship.

To secure the International Teacher Training diploma for the Standard course and the seals for the Advanced course, the pupil must study 150 lessons. It is hoped that arrangements will be made with each of our Missouri colleges to offer this course to their pupils this year.

It is a source of pleasure to me, and I hope it will be to many in Missouri, to state that at the board meeting on August 14 it was decided that I should continue with Brother Hardin in the work during the year. The great opportunities open here in Missouri, the splendid interest everywhere manifested, the strong and aggressive state board, and the association with friends of other days, and chiefly with Brother Hardin, make the prospects for the year very bright. After September 1 my home will be in Independence. All communications concerning the work should be sent to me at the office, 311 Century Building, Kansas City, Mo.

Brother Hardin continues to improve and is expected soon to be at his post.

J. H. Bryan,
Asst. State Superintendent.

A New Class in Brooklyn, N. Y.

It affords me great pleasure to report to you the organization of an adult Bible class with eleven charter members in the Second Church of Christ, Brooklyn, N. Y., in accordance with standard of International Sunday School Association. We have received our certificate of recognition from the I. S. S. A., and our teacher, Jos. Keevil, has hopes of soon having a class of fifty.

Making Things Hum.

The Christian Bible school at Abilene, Kan., has an enrollment of 160 and two organized classes; the "Live Cole" class, of 17 young men, with C. A. Cole, pastor, as teacher, and the Golden Rule class, of 28 young ladies, with Mrs. M. D. Settle as teacher. These two classes of young people are making things hum, having secured during the past sixty days the greater part of 83 in Home Department and Cradle Roll. The offering of the school has averaged $4.50 since January 1, 1908. The offering for the orphans on Easter was $22.20.

Teacher Training Graduation at Auburn, Nebraska.

The commencement night of the teacher training class was a gala occasion in the Christian church here. A thunder storm failed to keep people away, so the church was well filled. Prof. E. L. Rouse, one of the teachers in the state normal at Peru, and a teacher-training enthusiast, was the speaker of the evening. He told us that in view of the great price that was paid for us, our highest service was demanded, and the highest service that we can give the world is to teach the truths of Christianity.

The class, which was seated upon the platform, gave a short drill illustrating the nature of their work. Diplomas were presented to the class by the writer. There were fifteen who took the examination given by the state department of teacher-training. Mrs. J. O. Redfern, the faithful and energetic teacher of the class for the last four months, deserves much credit for successfully bringing the class through some trying periods.

Hugh Lomax, minister.

Uncle Billy Finney.

Uncle Billy Finney was a funny sort o' feller.
Mightn't be a cabbage or a tater in the cellar,
Seasons goin' crooked an' the crops forever failin',
Yet you'd never hear ole Uncle Billy Finney railin'.
"What's the use o' tellin' everybody all your woes?
Plenty of their own," he says, "the Lord A'mighty knows."

Never heard him liftin' up his voice condemnin' when Others were disparagin' their errin' fellermen,
Smoked his pipe in silence till the argument was through.
"Ain't no call to kick about the things my neighbors do.
Tell you what," he says, "it keeps me humpin' every day
To keep my own feet treadin' in the straight and narrow way."

Never talked religion; but he acted it so well
He might have been a Methodist as far as you could tell.
Never called the world a place o' sorrow an' o' sin.
"Pretty fine ole world," says he, "that we're a-livin' in.
Want to go on livin' so that when I die, maybe
Neighbors now an' then will think a kindly thought o' me."

Uncle Billy Finney died a dozen years ago;
Not a dog or child but hated bad to see him go.
'Peared as though he left a place nobody else could fill.
World was not the same when Uncle Billy went, but still,
Seemed to hear the welcome of the joyous angel throng—
"Why, Uncle Billy Finney! What's been keepin' you so long?"

A Deadening Habit.

A fault-finding, criticising habit is fatal to all excellence. Nothing will strangle growth quicker than a tendency to hunt for flaws, to rejoice in the unlovely, like a hog, which always has his nose in the mud and rarely looks up. The direction in which we look indicates the life aim, and p ople who are always looking for something to criticise, for the crooked and the ugly, who are always suspicious, who invariably look at the worst side of others, are but giving the world a picture of themselves.

This disposition to see the worst instead of the best grows on one very rapidly, until it ultimately strangles all that is beautiful and crushes out all that is good in himself. No matter how many times your confidence has been betrayed, do not allow yourself to sour, do not lose your faith in people. The bad are the exceptions; most people are honest and true and mean to do what is right.—Success.

Mrs. Smith (thoughtfully): "I'm afraid I shall have to stop giving Tommy that tonic the doctor left for him." Mr. Smith (anxiously): "Why, isn't he any better?" Mrs. Smith: "O yes! But he has slid down the banisters six times this morning, broken the hall lamp, two vases, a pitcher, and a looking-glass; and I don't feel as if I could stand much more."

Outdoor Sleeping.

This has been made more easy by the construction of hammocks that are in the form of a suspended bed, with a solid substantial frame sustaining the mattress. These may be set up wherever one wishes to, and by the use of mosquito netting, which is easily adjusted, keeping out all the flying insects, one can have the benefit of absolute outdoor sleeping. The great benefit coming from this will be realized after a few nights of experience in the feeling of restfulness that will be experienced in the morning after a night of this delightful sleep. Now is the time to inaugurate this. Get the outdoor habit fixed before the weather becomes cold enough to frighten you out of it; then the battle will come in trying to give it up. Many a life has been prolonged simply by sleeping out doors.

"Good Morning."

I think we should cross no man's path without hailing him, and, if he needs, giving him supplies.—Beecher.

"I'm goin' to stop bein' kind and helpful to people," said a little lad to his mother.

"Why?"

"'Cause, at school to-day, I saw Tommy Jones putting a pin in master's chair; so just as the master was about to sit down, I pulled away the chair. The master sat down on the floor, and when he got up he caned me for pulling away the chair, and then Tommy Jones hit me for interfering."

WEEKLY MONITOR TO WIVES.

The following epitaph is said to exist in a churchyard in Northumberland. If it is an invention it was written by some one who has been under the yoke:

Here lie the bodies of Thomas Bond and Mary his wife.
She was temperate, chaste and charitable;
But she was proud, peevish and passionate.
She was an affectionate wife and a tender mother;
But her husband and child, whom she loved, seldom saw her countenance without a disgusting frown;
Whilst she received visitors whom she despised with an endearing smile.
Her behavior was discreet before Strangers.
But imprudent in her own family.
Abroad her conduct was influenced by good breeding,
But at home by ill-temper.
She was a professed enemy to flattery and was seldom known to praise or commend,
But the talents in which she principally excelled were difference of opinion and discovering flaws and imperfections.
She was an admirable economist and without prodigality, dispensed plenty to every person in her family.
But would sacrifice their eyes to a farthing candle.
She sometimes made her husband happy with her good qualities.
But much more frequently miserable with her many failings; insomuch that in thirty years cohabitation he often lamented that, malgre all her virtues, he had not, in the whole, enjoyed two years of matrimonial comfort.
At length, finding that she had lost the affections of her husband, as well as the regard of her neighbors, family disputes having been divulged by servants, she died of vexation, July 20, 1768—aged 48 years.
William Bond, brother to the deceased, erected this stone as a Weekly Monitor to the surviving wives of this parish, that they may avoid the infamy of having their memories handed to posterity with a Patch-Work character.

Vacation Days.

It isn't enough that flowers bloom,
That grasses wave;
That ten whole weeks of happy time,
Our own, we have.
Something else the summer must hold,
Sweeter than honey, and brighter than gold.

It isn't enough that glad birds sing,
That brooklets run;
That lessons are thrown to the careless winds
Every one.
Something else the summer must hold,
Sweeter than honey, and brighter than gold.

It isn't enough that sea-shells gleam
On sandy shore;
That tossing waves on the ocean's breast
Tumble and roar.
Something else the summer must hold,
Sweeter than honey, and brighter than gold.

But it is enough that a loving heart,
In work and play,
Should make all others surrounding it
Happy alway.
This is the charm the summer must hold.
Sweeter than honey, and brighter than gold.

"I should think you'd go slow," said the cautious friend. "You know, as Lincoln said, 'you can fool all the people some of the time, and some of the people' "—

"That's all right," interrupted the sharper, "but I find it's always possible to fool enough of the people enough of the time."—Philadelphia Press.

Blessed.

Blessed is the man who counts another's time as valuable as his own.

Blessed is the man who is generous to his neighbor in all things except the application.

Blessed is the man who has not found out that he is superior to other men.

Blessed is the man who leans forward instead of backward.

Blessed is the man who is guilty of the splendid vice of promptness.

Blessed is the man who sees nobility in being faithful on a committee.

Blessed is the man who looks while he listens.

Blessed is the man who knows not how to flatter, but how to appreciate.

Blessed is the man whose watch closes without a snap.

Blessed is the man who is afraid to leave his work undone.

Blessed is the man who has grace enough to give up the end seat in the pew.—Edgar W. Work.

Bubbles.

Chasing rainbows is a bootless occupation. There is no pot of gold at the end of the rainbow, for the rainbow has no end. The young imagination often clothes very commonplace objects and pleasures with all the colors and hues of the rainbow; but when approached these colors all melt into their native grays or browns. If only we could detect the real phantoms of life, what immense misfortunes and disappointments would humanity be relieved of! Bubbles are beautiful and many-hued, but they are not substantial, they will not endure. Follow after excellence in the old ways and the ways that are approved, and happier results will accrue.

THE CONVINCING OF DVORAK

By MABEL EARLE.

"It's a dog's life," Dvorak announced, getting out of his overclothes.

"What's wrong now?" queried Jerry MacMurphy.

"Wrong?" Dvorak repeated. "You can spend your life here in this place, month in and month out, and ask what's wrong!"

He swept his hand about the arc of the roundhouse windows, dimly outlined against the darkening western sky, and shook his clinched fist toward the huge bulk of 1018.

The roundhouse is not an agreeable place at any time. The fog and steam and smoke of it catch at a man's throat and blind his eyes as he enters: the noise of it, when they are firing up the engines for the road, and the shriek of steam drowns out the rattle of coal and the clang of steel, is enough to drive a sensitive organization to stark lunacy. Possibly Dvorak was unusually sensitive at the close of his day's work. His friend looked at him anxiously, as the man shoveling coal up in the cab of 1018 pulled the chain of the fire-box door, and the fierce glare leaped out across the shadows.

"Seems to get on your nerves, cleaning out flues," said Jerry.

"Laugh, can you?" cried Dvorak. "Look at my face! Look at my hands!"

"Yes, that's what I was laughing at," Jerry interposed.

"I'm a man," Dvorak went on, unheeding, "made in the image of God the same as them, they'll tell you. What right have they to say that I shall slave my life out here, with my face black, and my lungs full of soot and fog and coal-dust? What right have they to say that I shall spend hours in the fire-box of one of their leaky old engines, choking and stifling in the dust, cleaning out the flues that are packed solid with soot and cinders, because they're too stingy to use a decent fuel—"

"Well, who says you shall?" Jerry inquired coolly. "Walk up to the boss there, and tell him you want to quit. Nobody's tying you here. And, besides, I wouldn't blame choked flues on the kind of coal they use, when you know you're cleaning up after John Green's firing. If Timmy Malone had fired that engine with the same coal, we'd have had a different job."

"Ah, you're young," said Dvorak with a profound sigh. "When I was your age, it didn't seem the same to me. You've done the same work I have to-day, and your heart's light, and your body's fresh, and you're ready to believe in all the world. That's it—the believing. It's not the same, as long as you can trust God or man."

"Here, let's clean up a bit, and get out of this," Jerry suggested.

There was a place for the roundhouse men to wash and make themselves decent before they went out to face public opinion. That much had been added to the comfort of life within the last six months. Jerry ventured to remind his friend of it as they struck out across the yards.

"Maybe they'll go on and do a lot more," he prophesied hopefully.

"You don't know the world you're living in, boy," said Dvorak. "They've no care for us. If we were ground under the wheels of their engines to-day, there'd be plenty of others to take our places to-morrow. Do you suppose they care? Couldn't they do something to save the boys that are killed every year, if they cared? A crumb here and a crust there, to keep us quiet—what is it to them? Do you know they kill off their men in this country faster than the boys go down on the firing-line in a war? They don't care. And nobody cares. That's the worst. They grind you down, and crush the soul out of you, till you're a beast, and you don't care, either, I know. When I was your age, I might believe I was made in the image of God. Now I'm just a machine. You will be, too, when the years have done their work with you. And you'll find out that there's no such thing as real justice or kindness or unselfishness on earth."

"Shut up; I've got a mother over here on the ranch," said Jerry.

For a moment Dvorak was silent. Then the bitterness broke out once more.

"Well, she does what pleases her, doesn't she?" he argued. "She's good to you, she'd bear pain or hunger for you, because that'd suit her better. It's just another way of being selfish. We all are. O come, now, don't look as if you'd eat me. I won't say anything more about the mothers; have it your own way. But the men—the ones that do the work and go under the wheels—they're ground flat, I tell you. And if there was ever any good in them, it's ground out. Just so the rich ones can get their dividends."

Jerry began to whistle, looking up at the first stars. It was hard for him to shake off the horrible weight of conviction when Dvorak talked so. The older man had some education and a fluent tongue. He was not a strong young fellow, working his way up from the bottom round of the ladder. He had sunk from some position which Jerry could only guess at; yet his dark arguments had weight with the boy who liked him and pitied him.

Supposing it was true. Jerry wondered. Supposing the years of work and oppression did grind the soul out of men. If he should come to be what Dvorak was, at forty. He looked up at the stars again, shivering. And just then they turned the corner of the long platform, and Bob Francis met them with the news of the wreck at Canon Siding.

There is no need of going into the particulars of that wreck. The story of it is written in every man's heart on the Mountain Division. It was the first serious accident in a record of two years, and it concerned Maclennan.

Jerry's heart went into his throat when Francis said "Maclennan." The gray-haired, big-souled engineer had been talking to him at the roundhouse only a day or two before. The strong, hearty voice with its slight Scotch burr rang in his ears yet.

And now they would be bringing Maclennan back to the hospital—perhaps, after all, to the bleak cemetery up yonder.

It was so like Maclennan, as the story came out, fragment by fragment, over the wire, while Cedar Hill waited! Jerry waited and listened with the others. He didn't care to go across the tracks to supper, not yet. Not until the relief train came in with the injured passengers and the man who had risked his life for them.

It was something wrong with the switch at the siding; just what, an investigating committee might determine later on. No time to save the train even by the most desperate heroism. The engine and four cars had gone into the ditch. Somehow Maclennan had dragged himself clear and plunged into the work of rescue. He was lifting a woman through the window of the chair-car when a man at his side, catching sight of his shoulder through the torn blouse, cried out in horror, and urged him to give place to those better able to serve. Maclennan had answered briefly through set teeth, and had gone on with the work; but ten minutes later he had dropped unconscious on the rocks beside the embankment scalded from throat to thigh by the steam which burst about him as the engine went down.

"In the image of God." The words came back to Jerry as he waited with Dvorak on the long platform. Dvorak had said the divine likeness was crushed out of all men under the pressure of modern industrial slavery. But Maclennan had been a slave with the rest of them. It was only a month since he had taken the passenger run with its more desirable conditions. For years past he had known the injustice of long hours, and hard work, and daily dangers, which a more liberal policy on the part of the management could have reduced by half. And in all those years the men of his kind had known in him the strong, clean manhood which came out unshaken from every test, so that up and down the platform they were saying now, under their breath, "It's like Mac."

The relief train came in at last after hours of waiting. Jerry saw Maclennan's stretcher lowered to the platform. More seriously injured than any of his passengers, the engineer opened his eyes, and smiled at the boys, as the cool night air struck his face. A sob tightened in the throat of more than one man looking on.

"You said there was no such thing in the world!" Jerry muttered to Dvorak at his elbow. Dvorak made no answer. He pressed a little closer to the stretcher.

"Comfortable, Mac?" somebody ventured to ask, bending over that white face.

"I guess so. Right enough." Jerry heard the answer; it didn't sound like Mac's voice. "Say, did they get Pete out safe? And that old lady—the one with the little chaps—"

No such thing as unselfishness! He might be within an hour of death, perhaps, Jerry thought. Probably he knew it; he had faced death before. And his first conscious thought, even as his last supreme effort, was for the others.

The splendor of it swept through the boy's heart in a flood of light, transfiguring all life with its divine significance. In the image of God! Then the years which Dvorak counted so darkly could not of themselves gather power to crush the likeness out of a man. For Maclennan's hair was whiter than Dvorak's, but the impress stamped upon his royal self-forgetting was plain for all who had eyes to see.

Jerry turned away, stumbling down the platform and out into the maze of track, on his usual cross-cut to the boarding house. Dvorak followed him, still silent. A switch-engine was pushing a string of empties up and down the yard. Jerry paused a moment while they passed, then stepped on toward the next line of track. In the flickering, shifting shadows under the electric lights, with the noise of the switch-engine in his ears, he did not notice the dark box-cars gliding down from the opposite direction. He set his foot on the rail; a huge black mass loomed up suddenly at arm's length; but it was Dvorak's hand that snatched him back into safety as the box-cars crashed past; and it was Dvorak's foot that slipped and caught under the wheels.

A week later they told Jerry at the hospital that he might go in to speak to his friend. All the ward, and all of Cedar Hill, were rejoicing that day in the news that Maclennan was improving, with an excellent prospect for complete recovery. Dvorak would recover—all that was left of him, but he must get along for the rest of his life on a wooden foot.

Jerry had expected to find him looking worn and white, but the face against the pillows was not the face of the man he had known. White it was, and pinched with pain; but the bitterness was gone from the eyes, and the hard, set lines from the mouth. Dvorak's laugh, as he wrung Jerry's hand, was the laugh of a boy.

"What am I going to say to you?" Jerry demanded. "It's I that ought to be here. It was my carelessness. And you gave your foot for me. What can I do to pay you back? Man alive! You're the one that told me we were all machines, with the the heart and soul crushed out of us."

"Never mind," said Dvorak. "I've not given so much, maybe. I've seen more than one fellow get about on a wooden leg, and fire an engine. It's hard lines if I can't do all that's coming to me in the round-house. And, besides—"

"I knew it wasn't true," Jerry insisted. "When I saw Mac's face, all that talk of yours went for nothing. And then you gave yourself the lie in ten minutes more. You'd have done the same for me if it had been your neck instead of your foot."

"Do you think it wasn't worth while?" Dvorak flashed back, as the boy's voice quivered. "Maybe I saw Mac's face myself. And just to know for one minute that I could—"

He broke off there. His old fluent speech failed him before the confession of that vision which had blotted the bitterness from his life. He could not find words to say that the moment of self-offering had brought its own supreme reward, in the mere knowledge that such offering was possible to him. It had been much to see the image of God in Maclennan; to find it in his own heart, marred and defaced, but undying, was infinitely more.

Jerry understood. But the men of the rail and the roundhouse have little to say about such things, even when they come back to each other from the gates of death. It was time for the boy to go, and according to all rule and precedent he must go with a joke.

"All right, then, Dvorak," he said. "I'll set it down that when you picked me out from under that box-car it was just another way of being selfish. You were doing exactly what you wanted to do!"—The Christian Endeavor World.

A Country Church Awakening.

BY WALTER MERTON.

The pastor had arrived only that morning. He looked over the people who had come to hear his first sermon—three men, twenty women, four children. Now he understood why the presiding elder looked so relieved when he had promised to go to Riley.

"Mr. Merton, I'm sorry so few are out to hear your first sermon."

"How many are there generally present?"

"I'm sorry to say only about as many as to-day, and in the evening fewer."

The next morning the pastor went to the postoffice and began to talk with the postmaster. Presently he asked: "Who is the leader of the boys around here?"

"Well, I guess about every fellow does as Ed Black says."

"Who is the toughest man in the township?"

"Well, old Dick Stagg is drunk whenever anyone will trust him." The postmaster smiled. "If you get old Dick into a church I'll donate ten dollars to any cause you may name."

The pastor went to four stores, talked to a dozen or so men, and they all named the two. He then stopped at a neat little home, went to the door, and asked for Ed. A young man of about twenty came forward.

"Say, Black, some one says you can land a fish when no one else can even get a bite."

The young man grinned. "Say, are you the parson?"

"Yes; that's what I am supposed to be."

"Some of us fellows are going fishing to-morrow, and I guess you can go if you can get around here by four-thirty."

At ten o'clock, as they ate the lunch the preacher had put in the back of his buggy, he told them the story of his life. A rich man's son, his father dying when he was seventeen, and he finding the estate so heavy in debt that nothing was left but a good name. He told of the struggles to keep mother, brother and self together; how for five years he was sick; then of strength being given but he stammering so he could not talk. One day a great preacher put his hand on his shoulder and said: "My brother, God can make a preacher out of even you." He told how he had advanced step by step in the mills till, at last, a good position was offered. But, as his voice grew strong and clear, he saw Christ in the pathway. A Methodist preacher started him to conducting a mission school. He joined the Methodist Church. Then he told of the presiding elder giving him a license as local preacher. Then, in September, the annual conference being short of men, he was sent for, asked to take a four-point circuit; how he had gone to it, and now he was with them.

The boys sat around him two hours as he told the stories of how the men great in business, then great in the eyes of God, climbed, step by step, up in the Christian life. He told of the men, strong bodily as well as mentally, who found Christ.

Sunday morning thirty men sat in the church to hear the new pastor. In a month the pastor knew every man for miles around, and in the morning, of a dry Sabbath, there were forty or fifty men present, and twice as many in the evening.

Ed Black, as president of the boys' club, raked the country with a fine-tooth comb to find men and tell them of the preacher who had no notes to read, but who just stepped out to the edge of the platform and told of the power of Christ to save.

One day Ed said to a friend: "That preacher will get me yet." A week later, on Saturday night, the boys sat around the stove. "Let's have a game." The chairs yere drawn up around the tables. The cards came out .

"Come on, Ed."

"No, boys; I've played my last game. To-morrow night I shall go to the altar."

Not a word beyond that. Ed Black, the gang-leader, a Christian! Bang! The door crashed in! A man fell against the counter, and staggered to his feet. "Give me a dime!" Ed jumped up. "No, Stagg, I'm going to take you home."

The next morning the young man came, bringing the older man with him.

That morning the pastor talked on Naaman having simply to obey the man of God to be a well man.

At the door the old man whispered: "Parson, come and see me again." Space is too short to tell of the struggles of the man to understand coming to Christ. Then, at last his eyes opened. How like a child's his faith. Then how he tramped the roads to tell others of the power of Crist to save! The winter passed and the summer came, but the church in the hottest weather always had more men than women at the services. One by one the men, working with the pastor, won souls for the Master. Yet this country church had been given up to die because the Roman Catholic church had so many people around Riley. The pastor, without a college training, followed a man who was a great scholar, and he won men because he knew how to reach them one by one. He learned how to do it in the ten years when he was a mechanic and a foreman in the mills, rubbing shoulders with his fellow men. He proved that it is not preaching only on Sunday that was requisite, but having human sympathy and brotherliness.—Western Christian Advocate.

Mr. Thomas H. Perrin (Presbyterian), in a recent missionary address, paraphrased a rhyme as follows:

"Old Deacon Horner,
He sat in the corner,
As the contribution box passed by;
Sweetly content,
He dropped in a cent,
And said, 'What a good Churchman am I!'"

Why They Stay Away from Church.

A parish visitor has tabulated the reasons assigned by persons upon whom she has called, for not attending church. Thirty-one excuses have been given by as many people, and they would apply almost anywhere:

1. Too deaf to hear the sermon.
2. Too lame to walk up the hill.
3. Can not get the family up to breakfast; too late when breakfast is over to dress.
4. Clothing too shabby.
5. Can not get in the way of going—have stayed away so long.
6. Has not been to church since son died, who was organist; can not stand it to hear anyone else play.
7. Some way we always have company on Sunday.
8. Do not go because they have the windows open; can not stand the draught.
9. Children too young to leave, and no servant.
10. Clothing so shabby that people look at her.
11. Does not go because they do not open the windows.
12. Has to go to New York every Sunday to see the doctor.
13. Lost two children in ten days; does not think it just, so does not come.
14. Choir sings too loud, affects her head.
15. Can not stand such long sermons as the minister preaches.
16. Lost a child recently, and the minister not being prompt, the funeral was delayed a half hour; gave great offense.
17. Had trouble in the choir.
18. Minister preached on giving one-tenth of your income; can not go and listen to such things; don't believe in it.
19. Don't believe in the doctrine the minister is preaching at the present time.
20. Don't go to church because the minister does not call on them.
21. Can not get home from morning service in time to get a warm dinner.
22. Don't like the minister's family.
23. No one in the congregation notices her.
24. Recently buried only daughter; can not come to church; makes her sad.
25. Minister never gave the children's baptismal certificate as promised.
26. Does not go to church because she always sees a man there who persecuted the former minister.
27. Does not go to church because she is not on good terms with husband.
28. Minister corrected son in Sunday school; can not forgive it.
29. Minister's family do not call.
30. Minister did not visit member of family who was sick.
31. Don't approve of the minister's sermons.—Living Church.

The Breath Cure.

Of all the cures which have yet emerged into public notice from time to time the simplest and most easy is that which Major-General Drayson describes in "The Nineteenth Century." He calls it the art of breathing, and he seems to have hit upon it by mere accident when he was climbing a very high mountain. The rarefaction of the air at that altitude rendered it necessary for him to breathe twice as fast as he would have done at a lower level. All inconvenience caused by the rarefaction of the air disappeared when he doubled the rate of his breathing. Reflecting upon this, he stumbled on the great discovery which should immortalize him if there be anything in it. Breathing in the ordinary way, he pumps fourteen pints of air into his lungs per minute, containing three pints of oxygen, with which he oxygenates his blood. But on ascending to 17,000 feet the pumping of fourteen pints of air into his lungs per minute would only take in a pint and a half of oxygen, which does half the work of three pints, and as it required three pints to oxygenate the blood, he became almost suffocated. His heart palpitated, and he was in danger of his life, but by suddenly doubling the rate at which he had been breathing, he found instant relief. He has tried it under a great many circumstances. Whenever he was in a vitiated atmosphere he was able to get rid of his headache and incipient palpitation of the heart by taking long breaths twice as rapidly as he would on ordinary occasions. He maintains that in very many cases pain, sleeplessness, headache, and many other ills which flesh is heir to, could be almost instantly relieved by this simple process. Moderate exercise in the open air, upon which all doctors insist, he asserts is quite unnecessary; all that you need to do is to breathe as rapidly as if you were taking moderate exercise.—Exchange.

The Greatest Blunders of My Life.

Here are some "Blunders," written down by five hundred men, and to be found in the Crerar Library:

"The greatest blunder of my life was gambling."

"When I left my church and mother."

"My greatest blunder was when I first learned to smoke."

"When I left school before I was past the fourth grade."

"Did not stick to my trade."

"Was to fool away my time when at school."

"Not keeping my position, but grew slack in my work."

"Reading worthless books."

"Thinking that my boss could not do without me."

"Refused a steady position with a good firm."

"Would not hearken to the advice of older people."

"Not saving money when I was young."

"Beating some one out of money."

"Did not stick to anything."

"Careless about religious duties."

"Did not take care of my money."

"The greatest blunder of my life was not accepting Christ and thereby avoiding many sorrows caused by serving Satan."—American Weekly.

Filipino Religion.

Religiously, the people of the Philippines are approximately divided as follows: Roman Catholics, 7,000,000; Protestants, 50,000; Mohammedans, 450,000; Pagan or wild tribes, 500,000. The Roman priests came into the islands along with the Spanish conquerors in 1521. The conquest of the islands was more due to the diplomacy and sacrifice of the priest than to the arms of the warriors. The natives were converted by wholesale, but they brought their superstitions and immoralities.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

The Richest Vein Of Joy.

CAN YOU WORK IT?

Wanted: 500 Common Men.

All seek joy. Jesus did. Paul rejoiced even in tribulation; he beheld the unseen, lived there. We want 500 far seeing, wise seekers of joy. If you can read the C. E. with ease and pleasure you have sense and education enough to become a preacher. Brethren of fair intelligence, ought to hear the bitter cry of need. Slowness of speech, a red pepper temper, an unfortunate marriage may close the gate before you to this inspiring and creative knowledge of God, the inexpressible joy of preaching the Cross; the highest, divinest calling. God has but one Son, he educated him for the ministry.

We Can Enable You.

It is customary to examine the head before matriculation, we test the heart. We can take the man of talent with such a big head that the Lord is perplexed what to do with him, but we seek 499 humble brethren, of ordinary good sense, who may have never thought they were capable, past twenty (except ladies), tobacco immune, unable to spend years in school yet heroic and ambitious, whose hearts beat in rhythm with Gethsemane yet are at home at the marriage feast, willing to endure hardness, privation, ingratitude, sneers for Christ's sake, to keep sweet and see 10,000 years ahead in order to influence thought, serve their generation and help God lift a race from sin to the skies. We can put that man into a pastorate, if he will stay with us from early September till June.

Of course, our native modesty restrains the pen yet we timidly cite the fact that we present the most original, most fascinating, most dynamic, most economical, most practical, most American system of training offered to the ministerial student. The only course that combines an actual pastorate with daily study for three years before graduation.

Is Conscience Your Nathan?

2500 churches without any preaching for years, their children wandering without a Sunday School, sobbing for the Bread. This piercing cry from the dying for the Good Samaritan, is it not the prophet of God, saying "Thou art the man"? For you can feed the starving; will you do it?

Call Some One.

If you are crippled send some one. The preacher ought to be called. Think of some one who fills the bill. Name him before God. Suggest it to him, he may hail it gladly. If not, draft him. Jesus did. He called Peter twice, he had to knock Saul down. With entreaties, prayers, reasoning, labor with him for a year. Will not his work be your joy? We must have common men, by the hundreds, entering the ministry, or we die. When we awake to this appalling loss and our responsibility we shall find good timber all around us. They will be grateful that we called them to this peerless joy. Send for circular or catalogue, it will help in persuasion.

WHEREWITHAL SHALL I PAY?

Most students for the ministry must answer this question. Here are answers that have come to students in the College of the Bible during the last session:

Sixty-two in other ways than by preaching have earned sums varying from $5.00 to $300.00, average earnings $91.

Seventy-three have preached for one hundred and forty-five churches. Their remuneration has varied from $50.00 to $600.00.

Seventy have received loans without interest from the two Educational Associations connected with the College of the Bible. The sums loaned vary according to the need of the student, from $16.00 to $150.

THOSE TIRESOME TWINS

HOW DERRY AND PAT LEARNED THEIR SEVEN-TIMES TABLE

"The school is dismissed."

There was general scurry and clashing of slates, as Miss Erroll's voice pronounced these welcome words, and the children commenced hurriedly piling up their books before stampeding towards their caps and hats.

Once more the teacher's voice rose above the tumult: "Dermot and Patricia Blake will stay in for half an hour, to master their seven-times table, and to learn a lesson in obedience!"

Derry and Pat paused in their headlong rush to the door, and gazed at each other with anguished eyes. The twins were beginning to realize that life at a daily school was something very different from lessons learned under a governess, who could be coaxed or plagued into almost anything. They were two mischievous, lovable, curly-headed kiddies, and Mr. Blake, finding that no governess was a match for their wild Irish spirits, had decided that a daily school would be best for them. So they became pupils of Miss Erroll's Academy, and had soon discovered that that good lady's authority was not to be easily set aside.

Now, as the other children trooped out, they made their way dejectedly to their seats, and began sulkily conning their de tested seven-times table.

Miss Erroll paused on the threshold of the schoolroom door.

"I shall lock you in until the half hour is up!" she said sternly. "Such disobedient children are not to be trusted. And I shall expect you both to be perfect in your lesson when I return."

The door closed, the lock clicked, and Derry and Pat were alone, locked in a horrid old school room, while outside the sun shone, the birds sang, and the children chased each other with shouts of delight.

"Horrid thing!" sobbed Pat stormily; "how'd she like to be locked up here, I wonder?"

"Not to be trusted, indeed!" cried Derry indignantly. "We're not dishonorable if we do play tricks!"

Pat gave a final sniff, and holding her book behind her, to be out of temptation, began resolutely muttering her lesson.

"Seven ones are seven, seven twos are fourteen, seven threes are—are—twenty-one, seven fours are twenty—twenty-fi—Oh! I say, Derry, look at that butterfly."

In a moment the twins were gazing eagerly out of the window, their eys sparkling, their feet longing to give chase to a gorgeous "Painted Lady" that floated gracefully past them outside in the brilliant sunshine.

Suddenly Derry turned to Pat.

"The window isn't locked. Shall we jump out? It would serve old Erroll right, and—and oh! shouldn't I love that 'Painted Lady' for my collection!"

Pat's eyes began to sparkle excitedly.

"Oh, let's!" she cried enthusiastically, and in less time than it takes to tell, the two naughty little figures were scudding silently across the lawn out of sight of the house. The "Painted Lady" had fluttered away, but they still were free, and tables were a thing of the past. They chased each other down the lane that led to their house, and paused suddenly outside the hedge of the garden before entering the gate.

"What will mother say?" whispered Pat.

"And what will Miss Erroll say?" said Derry.

They eyed each other doubtfully.

"I don't care!" cried Pat, recklessly. "We'll have a spree before dinner, anyhow, which is better than that horrid old schoolroom!"

At this moment mother's voice fell on their ears. She was walking on the other side of the hedge in conversation with some one whose voice the children recognized as Uncle Den's.

They were about to rush forward and greet him, for the was the jolliest uncle going, when some words of mother's arrested them.

"I think you are rather hard on Derry and Pat," she said.

"My dear Norah," Uncle Den replied, "you misunderstand me. I know our twins are straight little chicks; I have never found either of them guilty of a mean or dishonorable action"—the twins exchanged glances and flushed guiltily—"but at the same time they are far too wild and headstrong, and require much firmer ruling."

"They are at school now, you know," replied mother earnestly, "and Miss Erroll assures me that for all their wild and mischievous ways they are very straightforward and lovable, a little son and daughter of whom any mother might be proud."

"Quite so—" Uncle Den was beginning, but Derry seized Pat's hand and dragged her down the lane.

"Come on!" he said gruffly, "it's acting low down to play eavesdropper!"

"Where are you going?" demanded Pat, as he continued his hurried walk.

"Back to the schoolroom to learn my tables, and wait for Miss Erroll!" replied Derry, flushing.

"So am I," cried Pat eagerly; "we nearly went and got dishonorable, didn't we, Derry?"

Derry grunted, and a few minutes later the two children climbed through the schoolroom window, and, seizing their neglected tasks, rammed their fingers in their ears and started energetically committing to memory their despised "seven times one."

Ten minutes later the door opened to admit Miss Erroll. She smiled kindly when she observed the business-like attitude of the two children.

One after the other they repeated their lesson without a hitch, and the schoolmistress laid her hands gently on the two curly heads.

"I am quite proud of 'the tiresome twins,'" she said smiling; "they can learn well and quickly when they like, and I find they are to be trusted after all."

"No, we're not!" said Derry bluntly, and forthwith proceeded to confess their disobedience, helped by Pat, whose blue eyes grew misty as the tale proceeded.

"So we came back," concluded Derry, somewhat breathlessly. "You see, when mother told Uncle Den you said we were straightforward, we sort of had to be—er—I mean, of course, we wanted to be—and—and we're very sorry an' all that, honest Injun!"

Miss Erroll smiled at this quaint though obviously earnest and penitent apology.

"I think I understand," she said kindly, "and so we'll say no more about it. You mean to be more obedient in the future, I think!"

And Miss Erroll was not mistaken. After they had told mother and Uncle Den all about it, and received a grave though loving lecture, the twins vowed solemnly to try and be worthy of their teacher's belief.

And so well did they succeed that Miss Erroll became very fond and proud of the one-time "tiresome twins."—Cassell's Little Folks.

September Offering for Church Extension

Begins Sunday, September 6th. Continuing Every Sunday in September.

Homeless churches are stars of the sixth magnitude (scarcely seen with the naked eye) or of the thirteenth magnitude (scarcely seen with the telescope) and their light goes out forever.

We began Church Extension in 1888 with $10,662. The Board asked for $250,000 by 1900 and $500,000 by 1905. We passed our marks in both cases. Shall the doubtful mark remain after the Centennial? Our brethren must answer.

CHURCHES SHOULD

Try to take the Offering on the day appointed, if that day is favorable, and send increased offerings.

However, all Sundays in September are for Church Extension Offerings, so do not sacrifice the Offering for the day.

Fourteen Hundred and Sixteen

congregations contributed to Church Extension last year. The Board realizes that September is an unfortunate month for Offerings in many churches, but more of our churches should and do their best. City congregations should wait until their people have returned from vacations. This is the Lord's work and every church wearing His name should be in line.

Order supplies from, and send offerings promptly to, G. W. MUCKLEY, 500 Waterworks Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

GOOD POINTS FOR YOU TO CONSIDER WHEN GIVING TO CHURCH EXTENSION

CENTENNIAL WATCHWORD—"We must raise $150.000 this year and $200,000 next year to reach the million."

1. Money repeats itself in this Fund every five years.
2. Churches are helped that first help themselves.
3. The work pays for itself by the four per cent interest which is charged.
4. This is a permanent Fund to loan to churches that can not borrow elsewhere or except at exorbitant rates of interest.
5. The church aided first helps itself. When our loan is sent it pays the last dollar of indebtedness.
6. Every dollar loaned calls out three others. The church aided raises three dollars for every one loaned.
7. The Board has handled all the money contributed to the Fund plus over $780,000, which has been paid back on loans, making a total of more than $1,440,000, which has been loaned to 1,178 mission churches scattered through 44 States and Territories and only $563 has been lost, where congregations voluntarily deeded their property to the Board for debts against them.

EXPLANATION OF NAMED FUNDS

We now have 29 Named Funds. We want 50 by 1909. A Named Fund in our Church Extension work is $5,000 or as much more as the donor desires to make it, and is named after the donor or any one he may designate. Individuals give $500 annually to create them and churches $300 annually. A separate account is kept of each Named Fund and a separate annual report made to the donor. All loans are made from this Fund to help build churches and are paid back into the Fund in five equal annual installments. The interest at four per cent is kept in the Fund and compounds itself semi-annually. As soon as enough money is accumulated from new gifts, interest, and returns from loans, another loan is made. The money is constantly repeating its work by coming back and going out again in loans to help weak and struggling churches complete their first church building. Money more than doubles its work every five years. For example, $2,500 will do the work of $6,221 in five years, building 12 churches with loans of $500 each.

Thus, the F. M. Drake Loan Fund has built 66 churches since February, 1889, and has done the work of over $26,000 and earned $3,672 of interest, though Brother Drake gave only $1,200 in 1889 and $380 each year until he paid in $5,000 within 10 years.

READ THIS FOR CONSCIENCE' SAKE

SINCE our April meeting your Board of Church Extension has been compelled, because of lack of money, to refuse aid to all applicants except in a few cases where small loans were granted out of our Named Funds. We have had seventy-eight applications for help since April, and every appealing congregation came with strong pleadings showing the best of reasons why we should help them to build. Each congregation was in a growing town or city with great promise of a strong church if only an adequate building could be erected. None of these can be aided until we hear from our Annual Offering in September. Our Offering must bring over Eighty Thousand Dollars if these worthy mission churches are to be aided.

The Church that is Properly Housed becomes a Fixed Star of the First Magnitude—a Shining Light within its Own Community, to its Own Country and Throughout the Whole World.

THE ANNUITY PLAN. WHAT IT IS! HOW IT WORKS!

IN OUR CHURCH EXTENSION FUND, AT KANSAS CITY, MO.

What It Is—Through our Annuity Plan you can administer upon your own estate by putting your money into our Church Extension Fund. This is far better than making a bequest, because the Board will pay you 6 per cent, in semi-annual payments, if you are fifty years old, or more, and the interest will be paid to your wife if she survives you. Between the ages of forty and forty-nine the rate is 5 per cent, and 4 per cent, between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-nine.

ITS GREAT ADVANTAGES TO YOU:

1. You can see your money work while you live.
2. You have no trouble or losses in making reinvestments.
3. You have no taxes or attorneys' fees to pay and your income is regular.
4. The Society is perpetual and is incorporated. Its funds are perpetual and are loaned only on first mortgages where titles are absolutely good.
5. Your money is safe because the Annuity Bond which the Board issues you is as good as a Government Bond because it is backed up by all of the assets of the Fund, which now amount to $650,000 and which will constantly increase.
6. We receive remittances of $100, or as many hundreds or thousands as you can send, and your money will be received at any time and the Bond will be dated so that your interest begins at once.

How Your Money Works—The Board does not invest your money in some secular enterprise and WAIT FOR YOU TO DIE before using it in the work of Church Extension. All of our Annuity money is loaned at 6 per cent to aid promising congregations to build. The money is returned by the churches using it in five equal, annual installments, and as fast as it returns it goes out again and again to build churches. Your money is thus in a PERPETUAL WHIRL OF DOING GOOD, because we have more demands for Annuity money than we can answer. Our mission churches in the new Southwest are glad to get Annuity money from the Board of Church Extension and pay 6 per cent, which is only 2 per cent more than is charged for the regular funds. They then have their loans in the hands of their friends.

Our Annuity Fund has received 224 gifts and $215,000, and 125 church buildings have been erected by Annuity Funds alone.

We can use $100,000 this year. Send remittances at once and give your full legal name and your age. Remit to

To our Subscribers:

Dear Friends:--

It is with much regret that we have been compelled, this week, to discontinue mailing The Christian-Evangelist to a number of our subscribers, but the United States Postal Authorities have recently informed us that the limit of time has expired, and that all subscribers who are in arrears so as to come within the recent ruling, must be discontinued.

Some of those whose names we have taken from our list this week, are old friends, who have been with us for years, and, while we are satisfied that it is their intention to pay up shortly, yet, the order from the Post Office Department left us no alternative, and therefore, this week, the names of our subscribers above referred to, are omitted from our mailing list.

The object of this communication, is to impress upon our present subscribers, that Uncle Sam means what he says, and that it will be best for all concerned, if subscriptions are paid promptly, in advance, as per the terms of subscription to this paper. In this event, there will be no question about the right to keep their names on the list, and we suggest that ALL of our subscribers make it a point to pay their subscriptions in advance, and under no circumstances let the arrearage extend over a few months. Sincerely,

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

"Soul Mates."

The "affinity" fad has had a hard knock. July a year ago one F. P. Earle declared he had found his "twin soul," and a few months later the possessor of this declared they were "born to make each other happy for life." A year later Earle is put in jail for beating his "twin soul." The woman gets about what most people expected; the man ought to get a good whipping, and then another. He discarded one wife and their child, and then behaves like a brute to another woman, with her month-old baby, whom he had deluded. The substitution of the electric glare of newspaper publicity for the home light is no sign of a God-given love. Modern rationalism has not improved upon the marriage institution as divinely directed.

A Good Plan.

"Whenever the people of a certain district or county wish to abolish drinking houses an election is held, at which all adult males in that territory are supposed to vote. If any are absent, their votes are counted for prohibition. Another election can not be held until after five years." This refers to a referendum system which Norway is said to possess. That country has been in the vanguard in matters pertaining to experimental temperance legislation. The plan above mentioned forces the liquor upholders to come out in the open.

Flood Heroism.

During the past week there were two disastrous floods. Throughout the Carolinas and Georgia much damage was done and some lives lost. Augusta suffered most through the breaking of a big dam which let the flood waters of the Savannah River into the city, with a depth of from five to twelve feet of water in many places. Another flood struck the little town of Folsom, N. M., on Thursday night. At the crest of the flood the water is said to have been thirteen feet deep and a mile wide in the canyon where the town is located. From here is recorded a case of real heroism. Hundreds of citizens owe their lives to the devotion of a Mrs. J. S. Rooke, a telephone operator, who called up number after number with the warning that a flood was coming. This heroine lost her own life, remaining at her switchboard until she was swept away. Her body was found twelve miles down the canyon, and the headpiece worn by telephone operators still gripped her ear.

Death of Mr. Spofford.

In 1861 there were 70,000 volumes in the library of Congress; at the present time there are 2,500,000. The great growth of this institution was largely due to Ainsworth R. Spofford, whose death has just been announced. For thirty-three years he was chief librarian, and for fourteen years he was chief assistant librarian. Before accepting this work he was in the publishing business, and for two years the assistant editor of a Cincinnati daily paper. It was he who called the attention of Congress to the need of a new library building, and the result was the present structure, the finest in the world. It cost six millions of dollars and has space for 4,500,000 volumes. The ideas of Mr. Spofford were largely considered in the design, and he planned for a century. Mr. Spofford was a mine of information and he was always ready to help those seeking him.

A Foolish Revolt.

That Socialism is an increasing force in the world few observant people will deny. But the world is not ready for an anarchic revolt. This is manifest from the flash in the pan made by the Revolutionary Socialists in Paris. For a long time these have openly advocated violent revolution as a means of obtaining their desires. There was a sudden outbreak the other day, and as sudden a suppression of it. The ease with which the rising was put down makes one feel hopeful that Socialists will continue content to let their propaganda develop through the natural evolution of ideas, with a survival of the fittest as the ultimate aim.

The Congo—A New Regime.

After years of human suffering, after long efforts on the part of missionaries and humanitarians, and after months of a parliamentary struggle, there may soon dawn a day of justice for the Congo. We are especially interested in the outcome of all this, as the best known mission station in our brotherhood will be intimately associated with this great region of the Congo basin. For years the cry has been "rubber, rubber," and this has been exacted without regard to life or limb of the natives. But the Belgian Chamber of Deputies has adopted the Congo annexation treaty, whereby the control of this great region passes from the unworthy Leopold to a state with a somewhat awakened conscience. The king retains some valuable land and a lifetime interest in some important properties, and will receive ten millions of dollars for construction of hospitals, etc., within fifteen years. On his death all this reverts to Belgium. Forced labor is to be abolished and the exploiting of Congo concessions by members of parliament is prohibited. The new regime may not be all that could be desired, but it promises to be a great improvement on the past.

Bird's Plumage on Hats.

Britain's queen has declared that she will no longer wear the plumage of birds. It is time some one should make a determined effort to stop the ruthless slaughter of the innocents. We are glad to note that Louisiana is enforcing a law against the destruction of song-birds. Over half a million robins, it is said, are shot in that state every year by Italians. We believe there is a law in Missouri against wearing of bird feathers. A St. Louis paper tells to-day of the shooting of wild ducks before the legal season. These are seemingly little matters, but they are the things behind Springfield riots.

The Springfield Riot.

We need not traverse the details already fully reported in the daily press of the riot by which homes were burned or demolished, an innocent negro hung, five other people killed and many wounded. There are many things at issue in this riot, but at the bottom of the cause was the venal politics which panders to depravity and winks at crime if thereby it may gain the balance of power. Here is a warning to voters to elect men known to be clean, men who will, if the test has to come, put party behind purity.

Just who gets the profits when in the country you can have all the apples you want for the cartage, while in the city you buy them at three for a dime, we do not pretend to say. But a union of apple-growers has been launched, the plan being to pool the product and thus fight the railroads and jobbers or whoever takes the choice pickings at the expense of the public and the producers.

Large results are expected from a Moral Education Congress, which is to be held in England in September. It is to be non-party and will welcome representatives from all recognized religious bodies.

Editorial

Next Lord's Day.

This is our last opportunity before the September offering for Church Extension to call the attention of our ministers and churches to this important branch of our work. Much, of course, depends upon the ministers, as they are the leaders in every good work. Brother Muckley reports that the Church Extension treasury is more depleted than it has been in years. At the last Board meeting, in August, there were applications for $76,000, and not a dollar could be granted. The September offering, therefore, is awaited with great anxiety, and the need for liberality is urgent. Brother Muckley, watching by the bedside of his sick wife, who has had to undergo a very severe and critical operation, has not, perhaps, had the time that he ordinarily has to urge this offering upon the brethren. We are sure our preachers will supplement any lack on his part, for this reason, by their own voluntary zeal in leading the brethren to a liberal offering.

If, for any cause, the first Lord's day in September is not the most propitious, fix on another day in September, and see that the offering is made. See to it, also, that the members who do not happen to be present on the day when the offering is taken, have an opportunity of giving to this worthy enterprise.

A Little Talk With Our Readers.

It is not often that we introduce matters of a business nature on this page, but the close relation of an Editor to his readers, we are sure, will justify us in calling attention to a matter that is of mutual interest. You have been made thoroughly conversant with the new ruling of the postoffice department, requiring subscriptions to be paid within a year as a condition of being sent at the regular postal rate. Whatever may have been the motive of the government in establishing this ruling, its effect will doubtless be to enforce better business regulations in connection with newspaper subscriptions. In the years past, both publishers and patrons of newspapers, and particularly of religious journals, have formed careless habits, the one in paying his subscription, and the other in requiring payment within fixed limits. We have found our subscribers so honest and honorable, in the main, so trustworthy and sure to pay in the end, that we have allowed their subscriptions to run along for years. We would still be inclined to be generous in that direction if the government, with the purpose, no doubt, of correcting another abuse of a different kind, had not interposed this order, limiting the time during which papers may be sent to subscribers without pay, at regular newspaper rates. While this may work a little hardship, both to subscribers and to publishers, in the beginning, when they become accustomed to it, we think it will prove a blessing to both.

Our editorial interest in this matter is very deep. We are in the enterprise of religious journalism chiefly for the purpose of reaching and influencing for good as many people as possible. We have, through the years past, built up a large patronage and secured a wide circulation for "The Christian-Evangelist" throughout the United States, with scattering readers in foreign lands. It is natural that we should wish to maintain our relation with these readers, and that we should fear lest this new government regulation, until it is more widely recognized and understood, should seriously cut down the number of our subscribers. We are particularly desirous, just now, not simply to hold on to the readers we have, but to reach a vastly larger number of readers, in view of the fact that matters of transcendant importance are to be treated in our columns during the coming year. We are maturing plans for the discussion of our principles and Centennial aims, and for articles of historical value, which none of those who value the cause for which we are pleading can afford to miss. We sincerely believe it would be a loss to our individual members, and to our cause as a whole, if the important matters to be presented in our pages during the coming year should not be read and carefully considered by a very large part of the Brotherhood.

Now, the object of this little talk with you, dear reader, is a very practical one. Turn at once to the yellow tab on your paper which bears your name, and observe the date following, which designates the time to which you have paid. You will then know at once whether you belong to the class to which the postoffice department says we can not send the paper at the regular rate of postage longer, without payment of subscription. If you find this to be the case, do you not owe it to us, to yourself and to the cause we both love, to give the matter your immediate attention, even at the cost of some inconvenience? There are several thousands of our readers who should do that this week, and remit promptly to this office that our present relationship may be continued, and that "The Christian-Evangelist" may not be found an offender against governmental regulations. We make this appeal to your sense of right and justice, and to your love for our common cause. We shall be disappointed if this does not meet with your immediate response.

He feels each pang His children feel;
A tender Father He!
O exiled heart, by men disdained,
Will He not care for thee?

Watchwords for the Times:

Unity, Fraternity, Progress.

This would seem to be a good motto for us, especially in these Centennial days. Unity—the realization among ourselves of what we are pleading for in the religious world. Fraternity—the manifestation of the brotherly spirit both in our personal relations with each other, and in our mutual co-operation for the accomplishment of common ends. Progress—going forward to possess whatever land the Lord our God may have given us, to accept whatever truth he may show us, and to an ever-increasing growth, both in the knowledge of Christ, and in the doing of his will on earth.

In the old days of our civil war when the army was on the march, and the ranks had become too far separated, there would be heard, on occasion, especially if something serious on ahead was taking place, the command, "Close up ranks!" We are approaching a most important event in our history—our Centennial celebration. Ought we not to hear ringing down from the heights above, the word of our great Commander, "Close up your ranks, and forward march"? This is no time for internal dissension. It is no time for hard and harsh epithets. It is a time for unity of heart, of purpose, and of effort. It is a time when we should have charity one for another, even the charity that covers a multitude of faults. Nor is it a time for doubtful disputations, for unprofitable speculations, for the raising of questions the settlement of which is not essential to our peace and progress. It is not a time to see how near we may approach the abyss and yet maintain our footing. Rather it is a time for walking in the plain way, even the Highway of Holiness, where no ravenous beast or venomous reptile may be found to harm us. The tasks and duties about which there is absolutely no uncertainty are so great in magnitude and so difficult in accomplishment, that we have no time nor energy to spare on doubtful or unprofitable questions or enterprises. We can maintain unity only as we exercise charity and forbearance on the one hand and proper caution and care in avoiding doubtful positions, on the other hand. The times demand that we comply with these conditions.

We must have fraternity. We must be brotherly. We must emphasize the principles of brotherhood. We must stand together like brothers, facing common duties and common perils. We must help each other. We are brothers all, in spite of our difference of opinion. The slogan of our movement, "Back to Christ and union in him for the conversion of the world," makes the blood course quicker through all our veins. Down below the surface agitation of our differences there is this great substratum of unity of faith and of purpose. Fraternity means, also, that we take hold, each according to his ability, to help carry out our great Centennial program. There is no real fraternity where there is not mutual co-operation. Let us all lay hold and help lift.

We must go forward. Where there is no progress, there is no life. "New occasions teach new duties." New light will come to us from many sources, or rather from one source, through many channels, if we are seeking earnestly to do God's will on earth as it is done in heaven. We must not shut our eyes to this light. New methods, larger plans, greater sacrifices and more single-hearted devotion to the work God has given us to do, are demanded by the new times in which we live. God has great things to show us of which we have yet scarcely caught a glimpse. We must be expectant, with our faces turned to the future, and our eyes ever fixed on the conquering Christ, who is leading us on. Our progress must ever be toward Christ and under Christ, and not away from him. But only a moving column can keep in touch with, and be loyal to, a victorious Leader marching on to universal conquest.

But all these things which we have mentioned imply one fundamental thing —a closer and more vital union with Christ, a larger sharing of his life, and a deeper fellowship with his great purposes. Let us look to this one vital and fundamental condition, and all these other things shall be added unto us.

Notes and Comments

It appears from reports that the reported union of Baptists and Disciples at Portage La Prairie, in Western Canada, was not after all a union, but a sort of aggregation or combination, for the two congregations have resumed their separate life as before. It appears that in the final issue, according to report, the Disciples all voted in favor of continued union according to the original terms, while all the Baptists voted that the union be dissolved. A local paper stated that the union was discontinued because of "important doctrinal differences." This incident ought to be very helpful in suggesting the proper course in future with reference to promoting local union between congregations of these two bodies. It suggests that real union is a matter of growth, and can not be unduly hastened. There must be a preparation for union before any real union can be effected. An important part of this preparation is the realization of the sinfulness of division, and a clear understanding of the truth that loyalty to Christ compels us to seek union with other followers of his, just as much as it compels us to stand for New Testament faith and ordinances. Another thing that must be learned by both parties to the union is, that "doctrinal differences" exist among the members of every religious body, and of every local congregation, and that a unity of faith is all that can be expected or desired, as a condition of union. Another essential part of the preparation is, that the peoples uniting should know each other, and learn to love each other as brethren. It is only the faith that ripens into love that is capable of overlooking differences of opinion. Perhaps, if these churches at Portage La Prairie had worked together for a time in some common enterprise, in which they were jointly interested, they would have learned in such co-operation both the value of union and the way to its realization.

Another method of promoting unity among Baptists and Disciples is suggested by the fact above mentioned. Would it not be practicable for some representative men of the two bodies to formulate some conditions under which union might be desirable in certain localities—that is, the blending of two churches into one—which would be a guide to these local congregations? While both bodies believe in the autonomy of the local congregation, we also believe in their interdependence. No church liveth unto itself, or dieth unto itself. It is allied with other churches of like faith, and it naturally desires, in a movement of this kind, to act in harmony with the judgment of those with whom it is associated. A general advisory committee, therefore, from each of the bodies, as has been suggested by some one, would serve to avoid such unions as can not be permanent. But after all, the great thing is for us all to catch so much of the spirit of Christ, and be so imbued with his desire for union that we may be willing to follow where he leads, and to sacrifice every denominational or partisan peculiarity that stands in the way of the fulfilment of his prayer for unity.

It would be a great mistake for any religious body to conclude that, in view of the growing sentiment in favor of unity, it is unnecessary that it should carry forward with vigor its own work along its own lines or to seek to perfect its own organizations for more effective service. At the very best, it is likely to be some time yet before such a complete unification of the church as Christ prayed for will be possible. In the meantime Jesus Christ, the Head of the Church, expects us to work separately until we can work together, and to work in such a way and in such a spirit as will serve to hasten the time when we can all work together harmoniously. Paul preferred that Christ should be preached even through envy, rather than not at all, and no doubt Christ would prefer to have his work done by those who are actuated by mixed motives—love for him mingled with partisan zeal—rather than not to have it done at all.

Surely science and the highest learning must "walk by faith and not by sight." Indeed, they ought to walk in greater awe, reverence and humility, when they exist in connection with Christian faith, because they are better able to apprehend, if not to comprehend, the marvelous things which God hath wrought both in Nature and in grace. Science reveals the existence of more wonders than it can explain, and learning in its highest reaches only serves to emphasize our human ignorance, and to teach us the need of faith to lead us on and up to heights to which neither science nor learning of themselves can attain. "For seeing that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it was God's good pleasure, through the foolishness of the preaching, to save them that believe." That is only another way of saying that, in its own proper realm—the realm of religion and spiritual realities—faith in the simple gospel message is absolutely supreme, and science has no contribution to make to its knowledge of that gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation. We must recognize the limitations of science and of philosophy, and acknowledge the supremacy of faith in the domain of the spiritual, if we are to maintain the Christianity of the New Testament and openness of mind for all the truth which science and philosophy have contributed. It would be infinitely better to subordinate our knowledge or science to faith, than to sow the seeds of distrust concerning the great fundamental facts on which rest the faith and hope of earth's believing and toiling millions.

It would be impossible to quote, even briefly, from all the letters which we have received recently expressing appreciation of the attitude of "The Christian-Evangelist" toward current questions of discussion among us. We can assure these brethren, however, that their approval means much to us, as we value nothing higher than the sympathy and approval of our ablest and most representative men, except the approval of God himself. And the approval of good men is one of the ways in which we assure ourselves that we are meeting the approval of God. A number of brethren have resented, with no little heat, some imputations that have recently been made against "The Christian-Evangelist" and its Editor. But we have begged them to let the matter pass, as we are sure the brethren are able to estimate these matters at their true value. What we need, above all things, is to renew our faith in God, and our love for one another, and go forward to do the work which he has committed to our hands.

We are asked whether Christians should vote for a man for the presidency of the United States who denies the divinity of Jesus Christ. That is a question for each individual conscience to decide for itself. We are not in the habit, in this country, of making a man's religious convictions a test of his fitness for political office, and we trust we shall never do so. Indeed, our national Constitution recognizes no such test. We do not believe that any man who is irreligious or immoral can ever be elected to the presidency of the United States, because the people would not have faith in his personal integrity and fidelity to his official trust. But if he reverences God and recognizes his moral obligations, having a character above reproach in his private and official relations, no creedal test should be made a test of his fitness for official position.

Current Religious Thought

The "St. Louis Christian Advocate," under the title of "Not in the Pulpit," has an editorial upon the subject of men who have been guilty of things unbecoming the ministry. It would be well for our brotherhood to take notice of what it says:

"A Western pastor, who fell from his high estate as the result of a passion for gambling, and lost the money loaned to him by the members of his congregation, preached a sermon after his fall, taking the ground that his sin had been thoroughly repented of and that after the act of penitence he was a better man than he had ever been before.

"While no one is disposed to deny forgiveness to him who through weakness falls into error or lapses into what is virtually crime, it does not seem consonant with the fitness of things that such a man should assume the leadership of a band of religious people, no matter by what name they may be known. We are told that there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons who need no repentance. We believe it. But after uttering this weighty truth, our Lord did not add that the one sinner who repented was made the spirit leader of the ninety and nine who needed no repentance. In accordance with the fitness of things, the repentant sinner ought, in such case, to be sufficiently ashamed of his fall to take a back seat and not thrust himself into the pulpit, or even into the amen corner. The case of Peter is as solitary in the New Testament history as that of the thief on the cross."

One of the editors of the "Christian Endeavor World," in a practical manner, treats of the penalties of success. He says:

"The son of the late Archbishop of Canterbury has recently written a review article on this subject which may well give some comfort to us humble men that never expect to suffer any penalties of this sort.

"He tells us that his distinguished father was far happier in his earlier life, before the dignities and responsibilities of his high office came upon him. This we can well imagine. There is always the necessity laid upon such a man of living up to his office, of sustaining its dignity, of supporting his own reputation in every public utterance, of not falling below himself or his office.

"Every man that has made his mark in any walk of life must feel not only the strain of attainment, but the greater strain of sustaining himself. The author that has struck twelve in his first book is hardly dealt with by the critics if he strikes eleven the next time. The preacher that has a deserved reputation for eloquence disappoints his audience if he does not always equal his best. The wise administrator that makes one mistake of judgment is blamed unmercifully by the ungrateful public that forgets his ninety-nine successes.

"It is the constant strain of keeping up to a high level of efficiency that wears out brains and nerves as nothing else. Look at the successful men and women that, apparently, have not lived out half their days, that have died in middle life or little beyond it: Spurgeon, with his magnificent physique; great-hearted, mighty-limbed Moody; the talented and eloquent Frances E. Willard; the winsome and gifted Cuthbert Hall; the beloved Maltbie Babcock, to mention but a few names of those eminent in religious circles that occur to us. The wear and tear of political and business life are equally severe and are felt most by those in the highest spheres. Few Presidents of the United States have lived long after their term of office expired, and there is not a single ex-President living to-day.

"It is very well to say to the successful men: 'Don't worry; take things easily. The world got along very well before you came into it, and will wag on just the same after you go out of it.' They know this as well as we do, and those whom we have mentioned by name knew how to cast their care on Him who careth for them. Yet there is a responsibility that comes with opportunity which the most trustful can not escape, a strain on the physical system which the strongest must endure.

"I call attention to these obvious facts that they may make some of us more contented with our humbler lots. We are not 'Napoleons of finance'; but then, we have not Napoleon's load to carry. We are not gifted with eloquence; but then, we haven't an eloquent man's reputation to sustain. We are not at the head of a great enterprise; but, on the other hand, we have the weight of no great enterprise to sustain. We are in a very subordinate position, but the chances are that we shall live longer and be happier while we do live than if we exchanged places with the employer whom we envy.

"It is possible for every one to live an honest, pure, God-fearing and useful life. This, after all, is the highest type of success, and no penalties attend it."

Individualism in Christian service is being emphasized more and more. The "Christian," of London, mentions a fine example of its effectiveness. It says about Dr. Conwell, of the Baptist Temple, Philadelphia, now on a vacation in England:

"Those who went to hear Dr. Russell Conwell last week at Bloomsbury, expecting a brilliant oration, may have been disappointed in that respect; but all who sought the secret of one of the most wonderful pieces of work in America could not fail to understand what that secret was. In one sentence Dr. Conwell explained the matter. 'My church,' he said, 'is a preaching church; all the people feel their responsibility to preach the gospel. Our success is due to the individual effort of the Christian people with us.' In twenty-five years 5,600 persons have joined this one Christian church, and at one period of its history seven persons per week, during five years, were received. Dr. Conwell has been the leader of the work and not the sole preacher. A story such as he had to tell, on Tuesday week, ought to inspire us all by showing the way to that true evangelism which employs the forces of the entire Church. We have often said that it is to this ideal that we in England must direct our hearts and thoughts. Evangelism by deputy is quite unscriptural; and moreover it is a fatal mistake. The whole Church must evangelize if the world is to be touched and won."

The "Mehtodist Recorder" finds the same tendency in religious affairs at times that characterizes our age in matters secular. There is the "quick lunch" counter and the automobile style of things. In the matter of church services our contemporay says:

"We deplore the fact that reverence does not always characterize our church services to-day. It is a good thing to meditate upon the lovingkindness of the Lord, and no place offers better opportunity for this than the church. It is fitting also that the preacher take time to present the word of God in the power and demonstration of the Spirit; he is expected to edify and encourage the believer, and call sinners to repentance. In short he is called of God to 'preach the word,' and he ought to do it. 'Rose water essays,' sermonettes, or 'talkations,' as the English call them, can not take the place of the sermon. The objection is urged that long sermons are tedious, and in most cases dry and uninteresting. That depends. No man has any right to enter the sacred desk unless he has something to say, and no man who has something to say has any right to spoil it by rushing through it.

"Do not repeat the mistakes of yesterday; rectify them."—Epworth Herald.

We are rejoiced to find the denominational papers more and more emphasizing the practical value of the ordinances. In a recent number the "Epworth Herald" sees in the Lord's Supper an effective method of evangelism. It speaks in the terms of Methodism about the sacrament, the communion rail etc., but it is a great step in the right direction when a paper of such influence will say:

"In the hands of a wise and skillful pastor the communion occasion can be made a way to the new life to those who have not acknowledged Christ publicly or formally. How many there are who are not far from the kingdom! They need but an earnest word of invitation or exhortation. And the communion offers a fine opportunity for performing this high service.

"A writer in an English paper says: 'Long years ago I was met at the door of a village chapel with this remark, spoken by a steward: "I suppose there will be no good done here to-night; it's sacrament." That I am convinced would be an impossible greeting now. It is beginning to be recognized that "good," even in the limited sense in which the word was used, may be regarded as the legitimate fruit of a sacramental service. If a minister will take the trouble to point out that the service throughout is so worded as to be suitable not for saints so much as penitents; if he will show that the communion rail is never so truly a "penitent form" as at the Lord's Supper; if he will indicate the fact that to "come out" to the communion rail is at least as efficacious as to come out to an inquiry-room; he will find the Lord's Supper to be his very best evangelical opportunity.'

"We remember very vividly the story Bishop Newman used to tell of the way in which Chief Justice Chase of the United States Supreme Court made public confession and profession of Jesus Christ. It was at a communion service in Metropolitan Church Washington, during Dr. Newman's pastorate. Before concluding the service an earnest invitation was given to such as might want to live a Christian life, or to make public profession of Christ to come forward. There was a moment of silent waiting. The invitation was repeated. Then another pause. And then the chief justice came forward, bent low at the altar, and received the sacrament to his soul's comfort.

"No doubt this story, in its essential features, can be duplicated in the experience of hundreds of our ministers. The communion service may be made an agency of the greatest effectiveness in practical evangelism, and many of our pastors are constantly using it as such."

Editor's Easy Chair.

Or, Pentwater Musings.

The lake, queenlike and womanlike, though beautiful at all times, likes, on occasion, to adorn herself in a special manner so as to add to her charms and queenly beauty. This morning early she put on a rainbow for a tiara, and thus arrayed she seemed to challenge the admiration, if not the worship, of all her subjects. If God can manifest his beauty and his glory in mountain, sea and lake to our mortal vision, what unimaginable splendors must await us in realms beyond, where our vision will be clearer and broader! William A. Quayle has paid this beautiful tribute to the mountains:

"Mountains blue, dreamy, remote, compounded as of earth and air, white as built of summer cloud, builded with the massive masonry of God, tranquil, masterful, compelling wonder, watched by the stars, abundant in waterfalls, glorious in strength, battlemented for sunsets, crowned in noons, steeped in dawns, the expectation of the lowlands, rest for care, heights to which dying eyes lift their last longing, homesick look before they front the mountains of eternity—mountains, pray you, build your sublime ranges along the western landscape of the heart, so that, as we look, sunsets shall revel on our snowy crests and your long shadows shall walk from sky to sky, and we shall hear at burning noon or quiet evening or the windy morn the calling of the mountains, 'Let us journey together to the sky.'"

Accepting, as we do, that tribute to God's mountains, we believe this great inland sea worthy of no less a tribute of praise. Lake Michigan, blue, green, purple, golden, opalescent, strange mixture of water and fire, now sleeping quietly as an infant in its crib, now sublime, majestic, lifting thy proud waves, white-crested, to the light, or in placid mood mirroring cloud, sky, land and stars, offering thy broad bosom for golden pathways formed by the level beams of setting suns, tossing great ships on thy surface as feathers, singing evermore the song of the infinite and the eternal, awe us by your majesty, charm us with thy beauty, silence us by the music of your multitudinous waves, broaden us by your breadth, deepen us by your depth, humble us by your greatness and power, and whether in calm or storm, under noonday sun or the quiet stars of night, speak to us ever thy varied messages that fit us better for fairer scenes beyond.

Garrison Park lies between two lakes—the great lake in front and the little, landlocked Lake Pentwater in the rear, with its green shores and quiet bays. It does not take much of a breeze to put the little lake in commotion, but something of a storm is necessary to cause much commotion in Lake Michigan. And this is a parable: A young, small, weak, religious body, fighting for its very existence, and with an uncertain tenure of life, is excusable for excitement and alarm over some question which may arise within it to threaten its very destruction. But a larger body, with a longer history and resting secure on eternal principles of truth, which it has made its foundation, with a plea that has won more than a million adherents, and has attracted the favorable attention of thoughtful minds throughout the religious world, and whose especial mission is in harmony, not only with God's purpose in the ages, but with his special plan for the times in which we live, has no need to become excited over some rash or erratic utterance of any of its members. To allow ourselves to be thrown into a state of excitement over such an occurrence is to make the impression upon others that we are a bit nervous about our safety, and about the invulnerability of our position. It is altogether proper that, in dignified discussion, these mooted questions of difference should be dealt with, but all harsh epithets and threatened excommunications and bulls of anathema are out of order, and out of character with our position and strength. There is an automatic, self-executing law that will take care of those whose teaching in the aggregate becomes offensive to the sane public sentiment of the body. Each man, in the long run, has meted out to him, without any decree of ecclesiastical court or newspaper oracle, a measure of influence which his character and teaching merit. That law will take care of both our heretics and our heresy-hunters.

Nothing new under the sun has happened. "As it was in the beginning so it is now, and ever will be" until the end of time. We are not all cast in the same intellectual molds, and our training and the influences shaping our lives have been different. We shall not all see truth alike. It has been said that the only place where all men's heads point in the same direction is in the cemetery. For the ascertainment of truth, and for the full development of the many sides of truth, it is better that it should be so. But this fact furnishes no justification for any leader, especially, to lead in a doubtful way, a way along which it would be impossible for the masses of the people to follow him with safety. The Master will not hold any of us guiltless who leads any of his little ones into doubtful and devious ways, and causes them to be lost in the wilderness of doubt and confusion. Pastors of churches, teachers in schools, editors of religious journals, are bound to remember that they should go only where it is safe for the people to follow. There is a note of fatherly, not to say motherly tenderness, in that word of Jesus, "I have many things to say to you, but ye are not now able to bear them." No doubt he has truth yet into which he will lead his church in coming years, which we are not yet able to bear. But he expects us to be loyal to the truth which he has given us, and to that into which he may lead us, and to use it in such a way as will minister to the spiritual needs of those who look to us for counsel and guidance. There is no need for alarm or excitement; but there is need to care for others, and special need for the charity which "thinketh no evil." Soundness in the faith, with liberal mindedness, and a love for truth which transcends our reverence for traditions, will solve all our practical problems and lead us on to a great destiny.

One of the best women among all the good women we are glad to be acquainted with, and one who walks close with God, writes in a recent letter to know what all this she is seeing in the newspapers means, and says she is at a loss sometimes to know what she is to believe. She is probably a type of many others, who are troubled more than need be over newspaper reports and discussions. Our answer to her question, about what she should believe, is that which was given a long time ago in a Philippian jail: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." There is no other faith that saves. Whoever has that faith, broad-based on the divine testimony, and confirmed in one's own religious experience of his power to save from sin, need not fear the outcome of all the criticisms and discussions in which men may engage. To all such troubled hearts we are sure Jesus would speak as he did to the troubled waves of Galilee: "Peace, be still!" As a further remedy for doubts and fears, believe in Christ's presence in his church, in God's overruling providence, in the conquering power of truth, in the loyalty and fidelity of the great body of Christ's followers, and in the ultimate triumph of the kingdom of God over all the forces of evil. We have not outgrown the simple faith which takes God at his word and trusts him, nor has the sweet, old gospel, which stirred the hearts of our fathers and mothers in the ages gone by, lost its power to convict of sin, or to comfort and sustain the believer in hours of trial, bereavement and pain. The great certainties remain, and will remain, when all our discussions and differences have passed away. Rest on this, and fear not.

Last night the gentle pattering of the rain on the roof made a pleasant accompaniment for sleeping. It was much needed in these parts. This morning dawns clear and placid, with that quietness and stillness which often mark the closing days of summer. The Moores leave us to-day. We shall miss them very much. T. P. Haley addressed a large audience for this place at the Baptist church on last Lord's day morning, and his sermon gave great satisfaction to all. He and his wife are still at the club-house, and expect to be here until next week. M. E. Chatley, of Ravenna, Ohio, has been chosen to speak on next Lord's day at the hall. W. F. Shrontz, our minister here, has been able, so far, each Lord's day, to find some one of his preaching brethren here to speak for him. Both the Methodist and Baptist churches, also, profit by the presence of our preachers and members at this Park. All our friends who have been here during the summer have expressed a desire to return again, and we have had a most delightful fellowship together during the season that is soon to close. Our steamer berths have already been engaged for September 7, giving us only one week more of our summer life here by the lake. While we have been dictating these lines we have been watching, at the same time, a fisherman out at his nets, gathering in the spoils of the night, but his harvest season, too, will soon be over, for they aim to get in their nets before the autumn storms set in. That wide, expansive lake that stretches out before us is not a barren waste as it seems, contributing nothing to the support of men, for out of its depths each year are brought vast treasures of food, and its commerce furnishes employment for large populations. But, added to all these material benefits, are the life and health and happiness which it furnishes to those who dwell along its shores, especially during the summer season, for rest and recuperation.

LOOKING GLASSES By Austin Hunter

The epistle of James is, above all things, the epistle of practical Christianity. He deals not so much with the great doctrines of the gospel, as with the practical application of these doctrines to the affairs of everyday life. He speaks of the control of the tongue, of the danger of riches, of impartial treatment of rich and poor in the church, of the worthlessness of faith without works, and even religion itself is translated into terms of practical life when he says: "Pure religion and undefiled before God the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted before the world." And so, in the introductory chapter, emphasis is placed upon doing the word. "If any man be a hearer and not a doer of the word, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass; for he beholdeth himself and goeth his way and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was." That is to say, if he beholds his face in the glass the vision should be for his profit. Instead of forgetting his defects, he should endeavor to correct them. So there is great profit in looking glasses if they are properly used. I wish to point out some of the mirrors that reflect, not our physical features, but our soul features, and some of the uses we should make of them.

Certainly one of these mirrors is memory. We sit alone and permit the pictures of the past in our lives to come up one by one, and conscience at once begins to call for approval or disapproval. We are candid and admit the sins of anger, jealousy, selfishness, etc., and seeing these things to be so, we stop the moving pictures to go about life's duties to "straightway forget" what manner of persons we are. It was only when the prodigal son got away from the excitement of his fast life that he saw himself as he really was in the mirror of his memory, and so "he came to himself." If we could be ushered into a hall on whose walls were painted all the sins we have ever committed, and we were compelled to look upon them, such a hall would indeed be a "judgment hall." Memory becomes a great looking glass, in which we see our inner life reflected. The fact is that no small part of future punishment will consist in the memory of life's evil deeds.

"I sat alone with my conscience
In a place where time had ceased,
And we talked of my former living
In the land where the years increased.
The ghosts of forgotten actions
Came floating before my sight,
And things that I thought were dead things
Were alive with a terrible might.

"The vision of all my past life
Was an awful thing to face,
Alone with my conscience sitting
In that silently solemn place.

"And now alone with my conscience
In the place where the years increase,
I try to recall that future
In the land where time will cease,
And I know of the future judgment
How dreadful soe'er it be
To sit alone with my conscience
Will be judgment enough for me."

A second mirror in which we see our true soul features is the Word of God. One reason why so few people read the sacred page is due to the fact that the truth is so apparent that it makes them uncomfortable to see themselves as they really are. We are told that "the word of God is quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." That is to say, the word of God reveals ourselves to ourselves. It exposes the secret springs of our conduct. It is a revelation of human nature. The sermon on the Mount, for instance, dissects the very soul of man. It is both an exponent and an expositor of the secret life. There is a marvelous penetration in the word of God. There is nothing better that could come to some men than to sit down calmly with the word of God and see the reflection of their own lives.

"Oh, blessed mirror of the word,
Thine image is not dim or blurred,
Looking in thee myself I see
As God's Omniscient eye sees me."

A third mirror is the spoken message. Thousands have seen themselves guilty before God under the preaching of the gospel, and have gone away straightway to forget what they saw when listening to the truth. When Paul preached before Felix and "reasoned of temperance, righteousness and judgment to come," Felix trembled because it was a reflection of his own life; but he "straightway forgot" what manner of man he was, for he said: "Go thy way this time, and when I have a convenient season I will call for thee." But it was the preached word that became the mirror of his life. Peter's sermon on Pentecost was a looking glass in which many saw themselves, for "they were pricked in their hearts." And the remarkable thing about preaching is that people sometimes see themselves so clearly pictured that they think the sermon is a message directed personally to them. An old German, whose son John brought the minister to the church, upon hearing his own defects so clearly portrayed in the sermon, jumped up and shouted: "Shtop! Haf you und Sohn been confabing about me?" At the close of a sermon a man once said to me, heartily: "I do not think it is nice for you to preach a whole sermon at me." It amused me, inasmuch as I had not the slightest idea of preaching even a part of the sermon at him. The sermon, however, was evidently a reflection of his own life. It reminded me of the story Mr. Spurgeon tells: John Plowman and Will Shepherd were talking about their master's old donkey. John said: "He is so old and stubborn he is really not worth his keep." "No," said Will, "and worse still he is so vicious that I feel sure he'll do somebody a mischief some of these days." They were talking rather loud, and were much surprised when Joe Scroggs came from behind the haystack, running over with anger. He said he would let them know he was as good a man as either of them, or the two put together, talking about him in that way. After he had exhausted his anger, John said: "Why, Joe, we were talking about our master's old donkey and not about you, but I shall never see that old donkey again without thinking of Joe Scroggs."

And so a faithful sermon becomes a revelation of men to themselves.

Another mirror in which we see ourselves, strange as it may seem, is the good lives of others, and especially the spotless life of the Master. We see ourselves by contrast. It was thus that Peter saw himself in the light of Christ when he cried, "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man!" It was thus that Isaiah saw himself in the light of God's holiness when he cried, "Woe is me, I am undone; I am a man of unclean lips." Oftentimes our own indifference, carelessness, faithlessness and selfishness in God's work is clearly reflected in the devotion, the earnestness, and unselfish activity of some faithful child of God.

But now what are some of the uses we should make of these looking-glasses?

First of all, we ought often to look into them. We ought to see ourselves; self-examination is a good thing. Then we ought to remember the vision. Let us not "straightway forget." If we see our defects, instead of trying to blind our eyes to them, we should endeavor to correct them. An African princess who had never beheld her dusky countenance except dimly in a lake, but who had been told that she was very beautiful whereas she was exceedingly plain, sent to a distant mission station for a mirror. When she saw herself as she was, she smashed the looking glass into pieces. Are there not many in other lands who are in a similar condition with regard to their souls? When brought face to face with the hideousness of their sins, they blame the mirror and seek to flatter themselves that they are not as ugly as they appear.

Furthermore, seeing ourselves ought to make us more considerate of others. Seeing our own faults should make us more charitable in dealing with the faults of others. We cannot well cast out the mote in the eye of another as long as we have a beam in our own.

Finally, seeing ourselves ought to point us to Jesus, who alone can remove the scars and blemishes from the heart. This means that we shall "receive with meekness the engrafted word." This means that we shall obey God, for James pronounces the condemnation against those who "hear and do not."

To quit your tasks simply because you do not feel like keeping at them is sheer folly. Whatever your condition may be, the only right and wise course is to discharge all your duties as well as you can, leaving the consequences to God. You will often be surprised to discover that your capacities are really far greater than you had supposed.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

NIGHT NURSE

Kept in Perfect Trim by Right Food.

Nursing the sick is often very burdensome to the nurse.

Night nursing is liable to be even more exhausting from the fact that the demands of the system for sleep are more urgent during the night hours.

A Va. lady called on to act as night nurse in the family, found the greatest support from the use of Grape-Nuts food. She says:

"Our acquaintance with Grape-Nuts began eight years ago. We bought the first package sold in this place, and although we began as skepties we became converts to its striking food value.

"I used Grape-Nuts first, to sustain me when doing night nursing for a member of the family. I ate a teaspoonful at a time, and by slowly chewing it I was able to keep awake and felt no fatigue.

"Soon I grew to like Grape-Nuts very much and after our patient recovered I was surprised to find that I was not all "worn out" on account of broken rest. My nerves were strong and steady and my digestion fine. This was the more surprising because I had always suffered with weak nerves and indigestion. My experience was so satisfactory that other members of the family took up Grape-Nuts with like results." "There's a Reason."

THE CHURCH AND MEN

The Address of which we print this week the last installment was read at the Tenth Annual Congress of the Disciples of Christ, at Bloomington, Illinois.

By Arthur Holmes

Religious and Educational Work Secretary of the Pennsylvania R. R. Y. M. C. A.

Men and the Church.

The adoption of the kingdom of God as a serious and practicable ideal does not mean, first, the indorsement of a specific political party nor any particular program as the right one, and to make membership depend upon its acceptance; nor, secondly, does it mean the easy dismissal of all industrial troubles by the pious quotation of the Golden Rule. Many good people believe that such difficulties reside not in external conditions like wages, hour of labor, etc., but in the mere wills of the contracting parties to apply the principle of love to all their dealings.

While it is undoubtedly true that applications of this principle have lagged far behind public opinion and in many clear instances obedience to its spirit would bring salutary results, it must not be concluded that it carries in itself the solution of all problems ready-made.

"Before slavery was abolished in our country, there were millions of genuine Christians, honestly willing to see and do the right in other matters, to whom it seemed a preposterous proposition that slavery is incompatible with Christianity.

"To-day there are few Christians who realize that it is a crying wrong to hold land idle for speculation in cities where men's lungs are rotting away, overgrown with tuberculosis bacilli for lack of air; few realize that it is a flat denial of Christianity to take advantage of the needs of your fellow-men to buy his labor cheaply or sell him your goods dearly." ("Christianity and the Social Crisis," page 158.)

The Golden Rule is one expression of justice. Justice demands for each man his due. That requires the most careful and extended experimentation to find what is each man's due. Apply it to the wage question: How much should a workingman receive? Obviously not what the employer would like under reversed conditions, but what is right "under the circumstances." The innocent circumstances turn out to be all the modifying effects of our modern life. To fully comprehend them would compel us to "trace their causes from primeval chaos and their sequences to the crack of doom."

In other words, specific application of the Golden Rule can be found only by experimentation. No class of men can better grapple with this problem of experiments than the ministers. They are in the habit of analyzing. Surely they can do better than the gropers after light among the uneducated workers or the prejudiced capitalists. They should study economic problems more urgently than theology. Single tax, prohibition, local option, the wage system, anarchism, socialism from Karl Marx down should be thought out broadly, historically and accurately. Conclusions, of course, should be tempered with the charity of empiricism.

"He nourished within his soul the ideal of a common life so radically different from the present that it involved a reversal of values, a revolutionary displacement of existing relations. This ideal was not merely a beautiful dream to solace his soul. He lived it out in his own daily life. He urged others to live that way. He dared to believe that it would triumph. . . . He never abandoned his faith in the final triumph of that Kingdom of God for which he had lived. For the present, the cross, but beyond the cross, the Kingdom of God." ("Christianity and the Social Crisis," p. 89).

So the task of the church is as radical and revolutionary as it was in the first century. It is nothing less than a complete change of viewpoint upon all social questions. The battle must go on until the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord Jesus. The consummation may be distant and the time long. In the meantime it is fitting that some practical plans for bringing the church to men be pursued.

Immediately, when any marked changes in methods are proposed, difficulties thicken. Be it said to the glory of the ministers that generally the opposition does not lie with them. They may be the mouth-pieces and upon them the odium for the system may rest, but usually back of them, in each congregation, is the little band of conservatives, who, for their very faults, have been elevated to positions of power and control. They are they who have succeeded in the world and have been put in office because they have money and conservative sense.

The Problem of the Boy.

The first point of positive attack is probably the adolescent boy. So important is he that many would reduce the main problem of bringing the churches to men to that of holding the boys in the church during their teens. To hold them requires a change in methods.

First in place and importance is a careful study of the boy himself. He is a peculiar animal. Roughly he may be classed with the genus homo. He has been until recently counted simply a young specimen of that genus, an immature man, or a mannikin. Now it is admitted that he is certainly of a different variety; during the period of adolescence, of several varieties. So far no distinguishing name has been found for him; he is called a "junior," an "intermediate," a youth, a hobbledehoy, or something. This ignorance is largely due, perhaps, to the fact that he is a matter of fond and solicitous study to nobody on earth but his mother and members of the opposite sex about his own age. To all others he is the quintescence of vociferous conceit and painful unfitness, to be dealt with in pity more than in anger. Nevertheless, he is a man in the making and until he is taken seriously and marked at the highest premium will the problem of holding men in the churches be solved.

For some practical attacks upon this phase of work, the co-operation of the churches and Y. M. C. A.'s in Salt Lake City, Utah, and Fort Worth, Kan., furnishes the most so far successful and apparently feasible plan. Boys of the city are organized into affiliated clubs for developing all round character. The physical and educational work is carried on in the association building because of convenience, and the social and religious work in the churches or Sunday schools. A fee of $4 yearly is charged.

Inter-club athletics are arranged. Bible classes are organized. Attendance at Sunday-school is a condition of membership. In Salt Lake City, one thousand boys are thus clubbed together for higher ideals in sports, school work, religious and personal life. ("Association Boys," December, 1907, Vol. VI, No. 6, Salt Lake City Association).

Clubs and Groups.

The club or group idea has in it several features specially adapted for a transition policy.

First, it tends to eliminate that nightmare of all present day religious organizations, the crowd-craze. Clubs cure that. Work in small groups emphasize personal contact and personal worth. It permits the consideration of group interests. Movements like prohibition, which the church can not indorse as a whole, can be considered and promoted by a few men interested in them.

Another obsession of churches is the preservation of suborganizations long after impotence and old age have destroyed their usefulness, and made them mere pensioners on the main body. What agonizing endeavors to inject virility would be saved if only a decent burial could be accorded a society when it is dead, knows it is dead, and everybody else knows it is dead, even by the evidence Martha urged for the death of her brother! Now, clubs can be organized for short periods. When they have served their purpose they come to one end, decently and in order, without death agonies and post mortem reflex kickings. Further, the method permits the expression of three principles of work, revolutionary, yet necessary in the rehabilitation of the church in the eyes of men.

The first is this: Go where men are. For simplicity, this will be stretched to include their spiritual as well as spatial conditions. It obviates the everlasting strain of trying to get men where they don't want to come, and are not comfortable when they get there. It reverses present viewpoints. It looks out, not in. It makes the church a center from which, not in which, to work. It commands the church to work in, not work a community. It actualizes the missionary spirit. It gives an opportunity of reaching both business men and working men, with a minimum inconvenience and loss of their time.

Shop meetings should be pushed by the church, under the auspices of some interdenominational organization, if possible. Charles Stelzle has recently held shop campaigns in five cities, during 60 days, in 400 shops, enlisting 500 preachers in 1,000 meetings, reaching 200,000 men. Business men can be reached by having a supper at some downtown club place where they will feel free and where they can take up some definite discussion or piece of work. The Pennsylvania Railroad Y. M. C. A. recently had ninety men each pay $1.50 for four suppers and four lectures by Dr. A. T. Clay, University of Pennsylvania, on "Babylonian Excavations," ending with a visit to the Archæological Museum. Such experience convinces me that men are hungry for a little stronger pabulum than is being served in the present church services.

The second principle is the use of the voluntary worker. Use him as a leader.

Use him because voluntariness is the essence of the service in the kingdom; because love stands out clear and vivid as the sole motive and therefore has a force that no mere paid labor can ever have. Mr. Robert Speer recently said at Washington: "You never will evangelize the world with professional missionaries. It never has been done. It can not be done. We are waiting for the day when every man in the diplomatic or consular or commercial responsibility from this land will go as a true representative of a Christian nation." (Y. M. C. A. report of Washington convention, 1907, pp. 145-47.) I am tempted to believe that something of the same thing is true in America. I am persuaded that every effort of a professional religionist must be discounted 25 per cent and every effort of a volunteer be put at 25 per cent premium in advancing the kingdom.

Besides, it saves the minister a large consideration as long as he is chained to the inanities of his present position, and the tradition of the regular double sermonic doses on Sunday. It offers an opportunity, too, of breaking up the somnolescent monotony of the services. At Cleveland, O., the Y. M. C. A. held meetings for men at night in different churches. The men distributed cards in the morning at the church hour, by experience found to be the best time to catch men at home. Laymen did everything, singing, ushering, organizing, and making five-minute-speeches. The churches were interested and men converted.

During the past winter we have had, before one Bible club, the presentation of the work done by a dozen philanthropic and religious organizations in our city. Speakers are always willing to come, the lantern can often be used and the inspiration and knowledge gained is invaluable. In some places a part of the prayer-meeting hour might be used in such a way.

The third principle is the use of average men. It gives the ordinary man the longed-for opportunity to individualize himself. The puddle may be little, but it makes him a big duck. The task set is neither too large nor too difficult for his powers. Neither is it so important that failure will cause the general disruption of the congregation. It breaks up narrow traditions and reduces the dominance of a few, thus making it easier for the progressive pastor to introduce new methods. Jesus must have chosen average men, for only a few ever reached much prominence.

One other hindrance to the church organization has been the lack of sufficient motive. Organization for the sake of organization is about as profitable as turning a Hindoo prayer wheel. Both expect to be heard for their "shrecklich fiel" speaking.

Group methods, combined with the church's interest in all activities of all men, greatly enlarge and enrich the field of practical objects for organization. First aid to the injured can be taught a group of workmen and they can gather together a group in their shop at noon and pass on the good work they have learned. Treatment of boils, bruises, burns, colds, the use of antiseptics, and the treatment of diseases, can all be handled in a group by some physician. Simple questions in law and courtroom practice can be taught and illustrated by some lawyer. A senate appeals to some. Good citizenship clubs can study and illustrate exactly the processes of securing citizenship papers for foreigners, or can handle a primary election. Some practical politician may be secured for such a purpose.

Clubs for promoting urban ornamentation, vacant lot gardening, public parks, baths and play grounds, establishing sterilized milk stations, will almost organize themselves.

The suppression of child-labor is urgent. Shops are wide open for meetings. All kinds of educational classes can be organized in the church. Bible clubs meeting on week-day evenings are interesting and hopeful when released from the paternal subjugation of the irrepressible preacher. Opportunities for inspiring effort spring up like dandelions on the lawn, when once the vision of absolutely free and unlimited service releases the church from her self-imposed limitations.

Last of all, the group idea for service not only removes obstructions but makes almost imperative union amongst the churches. They will never get together until they have something to get together for. That village that spent its federative energy in securing a simultaneous ringing of its church bells had the right spirit but a picayune purpose.

The comprehension of a wider mission will also further a larger and closer coordination of all religious and philanthropic organizations. Probably nothing is needed so much to-day as the complete systematization and centralization of the hundreds of social betterment societies, each declaring its own world-embracing importance, each one driving at its own particular end, cutting across and jamming into every one, and confusing and wearying the public with the babble of their hundred cries for aid. Like a log-jam, they arrest the current of orderly effectiveness and make it boil and bubble and seethe and foam to no purpose. The church is the key-log and when it is loosened from the hold of conventional barriers, the whole mass will proceed again without friction.

"Much has been done already. Through the efforts of the late Hugh Price Hughes, Peoples Churches have sprung up in nearly every city and town in the United Kingdom. In our land the strong, clear voices of such men as Father Dudley, Reverends Washington Gladden, Charles Stelzle, Graham Taylor, W. D. Bliss, Alexander F. Ervine and others are speaking conviction to the hearts of many hearers. A church association for the Advancement of the Interests of Labor has been developed in the Protestant Episcopal communion, and a Department of Labor in the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions. Great shop meetings have been held, labor Sunday is observed in thousands of churches, sermons are being preached on labor problems, and literature is being poured out all over the country."

One already feels the freshness of a free atmosphere. The outlook is encouraging. The vision of the church is broadening. Sometimes we dare to believe that the clouds are breaking away and the whole landscape will in a moment be flooded with the bright and lavish gold of morning's glory which will increase into a perfect day. "Sometimes the hot hope surges up that perhaps the long and slow climb may be ending. In the past the steps of our race toward progress have been short and feeble, and succeeded by long intervals of sloth and apathy. In the intellectual life there has been an unprecedented leap forward during the last hundred years. If the twentieth century could do for us in the control of social forces what the nineteenth did for us in the control of natural forces, our grandchildren would live in a society that would be justified in regarding our present social life as semibarbarous."

To sum up, we have endeavored to show that the main reason for the nonattendance of men at church is due to economic and social conditions. Men are split up into hostile camps.

It is the business of the church, first, to preach a personal salvation, to promise an eternal life; second, to assume as her task the establishment on earth of the kingdom of God, the validating of the Golden Rule as the fundamental principle in social conduct. Her task is then personal and social and the two are as indissolubly one as the soul and the body are one.

The adoption of this task means changes of methods. Justice will become the central thought in theology. Sermons will decrease in length, regularity and perfunctoriness.

Church buildings will change from houses for show to work-shops; services will change from shows to works. The great army of unemployed laymen now absorbent cotton men will be put to work doing more than turning prayer-wheels and every organization for the promotion of good will be eagerly seized upon as avenues through which the church may express herself.

In it she will not lose her sanctuary spirit, for she will find that when she worships indeed in the temple of the Holy Spirit that the truest and sweetest benediction will come to her; that when she embarks upon her wider mission to the least of one of these little ones, she will meet her Master face to face in the busy streets and marts of our busy-day world.

TRIED TO FORCE IT

Thought System Would Soon Tolerate Coffee.

A Boston lady tried to convince herself that she could get used to coffee, and finally found it was the stronger. She says:

"When a child, being delicate and nervous, I was not allowed coffee. But since reaching womanhood I began its use, and as the habit grew on me, I frequently endeavored to break myself of it, because of its evident bad effects.

"With me the most noticeable effect of drinking coffee was palpitation of the heart. This was at times truly alarming, and my face would flush uncomfortably and maintain its vivid hue for some time.

"I argued that my system would soon accustom itself to coffee, and continued to use it, although I had a suspicion that it was affecting my eyesight also. The kidneys early showed effects of coffee, as I found by leaving it off for a few days, when the trouble abated.

Finally a friend called my attention to Postum. At first I did not like it, but when made right—boiled 15 minutes until dark and rich—I soon found Postum was just what I wanted. No flushing of the face, no palpitation, no discomfort or inconvenience after drinking it.

"Of course all this was not felt in a week or two weeks, but within that time I can truthfully say a marked difference had taken place and a great deal of my nervousness had vanished.

"At present time my health is excellent, due to a continued use of Postum, with a general observance of proper hygiene. Of nothing am I more convinced than that if I had continued drinking coffee, I should be to-day little less than a nervous wreck, and possibly blind."

"There's a Reason."

How a Work Grew By Peter Ainslie

The Christian Temple will always be grateful to the Church Extension Board for its assistance in a critical period of its history. In 1888 this congregation was started. In 1891 they built themselves a home, which was called the Calhoun Street Church. It was large enough for the work at that time and valued at about $12,000. From thirty-three members this work grew and out of it was started two other churches in the city, then in a dozen years the building proved inadequate for the work. We could not afford to tear down Calhoun Street church building and put up a larger edifice; besides, the lot having an alley on either side of it would not permit of any other improvements. We could not afford to buy a lot elsewhere and tear down buildings to make room for the church. It was a critical period in our history. Very unexpectedly one of the parks of the city which had been held as private grounds was put on the market and on the same day we asked for an option on a lot 65x100 feet. It could only be secured on a cash payment of the entire amount, which was considerably below the regular selling price of the lots. That amount of money could not have been raised in a few days by us. The holders wanted no notes, but must have the cash if it were to be sold at the figures stated. To sell our church building in the next few days would mean a sacrifice. We made several attempts to negotiate for the purchase, but the time being so limited, our efforts were futile. We then wrote to the Church Extension Board, stating the circumstances and asking that they would purchase the lot, which was easily worth one third more than the selling price. Our option would have expired in a few days and already the property was advancing in price. We could not wait for an answer by letter from the Church Extension Board, so we asked them to answer us by telegram. Their decision came January 7, 1903, granting us the loan, which amounted to $7,250. This marked a new epoch in the history of the Disciples in the city of Baltimore, Md.

We might have sold our property on Calhoun Street and used that money for the building on our new lot, but after careful consideration we decided that it would be better to retain Calhoun Street Church as a mission station, since it was some distance away from our new site, and we began at the bottom to raise the money for the new building. We went heartily to work and the money came. On Christian Temple, Baltimore, Md.

January 15, 1905, a granite chapel with basement, first floor and gallery was opened. In a few months our building proved too small for the growing work; both the Sunday-school and the Sunday-audiences could not be accommodated with comfort. The cost of our lot and chapel had amounted to about $25,000, and we didn't feel we could go ahead, but the Lord directed otherwise, and a good brother advised us to complete the building, and on a handsome gift from him the work of completing the building began, and on September 29, 1907, the main auditorium was dedicated. The whole property represents $70,000 and is one of the handsomest churches in the city. It has a seating capacity of 1,200 and every part of it is used. From a Sunday-school of 300 in our old building we now have a Sunday-school of over 700, and in addition to all the ordinary work of the church there is connected with the Temple a college, which is called the Temple Seminary, covering a three years' course in the study of the Scriptures. Last year there were 119 students to matriculate, and besides resident students there are a number who are taking the course by correspondence. From this student body are going out preachers and missionaries; also we have an Orphanage Society, which receives and cares for neglected children. Besides these there are several missions which are being fostered by the Temple. The baptistery is kept filled all the time, and there is rarely a week but that people are baptized. The Temple is admirably located and its influence is widening daily.

If there had been no Church Extension fund, or if the Church Extension Board had not been in a position to render aid at just the proper time, it is likely, so far as we can see, that the Christian Temple would not have been in existence. We have returned the money to the Board and shall always regard the Church Extension Board as a large factor in the planning of the Christian Temple and its growing work in this city of more than half a million people. Does it pay to invest one's money in such a work? The answer must be left with the reader of these lines.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

Our Professor Willett has fallen among the paragraphers. One says the Chicago University teacher has declared there are no miracles, "so a much-mooted question is finally settled." Another says: "There never was a miracle and there never will be one," announces a college professor. That disposes of Bryan's chances for election. Still another drops into poetry:

No miracles? Nay, say not so;
For I myself have seen
A miracle. But yesterday an old man, bending low,
Stood in a crowded car with humble mien.
Among the others there
A lady sat. Her jewels gleamed, her youthful face was fair.
Beholding him, weighed down by many years, with hands that bore
The cruel marks of toil, she sweetly rose
And offered him her seat—yea, more!
Unmindful of the wondering looks of those
Who had beheld her graceful art, she bent
And spoke respectfully, as if, indeed,
She thought his usefulness and years had lent
Him dignity that it were well to heed.
Sweet in her youth she was and did not seem to hold
Him in contempt because the man was poor and old.

What do we mean by the word miracle? "An animal," says Hegel, "is a miracle to the vegetable world." Even Professor Huxley has said: "Denying the possibility of miracles seems to me quite as unjustifiable as speculative atheism." He that acknowledges a God must at least admit the possibility of a miracle. He who admits the creation of the world believes in the actual occurrence of a miracle. "No man ever worked a miracle"; no, "except God be with him."

I am more and more grateful for President McLean's little volume, "Where the Book Speaks." "Hear, O heaven, and give ear, O earth; for Jehovah hath spoken." Those twenty-one chapters are as meaty and wholesome and true to the old Book as anything that ever came from the press. Every preacher should read them about once a year. A few thousands expended in placing this treatise in the hands of anti-missionary and omissionary readers would mean tens of thousands offered for the missionary cause.

We are a "people of the Book." Some of our men used to be called "Walking Bibles." Every convert carried a New Testament in his pocket. "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent," was one of our faithful sayings and counted worthy of all acceptation. Once in a western city I had an appointment to preach and got off the train without knowing a person among all its thousands. I did not know the location of the house of worship. Of a number of people I made inquiry, and no one seemed able to inform me. After wandering aimlessly for an hour or more, I met an old couple evidently on their way to church. The man had an old style large print Testament, and I said at once to myself, "there is my man." I stopped them and asked, "Can you tell me, sir, where the Christian church is? where the people known as Disciples worship?" "Why, bless you, yes! We are going right there. Come along with us," was the hearty answer. I had found the man of the Book.

"Where the Book speaks" is constructive. It is positive. It has the force of a big soul behind it. It has a great message for the churches. Read it again and again.

This has been a hard summer at the capital city. The mercury has been ambitious to get to the top of the Washington monument. I have been here all summer. I have preached many funerals—sometimes two a day—and often preached three times on Sunday in the churches and parks and from the wagon, and watched every August night beside a bed of sickness, and learned many things. One day was spent at Bethany Beach in sight of the sea. The vacation was brief and three services that one day, but a day at Bethany was worth a cycle of Cathay. As I journey down, the fields and orchards, the ponds of water lilies, the yarrow and queen's lace and magnificent expanses of rose mallow, butter and eggs, all orange and gold, wild mustard and yellow primroses and lovely butterfly weed, and cattle grazing in the meadows. As I sat and watched the sun rise out of the ocean, the wren singing behind the cottage, swallows skimming through the air, a fish-hawk flying overhead with fish in its talons for the breakfast of its young, the voice of field lark singing and a bob-white's note in the distance, and a score of white cranes fluttering over the salt pond in the distance. As the hours wore on the sweet services in the tabernacle and happy fellowship of those who dwell here beside the deep-voiced, never-resting, world-embracing sea,

"The dim, dark sea, so like unto death,
That divides and yet unites mankind."

We have deep sea fishing here. We launch out into the deep and let down our lines for a draught. We get beyond the breakers, out among the fish that never had smell or sight of bait or net. "Launch out" sounds like "Go ye." There are deeps that have never yet been sounded, great deeps of devotion, great deeps of service, great untouched, unfathomed deeps in human hearts and human needs and human despair, and the Master commands: "Launch out into the deep and let down your nets for a draught." Are we doing it?

This has been a fine summer at the Beach. Such good helpers have had part in our program as Mrs. Ida Harrison, G. W. Remagen, J. A. Hopkins, R. S. Latimer, Col. Benj. Alvord, U. S. A., W. F. Smith, G. B. Townsend, Walter S. Hoye, L. G. Batman, P. S. Steele, W. H. Graham, Prof. William Cheney, J. McD. Horne and others, who gladly give their services without money and without price. We all regret greatly we are to lose Congressman Graham from the colony. There are many improvements, among them the cottage of Mr. Addy, president of the company, and the hotel of R. R. Bulgin. We are already planning the Centennial program.

Our Washington churches are quiet. Whitney Avenue has recalled Walter F. Smith, and he continues as pastor. Mt. Ranier is about to secure a leader. A little breeze occurred in this congregation recently when O. D. Maple entered for the pulpit; and when invited to preach and his references proving unsatisfactory, the church declined to call him, he secured a hall and bombarded the board and the congregation from the platform and through the press in a most unseemly manner. The church bore itself in a very dignified and Christianlike way toward the offender, and will soon see the end of its trials in trying men. Can not some scheme be invented by our mission boards and secretaries to abate this method of supplying churches? Is there not a more excellent way?

Two of our leaders in this section have recently fallen asleep in Christ. John W. Horner, of Rockville, and Thomas Norwood, of Washington. The first died at the ripe old age of 77. He was a man highly esteemed by all who knew him, a graduate of Bethany College of the class of '55, with Joseph King, R. L. Ware, F. W. Allen and R. M. Messick and others who sat under Mr. Campbell's instruction. He served the church for many years as elder, and was one of the founders of the State Missionary Society. A man of fine character and spirit, he will be greatly missed in our councils and work.

Thomas Norwood was 70 years of age, also a Marylander, born in Hyattstown, and spent many years in Baltimore, where he was connected with the milling firm of Thomas & Son. He served in the Union army during the great war of the sixties. His later years have been spent in Washington, where he was an active member of the Vermont, and served for a long time most faithfully and efficiently on the board of elders. Devoted to his family and the church, a true Christian gentleman, amiable and kind, benevolent and just, industrious and steadfast, honest and honorable, he was beloved and honored and moved quietly and serenely among us, rounded his three score and ten and entered into his rest.

The next interest with our churches here will be the thirtieth annual meeting of the Christian Missionary Society of Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia, at the Whitney Avenue Church, September 28-October 1. Our corresponding secretary, J. E. Stuart, has arranged a splendid program. Besides our home talent we shall have Marion Stevenson, Dr. W. P. Fairfield, president of Howard University, H. P. Atkins and representatives of our general boards. Brethren generally are invited to come up to our Jerusalem and share with us in the feast. A full program will be presented in time. If you never attended a Maryland convention a new and pleasing experience awaits you. Don't bother about which Bill is going to be president. Plan for the Maryland convention and the New Orleans anniversaries, and vote against the saloon November 3.

John McDonald Horne gave my Vermont Avenue people good satisfaction this summer and gave me an opportunity to help out our other churches. September 6 is my thirty-third anniversary, and this thirty-third year has been greatly blessed of God. We never had a happier or more fruitful year, and sing the doxology with grateful and fervent spirit.

MR. SANKEY'S SONG STORIES

First Service in England.

In June, 1873, we sailed for England, Mr. Moody taking his wife and children with him, and my wife accompanying me, having left our two children with their grandparents. The voyage was uneventful, but on arriving at Liverpool Mr. Moody received letters informing him that both Mr. Pennefather and Mr. Bainbridge, the two men who had invited us to come to England, were dead.

Neither of us had any money, and the situation looked anything but cheerful. Turning to me, Mr. Moody said, "Sankey, it seems as if God had closed the door for us, and if he will not open it we will return to America at once."

But as Mr. Moody was looking over some letters which he had received in New York before sailing and which had remained unread, he found one from the secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association at York, asking him if he ever came to England again, to come there and speak for the Association. "Here is a door," said Moody to me, after reading the letter, "which is partly open, and we will go there and begin our work."

Mr. Bennett, the association secretary, secured for our use a vacant chapel, but said that he hardly thought it worth while for us to commence work, as nearly all the people were off at the seaside. "Sankey, write out a little notice," said Mr. Moody, turning to me; "we will have some handbills struck off." And the notice read as follows:

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES.

D. L. Moody, of Chicago, will preach, and Ira D. Sankey, of Chicago, will sing, at 7 o'clock p. m. to-morrow Thursday, and each succeeding evening for a week, in the Independent Chapel, All are welcome. No collection.

The first meeting was attended by less than fifty persons, who took seats as far away from the pulpit as possible. I sang several solos before Mr. Moody's address, and that was my first service of song in England. It was with some difficulty that I could get the people to sing, as they had not been accustomed to the kind of songs that I was using.

The next evening there was an attendance of about two hundred persons. It was while these services were held at York that the now eminent minister of London, Rev. F. B. Meyer, received a great spiritual quickening, according to his own testimony. From this small beginning the attendance of our meetings continued to increase, until not less than twenty thousand persons attended the meetings at the Agricultural Hall, London.

Scotch Questioning.

The third meeting was held in the same Church, and great interest was manifested by the citizens. The question of the solo singing, as to its propriety and usefulness, was not as yet fully understood or admitted; hence it was with much fear and trepidation that we thus really entered, this third night, upon our three months' campaign.

As I took my seat at the instrument on that, to me, most memorable evening, I discovered, to my great surprise, that Dr. Horatius Bonar was seated close by my organ, right in front of the pulpit. The first gospel-song I had ever composed, written since coming to Edinburgh, was set to words which he wrote—"Yet there is room."

Of all men in Scotland he was the one man concerning whose decision I was most solicitous. He was, indeed, my ideal hymn writer, the prince among hymnists of his day and generation. And yet he would not sing one of his own beautiful hymns in his own congregation, such as "I heard the voice of Jesus say," or "I was a wandering sheep," because he ministered to a Church that believed in the use of the psalms only.

With fear and trembling I announced as a solo the song, "Free from the law, O happy condition."

No prayer having been offered for this part of the service, and feeling that the singing might prove only an entertainment and not a spiritual blessing, I requested the whole congregation to join me in a word of prayer, asking God to bless the truth about to be sung.

In the prayer my anxiety was relieved. Believing and rejoicing in the glorious truth contained in the song, I sang it through to the end.

At the close of Mr. Moody's address, Dr. Bonar turned toward me with a smile on his venerable face, and reaching out his hand he said: "Well, Mr. Sankey, you sang the gospel to-night."

And thus the way was opened for my mission of sacred song in Scotland.

On another occasion, as we were holding meetings in the Free Assembly Hall, while I was singing a solo, a woman's shrill voice was heard in the gallery, as she made her way toward the door, crying: "Let me oot! Let me oot! What would John Knox think of the likes of you?" At the conclusion of the solo I went across the street to sing at an overflow meeting in the famous Tolbooth Church. I had just begun to sing when the same voice was again heard, "Let me oot! Let me oot! What would John Knox think of the likes of you?"

Sankey and Gipsy Smith.

While holding meetings at Burdett Road, London, in 1874, Mr. Moody and I one

Saturday took a drive out to Epping Forest. There we visited a gipsy camp. While stopping to speak to two brothers who had been converted and were doing good missionary work, a few young gypsy lads came up to our carriage. I put my hand on the head of one of them, and said: "May the Lord make a preacher of you, my boy!"

Fifteen years later, when Gipsy Smith made his first visit to America, I had the pleasure of taking him for a drive in Brooklyn. While passing through Prospect Park he asked me:

"Do you remember driving out from London one day to a gypsy camp at Epping Forest?" I replied that I did. "Do you remember a little gypsy boy standing by your carriage," he asked again, "and you put your hand on his head, saying that you hoped he would be a preacher?" "Yes, I remember it well." "I am that boy," said Gipsy Smith. My surprise can better be imagined than described. Little had I thought that the successful evangelist and fine gospel singer of whom I had heard so much, and whom I had so much admired, was the little boy I had met in the gypsy camp. Truly God has granted my wish of fifteen years before, and has made a mighty preacher of the gypsy boy.

Dark Is the Night.

"Dark is the night, and cold the wind is blowing,
Nearer and nearer comes the breakers' roar;"

When I was chorister in Mr. Moody's Sunday-school, on the north side of Chicago, we frequently used this hymn. On the memorable Sunday night when the city was destroyed by fire, and I had made my escape in a small boat out into Lake Michigan, this song came to my mind, and as I sat there, watching the city burn I sang:

"Dark is the night, and cold the wind is blowing,
Nearer and nearer comes the breakers' roar;
Where shall I go, or whither fly for refuge?
Hide me, my Father, till the storm is o'er."

The Ninety and Nine.

"There were ninety and nine that safely lay
In the shelter of the fold."

It was in the year 1874 that the poem, "The Ninety and Nine," was discovered, set to music, and sent out upon its world-wide mission. Its discovery seemed as if by chance, but I can not regard it otherwise than providential. Mr. Moody had just been conducting a series of meetings in Glasgow, and I had been assisting him in his work as director of the singing. We were at the railway station at Glasgow and about to take the train for Edinburgh, whither we were going upon an urgent invitation of ministers to hold three days of meetings there before going into the highlands. We had held a three months' series in Edinburgh just previous to our four months' campaign in Glasgow. As we were about to board the train, I bought a weekly newspaper for a penny. Being much fatigued by our incessant labors at Glasgow, and intending to begin work immediately upon our arrival at Edinburgh, we did not travel second or third class, as was our custom, but sought the seclusion and rest which a first-class railway carriage in Great Britain affords. In the hope of finding news from America I began perusing my lately purchased newspaper. This hope, however, was doomed to disappointment, as the only thing in its columns to remind an American of home and native land was a sermon by Henry Ward Beecher.

I threw the paper down, but shortly before arriving in Edinburgh I picked it up again with a view to reading the advertisements. While thus engaged, my eyes fell upon a little piece of poetry in a corner of the paper. I carefully read it over, and at once made up my mind that this would make a great hymn for evangelistic work—if it had a tune. So impressed was I that I called Mr. Moody's attention to it, and he asked me to read it to him. This I proceeded to do with all the vim and energy at my command. After I had finished I looked at my friend Moody to see what the effect had been, only to discover that he had not heard a word, so absorbed was he in a letter which he had received from Chicago. My chagrin can be better imagined than described. Notwithstanding this experience, I cut out the poem and placed it in my musical scrap-book—which, by the way, has been the seed-plot from which sprang many of the gospel songs that are now known throughout the world.

At the noon meeting on the second day, held at the Free Assembly Hall, the subject presented by Mr. Moody and other speakers was "The Good Shepherd." When Mr. Moody had finished speaking he called upon Dr. Bonar to say a few words. He spoke only a few minutes, but with great power, thrilling the immense audience by his fervid eloquence. At the conclusion of Dr. Bonar's words Mr. Moody turned to me with the question, "Have you a solo appropriate for this subject, with which to close the service?" I had nothing suitable in mind, and was greatly troubled to know what to do. The twenty-third psalm occurred to me, but this had been sung several times in the meeting. I knew that every Scotchman in the audience would join me if I sang that, so I could not possibly render this favorite psalm as a solo. At this moment I seemed to hear a voice saying, "Sing the hymn you found on the train!" But I thought this impossible, as no music had ever been written for that hymn. Again the impression came strongly upon me that I must sing the beautiful and appropriate words I had found the day before, and placing the little newspaper slip on the organ in front of me, I lifted my heart in prayer, asking God to help me so to sing that the people might hear and understand. Laying my hands upon the organ, I struck the key of A-flat, and began to sing.

Note by note the tune was given, which has not been changed from that day to this. As the singing ceased a great sigh seemed to go up from the meeting, and I knew that the song had reached the hearts of my Scotch audience. Mr. Moody was greatly moved. Leaving the pulpit, he came down to where I was seated. Leaning over the organ, he looked at the little newspaper slip from which the song had been sung, and with tears in his eyes said: "Sankey, where did you get that hymn? I never heard the like of it in my life." I was also moved to tears and arose and replied: "Mr. Moody, that's the hymn I read to you yesterday on the train, which you did not hear." Then Mr. Moody raised his hand and pronounced the benediction, and the meeting closed. Thus "The Ninety and Nine" was born.

There'll Be No Dark Valley.

"There'll be no dark valley when Jesus comes,
There'll be no dark valley when Jesus comes."

One night during the Boxer revolt, when the Chinese had set fire to many buildings and it seemed as though all the missionaries and native Christians in a besieged city would be destroyed, the children belonging to the Junior Christian Endeavor Society held a meeting in a chapel. While the cracklings of the flames, the sharp reports of the Chinese guns, and the cries of men and women running to and fro were rending the air, these little disciples of Jesus were singing: "There'll be no dark valley when Jesus comes."

A missionary, working in the slums of a city in Ireland, writes me as follows: "I feel constrained to thank you from the bottom of my soul for all the great blessings I have received from singing your songs. I am a worker in the slums of ——, and I find that your songs reach the hearts of fallen men and women before anything else. I have just returned home from our meeting, and the message I sang to-night was your sweet song: 'There'll be no dark valley when Jesus comes.' I want to thank you in particular for this song, because it presents death to us in such a glorious way. The old Welsh people used to speak and sing of death as something very fearful—a dark river, great waves, and so on—and I remember my dear mother singing all the Welsh hymns referring to death until I shuddered. But, praise the Lord, I know now that it is different. Your little song has confirmed this belief in me not only, but in many, many more souls."

I arranged this hymn from the words which Mr. W. O. Cushing wrote for me, of which, however, I used only the first line, "There'll be no dark valley when Jesus comes." Of late, it has become quite a favorite throughout the country.

When the Mists Have Rolled Away.

"When the mists have rolled in splendor
From the beauty of the hills."

I sang this hymn for the first time in the Free Trade Hall, in Manchester, in 1874, at one of Mr. Moody's meetings. The service was held at eight o'clock on a gloomy winter morning. The hall was densely crowded and filled with mist, so much so that the people could hardly be discerned at the farther end of the hall. I felt the need of something to brighten up the meeting, and then and there decided to launch this new song. It was received with enthusiasm, and at once became a favorite of Mr. Moody's and continued to be so until his death.

Where Is My Boy To-Night?

"Where is my wandering boy to-night—
The boy of my tenderest care?"

A mother came to me in Boston and asked me if I would try to find her wandering boy in California when I should go there with Mr. Moody to hold meetings. I promised to do what I could. For several weeks, as opportunity offered, I searched the cheap boarding houses for the young man. At last I found him in the slums of the city, and asked him to come to our meetings. He refused, saying that he was not fit to be seen there; but after much persuasion he came. One evening I sang: "Where is my wandering boy?" and prefaced it with a few remarks, saying that I knew of one dear mother in the east who was praying for her wandering boy to-night. This, together with the song, touched the young man's heart, and he found his way into the inquiry room, where, with my open Bible, I was enabled by God's grace to lead him into the light. I wrote to his mother and told her that her boy had been found, and that he was now a professed Christian. She sent me money to pay his railway fare back to Boston, and in a short time he had reached home and received a hearty welcome. He soon found employment, and became a useful citizen, and has since been a follower of Christ.

There has been published by P. W. Zeigler & Company, of Philadelphia, a volume by Mr. Sankey, entitled "My Life and the Story of the Gospel Hymns." Much of the information on these pages has been extracted from this book, which is a revised and very much enlarged edition of a small book published by the "Sunday-School Times" a couple of years ago. It can be ordered through The Christian Publishing Company, price $1.50, postpaid.

Our Budget

—Next Lord's day

—The offering for homeless churches.

—Church Extension day should be observed by all congregations.

—If not September 6, some day in the month.

—This fund has been handled with phenomenal success.

—The aim is to raise it to $1,000,000 by our Centennial.

—The possibilities of the work may be seen from the article by Peter Ainslie on "How a Work Grew."

—The vacation period draws to a close, and the time for serious work is upon us.

—"The Christian-Evangelist" is planning for the most useful year of its long history.

—It is not making big announcements, but will try to "make good."

—It can only do this, however, by the active co-operation and not merely a passing approbation of its friends.

—The convention at New Orleans is the next big event.

—The date of this is rapidly approaching.

—Are you making preparation to go?

—The little band of brothers there are working hard, and Brother Taylor reports a responsive enthusiasm all over the country.

—"The Christian-Evangelist" will publish a special number about Louisiana and the convention.

—We conclude in this issue the congress paper whose title was "The Church and Men." Mr. Holmes has made a most valuable contribution to this subject, and we feel that those who have read it in our columns will have received a stirring up that will be productive of much fruitfulness during the coming year.

—We have just passed a season of state conventions. Reports of these will appear in our columns, so that the workers everywhere will know what is being done by co-operative work in other parts of the field.

—W. H. Kern has been in a meeting near Paris, Mo., and is now at Hunnewell.

—There is to be a Louisiana rally at the New Orleans convention on the evening of October 8.

—D. Dunkleberger, of Pulaski, Iowa, goes to Canton, Mo., which will be his address for some time.

—F. M. Morgan has left Toluca, Ill., and takes charge of the work at Minonk, beginning next Lord's day.

—D. L. Dunkleberger has closed his work at Falls River, Neb., and taken the work at Harvard, in the same state.

—Evangelist David E. Olson is in a good meeting at Puyallup, Wash. The Sunday-school there has largely increased.

—The church at Columbia, Mo., is planning for a series of meetings, to begin early in October, under the leadership of H. O. Breeden.

—Thomas H. Popplewell, of Colfax, Iowa, has accepted a call to the church at Arkansas City, Kan., where he will begin his work next Lord's day.

—George W. Muckley thinks our country church issue very timely, and the articles much to the point. This is the testimony of many other brethren.

—A splendid county convention was closed at Chambersburg, Pike county, Ill. Plans were set on foot for aggressive work during the coming year.

—Our church at Milestone, Sask., Can., took an offering for the sufferers at Fernie, B. C., where a thousand families were left homeless by a disastrous fire.

—Dean W. J. Lhamon, of Columbia, Mo., having finished his Chautauqua engagements for the season, is conducting a meeting at Martinsburg, Mo.

THE EMPTY TREASURY.

The Annual Offering asked for in September is to fill an empty treasury. On August 31 there was not enough money in the hands of our treasurer to make an average sized loan. $76,000 was asked for at the August meeting by waiting mission churches. They did not ask for money they could raise on the ground. They had done what they could, and the wheels of their advancement were stopped. Who of our more than 7,000 congregations could refuse to help in this annual offering next Sunday—an offering so necessary to these waiting churches of faith in their brethren?

What appeals most to a parent is the faith of a little child, and a father or mother would work day and night to keep faith with that child. You would not give a child stone for bread. If you did, the look on the face of that child would lash your guilty conscience.

Let all the churches arouse themselves during all the month of September and show a new and adequate interest in Church Extension. Note how few churches contributed last year in the states where we are strongest: Illinois, 171; Indiana, 112; Iowa, 87; Kansas, 95; Kentucky, 54: Missouri, 139; Nebraska, 54; Ohio, 160, and Texas, 60. These states do not do as well as the mission states, and the shame of it is that the above states have borrowed from the fund nearly as much as they gave, and in some cases more than they gave.

Here is the record of the above states in giving and borrowing: Illinois has given to the Church Extension Fund, since its organization, $78,887, and 43 churches in the state borrowed $48,000. Indiana has given $41,986, and 45 churches have borrowed $66,350. Iowa has given $35,966, and 53 churches have borrowed $41,775. Kansas has given $17,304, and 100 churches have borrowed $74,210. Kentucky has given $60,838, and 24 congregations borrowed $15,665; Missouri has given $69,768, and 90 congregations have borrowed $71,233. Nebraska has given $16,265, and 52 churches borrowed $26 000. Ohio has given $90,000, and 44 churches borrowed $61,000. Texas has given $47,023, and 93 congregations have borrowed $89,325.

Before God, let us treat our Church Extension fund with the consideration it deserves. A great church should not fail to do a great service. Faithfully yours,

BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

—M. L. Blaney has closed his work at Providence, R. I., for the present, and goes for an extended lecture tour to Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, beginning at Summerside, P. E. I., next Lord's day.

—The old church at Cantrall, Ill., one of the oldest Christian churches in the country, is to have a revival meeting held by H. O. Breeden. The aim will be to double the power in efficiency of the church in every department. Lewis P. Fisher is the minister, and he is being assisted in the preparations by George R. Trainor.

—George L. Snively will dedicate on next Lord's day the beautiful new church in which L. E. Faulders will minister at Wellington, Kan. A cordial invitation is extended to all disciples in that region to attend.

—Allen T. Shaw, of Pontiac, Ill., has been out on a lecture tour, giving a return lecture before the Wayne County Teachers' Association and a third lecture in Fairfield, Ill., while other places visited were West Salem, Buckeye and West Village.

—L. L. Carpenter has engagements to dedicate new houses of worship at Blackwell, Okla., Dorchester, Neb., Delphi, Ind., Yeoman, Ind., and Swayzee, Ind. He also has engagements to dedicate in other places where the dates have not yet been fixed.

—The Christian Church at Salt Lake has, by a large congregational vote, called Dr. Albert Buxton to continue his pastorate another year. His baptisms last year included Mormon, Japanese and Methodist people, and his wife, daughter and sister.

—W. H. Kern has been in charge of the work at Barry, Ill., since May 1, and there has been progress in all departments. The spirit of the church is growing optimistic. There has been no decrease in the attendance during the hot season. There are nineteen churches in the county and a missionary meeting has just been held at Chambersburg.

—After a brief sojourn in New Mexico, E. C. Baird, late of St. Joe, Mich., has taken charge of the work at Utica and Ransom, in west central Kansas. Both of these congregations have good buildings—Ransom a white stone, Utica cement blocks—and both are supported by earnest, faithful workers. Brother Baird hopes that the churches will become the center of a strong missionary movement.

—C. F. McCall, who goes to Akita, Japan, as the living link missionary for our church at Bethany, Mo., recently paid a visit to his congregation, which was delighted with Brother McCall and his wife, who will go with him when he sails on September 15 for his field. The church believes that Brother McCall will make one of the strongest men on the foreign field. Andrew P. Johnson is the minister.

—W. P. Crouch, one of our strong men in Tennessee, leaves that state at once to take the work at Athens, Ala. He has been with the church at Bristol about five years—ever since its organization, we believe. Beginning with 40 members, who worshiped in the court house, this congregation now has a membership of 275 and a $15,000 property. During the five years there have been added at Bristol, and in Brother Crouch's meetings elsewhere, 525 people.

—A. Martin has returned from Western Canada and has been resting a few days at his home. He will hold a meeting at Pleasant Grove in September, and will assist L. A. Betcher at Alexandria, La., immediately following the New Orleans convention. After that meeting he will spend the rest of the year in Missouri. We believe Brother Martin might be secured for a meeting to begin at once. His address is 327 East Fifteenth street, Davenport, Iowa.

—W. P. Keeler, of Chicago, writes under date of August 24: "N. S. Haynes, of Decatur, Ill., yesterday preached (with unabated vigor) for the Englewood Christian Church two highly edifying sermons. This is the tenth consecutive summer he has visited over Sunday and preached for this church, having not once missed doing so since he resigned his ministry here in 1898. Can a record of this particular kind be matched, and if so, will some one report?"

—E. Everett Hollingworth, who recently resigned the work at Conyers, Ga., has accepted the pastorate of the United Church at Fitzgerald, Ga., where two formerly existing congregations (First and Central) have consolidated.

—Thomas J. Clark has just closed his work with the church at Bloomington, Ind., and enters next Lord's day upon the work with the congregation at Albion, Ill. The pressure on our columns prevents a more extended notice this week.

—Otis Hawkins writes that a large number from the church at Lake Charles, La., will go to the New Orleans convention. Hamlin and Daugherty follow this with an evangelistic campaign at Lake Charles, and plans are being made to insure a great success.

—We regret to learn, as we go to press, of the sudden death of Hugh Smith Darsie, the oldest brother of John L., Horace D. and Lloyd Darsie—all preachers—and father of George and Hugh Darsie, also preachers. It is a great heritage that he leaves behind him.

—The meeting of the churches in Ralls county, Mo., was very successful. Written reports from each congregation were presented, $170 for county work was raised and $341 for the Ralls county student aid fund. The next meeting, at Lick Creek, will be centennial in character. The board which has been re-elected for the fourth time is composed of Dr. W. T. Waters, F. S. Alexander and B. H. Cleaver.

—The International Congress for the History of Religions, which meets at Oxford, Eng., September 15, has invited Dr. J. W. Lowber, who has for many years been minister of the Christian church at Austin, Texas, to present a paper before that body. Brother Lowber has made for a number of years a special study of comparative religion, and has been honored with membership in the Royal Asiatic Society.

—The work at Garnett, Kan., moves on prosperously. On the Sunday evenings of July the pastor, F. W. Collins, delivered a series of sermons to men, speaking on the following themes: "Jesus as the Patriot," "Jesus as a Man Among Men," "The Manly Qualities of the Character of Jesus," "The Message of Jesus to Men To-day." These sermons were delivered under the auspices of the Christian Men's Association.

—Beginning September 13, the church at Plainville, Kan., will enter upon a meeting with Sister Clara Hazelrigg, of Topeka, as the evangelist. She was there several years ago in a successful meeting, and later served as pastor of the church for two years. Clifton E. Rash, the present minister, writes that most of the people know and love her for the work that she has already done, and they are enthusiastic over the prospects of a great meeting.

—We are glad to note that the officers of the church at Greenville, Texas, have supported their minister, W. T. Hilton, in the position he took with regard to mob law and offending negroes. No Christian church, North or South, can take any other position than a determined stand against the anarchy that is subversive of law and order, no matter what the particular offense of a culprit may be. What the American needs is the encouragement of the reform spirit which will see that all laws are impartially administered, and that nothing but good and wise laws are enacted.

—We regret an error in our last issue which made it appear that W. H. Sheffer is pastor of the church which is erecting a new building in Memphis, Tenn. Brother Sheffer is, of course, one of our most prominent ministers in that state, but it is the Mississippi Avenue Church which is putting up the new building, and Lewis D. Riddell is the pastor. Brother Sheffer, pastor of the Linden Street Church, delivered the address. We hope to give further particulars.

—J. A. Shoptaugh and his wife have just been welcomed with the congregation at Anthony, Kan. A church reception was given in the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Kennedy, and a large number of citizens and the ministers of other churches were present. In reply to the many kind things that were said, Brother Shoptaugh expressed his pleasure at the harmony that existed between the different churches, and spoke of the responsibility resting on a minister. His first sermon had for its subject "Primitive Christianity Restored."

—We are in receipt of an appeal to the brotherhood from the brethren in Montreal, Canada, for assistance in the effort to erect a suitable church building in that city. Our little congregation there has been obliged to meet in halls, and is greatly handicapped in its work for lack of a house of worship of its own. They have secured a lot, and have made a substantial payment on it, but appeal to the brotherhood for assistance. Those interested may address L. A. Miles, secretary, 50 McGill College avenue, Montreal.

—In a personal letter from W. E. Garrison, of Las Cruces, N. M., he writes concerning the new pastor at Las Vegas as follows: "Brother Dutt writes that the prospects of the church seem good. There have been eleven additions since July 1—several by baptism and others reclaimed. The latter count for as much as the former out here in the difficulty of getting them. These old saints that have been church members in Kentucky and elsewhere back East, and able-bodied sinners in New Mexico for twenty years, are hard to round up. Out in this country it is easier to catch a tame goat than a wild sheep."

—Our Centennial successes are to include the establishment and opening of the Wharton Memorial Home at Hiram, Ohio. It is expected to have this Home in readiness for the children of our foreign missionaries by September 1, 1909. The F. C. M. S. is following the course taken by the missionary societies of our religious neighbors in making this necessary provision for the children of our missionaries, who must be taken out of heathenism and sent back to America during the school age. We have already given this work our editorial endorsement. F. W. Norton is the representative of this work to our brotherhood.

—J. A. Holton gives up the work at Longview, Texas, with the beginning of September. The officers there take great pleasure in testifying to his efficient services, and commend him as a faithful and earnest preacher of the gospel, a wise and thoughtful pastor, and a man whose character is above reproach or criticism. During his ministration the Longview congregation has enjoyed the best year's growth in its long history. With a similar commendation of the minister's wife, it will surely not be long before Brother Holton has a field where he can continue to carry on successfully the Master's work.

—William Remfry Hunt and family sailed from London, England, on September 29, for Shanghai, China. Brother Hunt's stay in this country was very brief. We had expected him to come on West, and it seems a pity that he could not have been more utilized in this country after his long sojourn in China. He only got as far as Hiram, where he had expected to leave some of his children to be educated in the home for the children of missionaries, but this home is not yet completed. Brother Hunt is one of the best linguists in our missionary force and devoted to his work. We printed, a couple of weeks ago, some extracts from his new book, which is full of entertaining reading and useful information.

—The work in the church at Boulder, Colo., is making good progress. During the summer the Protestant churches of the city have been holding union services on Lord's day evenings. At the Christian church the morning audiences have been unusually large. It will be remembered that A. L. Ward, formerly of Boston, later of Wheeling, W. Va., took charge of the Boulder church some months ago. The Christian Endeavor Society is in a contest, the members being divided into two sections. The two points are: New members taking part in the meeting and attendance upon the mid-week prayer-meeting. The society has outgrown the lecture room of the church.

—James A. Challener has returned from his vacation to his work at Bryan, Texas. While away he held two short meetings, organized a Bible school, reorganized a church, located one pastor and made an effort to supply another. He reports 34 additions—17 by baptism, 10 uniting from the Baptists, the others by statement and restoration. He says there is a fine work for some man at Thorndale, San Gabriel and Davilla. Mrs. T. J. Barge at the former place and J. N. Robinson at San Gabriel have been appointed a committee to erect a large tabernacle and organize a Central Texas Camp Meeting Association. The brethren at Bryan have promptly met their first payment on the church extension debt.

New Orleans Convention.

Announcement day is Sunday, September 20, 1908. It is the desire of the New Orleans committee to make this the most representative convention ever held by our brotherhood. "A convention of the people, by the people and for the people" under Christ. Therefore we have adopted Sunday, September 20, as New Orleans Convention Announcement day. Every minister, Bible-school superintendent and Christian Endeavor president is requested to make the announcement in open session on that day, to emphasize the importance of the convention and to invite one and all to lend their assistance in building up the New Orleans convention. We are mailing out twenty-one thousand letters from this office, calling attention to the New Orleans convention.

Prospects are just as bright as noonday for a great and glorious convention. Everybody, it seems, wants to come.

Christian Endeavor in Missouri.

The State Superintendent, H. W. Hunter, is giving his time, just now, to booming Christian Endeavor at county meetings, and the State Committee is helping.

Mr. Withers attended the St. Clair county meeting at Roscoe. They did not have a society when he went, but now they have one of eleven members.

Independence Boulevard Society of Kansas City has won the Local Union banners for attendance—both of them—three times running. They are a live bunch, with a live leader in F. B. Finch, one of our State Committee.

The society at the First Church, St. Louis, knows how to do a thing or two. They have been holding the evening services of the church, because they have no pastor. Great interest was shown, and, better still, there were many additions to the church.

A mission study letter went from our office to all our Missouri preachers. It is vital to us that you act upon the suggestions, brethren.

Inland Empire day was well observed by our societies. Many raised the $10 in full, and feel happy about it.

Chester Snider, late president of the C. E. society at Forest Avenue, Kansas City, has entered upon the activities of the ministry. He is located at Lela, Kan.

The five societies of Monroe county, together with individual help, support a young girl in the Moorehead School in Kentucky. She will work among the mountain people when she is through school.

The prospects are good for a number of new C. E. societies and mission classes. At all county meetings where we have been we have been given a place on the program. We have had results from our efforts.

Miss Irene Houston, of Mexico, had charge of the C. E. period of the Adrian county meeting. It was held at Martinsburg, and we left behind a society of 32 members as a "thank you."

Don't forget our aims: "Three hundred Mission Study classes," and "All sleeping C. E. societies awakened, and many new ones." Henry W. Hunter.

Mt. Washington, Mo. State Sup't.

The Meeting at Biardstown, Texas.

One of the greatest meetings ever held in northeastern Texas closed here August 18. It lasted 19 days, and resulted in 111 additions. The preaching was done by R. R. Hamlin, of Ft. Worth, and the singing was conducted by Leonard Daugherty, of Louisville, Ky. They are a great power in the gospel. The church here has been greatly strengthened. Those coming into the church ranged from nine to eighty years of age. A large number are of wealth and worth. Every one seems to be perfectly consecrated to his work.

We went to the house of Brother and Sister Ervin, both of whom are invalids, and took their confessions. The brethren at once made preparations for the baptism of the two. A new wagon-bed was filled with water. Brother Ervin was brought out on the gallery, up to which the wagon had been backed, walked into the water, sat down, and was baptized by the writer. Next Sister Ervin was placed on a cot, carried into the wagon-bed, and by four strong men was buried in the liquid grave.

It was a glorious time. Many of our converts came from other organizations. Brother Hamlin put the truth with so much love and strength that it could not be resisted. H. H. Neeley, Minister.

A Strenuous Trip.

Dr. Royal J. Dye and his wife have just completed their trip to the Pacific Coast. It was, indeed, a strenuous one, but great things are the results. Writing under date of August 17, he says:

"Some things have greatly encouraged us, others have disappointed us, and we are sorry that we have not been able to produce more immediate results. We sympathize with you all in the office as we have never done before. We thought we knew, but we only guessed at it.

"The good fellowship all along the line has heartened us much and we shall go back to our beloved Bolenge with a new courage, feeling that the great brotherhood understands and feels and is backing the work. It will be an encouraging message to send to the Congo and a stimulating report to take back to the Bolenge church.

"It has been hard work, but it has been worth while. We enjoy talking to interested people. We did not get much time to visit or to see the sights. The business of our King was too pressing. We trust it will count for larger things in the years to come. God grant that they do not forget it. Yours in his glad service, Royal J. Dye."

The Next Thing.

The days are shorter, the nights are cooler, vacations are ending, schools are opening. Church Extension is the next thing in the church calendar. It is gratifying to report that there is a rapidly growing disposition on the part of our churches to do all things decently and in order. The churches that have been accustomed to follow this plan will not think of breaking ranks on the eve of the Centennial. Every church that ever made a Church Extension offering should line up this year without fail.

It is high time that all other missionary churches should join the ranks of complete co-operation. In vain will we plead for Christian union as long as we are unable to unite among ourselves on such a simple, practical and fundamental ministry as the helping of homeless churches to build. Let us celebrate our Centennial by deeds as well as words. By whole-hearted and unanimous co-operation in bringing the Church Extension fund up to a million dollars, we can build a platform from which our Centennial orators shall be heard by the whole world.

The Church Extension offering is not only the next thing in the calendar, but it is the last offering of the missionary year. Immediately after it is taken we go down to New Orleans to our annual convention. Let us crown the year with such universal and generous co-operation that the whole brotherhood shall enter the Centennial year confident of victory in every department of Christian service.

"Camp Clark."
Near Galena, Mo.,
August 18, 1908.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Two families of us are spending a vacation here on the bank of the James River. Bro. A. H. McQuary owns "Camp Clark," and certainly has a fine place on the top of a mountain overlooking Galena and the James River valley for several miles. Last Sunday we had a "basket meeting," and invited the people round about to spend the day with us. A splendid company of people came and we had services at 11 o'clock and again at 3 o'clock. Brother McQuary has erected a large tent for such meetings and as a resting place for visitors. We understand "Camp Clark" is near the birthplace of the Editor of "The Christian-Evangelist." Undoubtedly the inspiration of these hills and the clear, singing streams account somewhat for his poetic nature. I don't believe he ever "went barefooted" much, however, over these flint rocks.

We return to our home at Nevada the last of the week and August 23 begin a meeting for the church at Sheldon, Mo. W. H. Funderburk will supply at Nevada while we are in the Sheldon meeting. W. W. Burks.

Missionary Work on the Plains.

My two and one-half years' work as pastor of the church at La Junta, Colo., closed April 1, 1908, and then I was appointed on the missionary force of Colorado. My work is with weak and needy fields, and in opening up new fields. I write this letter in a sod-house 24 miles from the railroad, with vast oceans of prairie stretching out to the horizon in every direction.

The native denizens—coyotes, prairie-dogs, rattle-snakes, antelope, and here and there a mountain lion, are slowly retiring before the advance of the "pale-face." The soil is fine, and very productive, when the rain-fall is sufficient. For two years the homesteaders have been living on claims, and now primitive houses dot the land. The water is pure and soft, free from alkali, and easily found. The farmers here do not irrigate, but depend on the mountain showers. This locality is about 60 miles east of Colorado Springs, and Pike's Peak is in plain sight. The people are largely from Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Illinois and Indiana, and are industrious and intelligent, but without church privileges.

To-day I drove six miles to visit a Bible school in a new school house and gave a brief talk, consenting to preach to them on next Lord's day. I traveled 16 miles with a young man to get fuel at a sheep ranch, there being no timber here, and the lignite coal mine 35 miles distant. These people are poor, and as pioneers are struggling to carve out homes in this new country for their families. Their greatest need is religious training, and the missionary with Bible in hand is on the ground, anxious to preach to them the true Bible plea, if a generous brotherhood will extend a helping hand. There is no other religious body entering this needy field, as yet, while we have a band of 12 or 14 members on these claims, another band near Mathison, and a third band at Limon, on the Rock Island R. R., some 30 miles from here. These points are calling for help, and we are anxious to be the first to enter and help to take this land for Christ. We are sadly handicapped in having no place to hold a meeting, as the school houses are too small to hold the people. I greatly desire to rally the brethren, and build one, two or three churches, so we shall have ample room, and be independent at the above-named points. Friends will gladly donate the ground, and will also do the work of building; but they have not a dollar to spare to buy the material we must have. Each church building will need from $50 to $75 for the sheeting and tar-paper for the car-roof (then cover with soil), four windows, one door, floor, plain pine seats, brick for flue, a cheap stove and two lamps.

Such are the facts. "Come over and help us," and please remember that "the King's business requires haste." As I have the oversight of the work in eastern Colorado, and expect to lend a hand in church plans and building, please send offerings by registered mail or P. O. money order to Kutch, Elbert co., Colo.

FOREIGN MISSIONARY NOTES.

The officers of the Foreign Society will hold a conference with some twenty-five of its missionaries in Cincinnati, September 1-3.

The Foreign Society has just received $800 from a sister in the state of Washington. She is three score and ten. Her chief desire is that her money may be used for the spread of the gospel.

The receipts of the Foreign Society for the first twenty-four days of August amounted to $16,594. This amount was received from 543 sources, or in this number of gifts. This is a gain of 144 gifts for the corresponding time one year ago.

M. D. Clubb, of Pomona, Calif., writes that the day spent with them by Dr. Dye of Africa was one of the greatest in their experience. They gave a thank offering of $230, to be used in sending Mr. and Mrs. Moon, of Oregon, out to the Congo as missionaries. Then G. H. Waters and wife, of the congregation, decided to take Mrs. Moon as their personal "living-link." These good people also support a missionary under the C. W. B. M. The people of the Middle States will have to step lively to keep up with the missionary pace being set by our California brethren.

The Virginia Convention

The Virginia state convention, which was held at the Piedmont assembly grounds, near Gordonsville, was well attended and a very profitable gathering in every way.

Thirty-five preachers were present. The speakers from a distance were G. B. Ranshaw, of Cincinnati, O.; W. R. Warren, of Pittsburg, Pa., and J. E. Stuart, of Washington, D. C.

The secretary's report showed 501 persons added to the church, 67 places assisted in some way, four new churches and four Sunday-schools organized and $7,000 raised for the work of state missions. This was the work of the Virginia Christian Missionary Society.

The trust fund has now raised $9,504. This fund has received several gifts recently. It is hoped that the fund will reach $20,000 by October, 1909.

At the time of the convention there were 30 churches in the state without ministers; 15 ministers were located in the state during the year by the agents of the V. C. M. S.; 22 churches out of the 285 in the state have preaching every Sunday. The churches of Virginia are nearly all country churches, and generally have preaching only once in each month. An effort is now being made to have all the churches grouped for the support of ministers. Each group is then urged to erect a parsonage. The Virginians believe that the erection of these parsonages will help greatly in the solution of the country church problem.

In the last seven years the number of Disciples in Virginia has grown from 18,000 to nearly 26,000. The motto is, 30,000 by 1909. There are more preachers working in the state now than at any previous time in recent years, and greater results are expected.

The report of H. D. Coffey, an evangelist employed by the V. C. M. S., was so thrilling that the convention gave him a vote of thanks in appreciation of his splendid work.

The state convention will be held in the Seventh Street Church, Richmond, late in September, or early in October, 1909. The program will be in keeping with the Centennial idea.

The officers are: W. F. Fox, Richmond, president; H. P. Atkins, Richmond, first vice-president; O. A. Hawkins, Richmond, second vice-president; E. N. Newman, Richmond, secretary and treasurer; F. T. Sutton, Richmond, auditor.

The new year begins hopefully.

The Schools Getting Ready.

The Sunday-schools appear to be lining up for a great campaign for home missions this year. Secretary Ranshaw informs us that already the schools ordering supplies for the November offering day have surpassed the record. The home missionary offering from the Sunday-schools is devoted to both state and national missions, and the secretaries of the various states are seeking to enlist every school in the campaign. The home board hopes to receive not less than $25,000 from the schools this year. Certainly every live superintendent will see that his school is not out of line for home missions. The offering next November makes up the record for 1909, and ought to be an exceptionally good one.

A Bolenge Boy's Letter.

Dr. and Mrs. Dye received a letter while they were in the West. It is a direct testimony of Christian character that puts to shame many American Christians. Mark Njoji is the inheriting son of the greatest witch-doctor of Bolenge section. He received the charms, fetiches and secrets of witchcrafts as well as the polygamous wives and slaves from his father and older brother. But he became a Christian and turned his back on it all. He is now an evangelist of the Bolenge church and is here in America with Dr. and Mrs. Dye helping in further translations and is now in Battle Creek, Mich., studying English and learning printing. The letter is as follows:

Battle Creek, Mich.

To the Mother and Father of Okuki (Dr. and Mrs. Dye):

I enquire of you both, are you still there, are you being strengthened in telling the story of the Lord? Listen to another story from me which is on this wise: A certain white man who has been at Stanley Falls (a traveler and lecturer) called me, saying, "I am describing to the people the manner of the witch-doctor, and I would like for you to dance and I will talk." He measured the costume of the witch-doctor to me, saying, "You will take off your clothes as a witch-doctor does not dance in clothes." He besought me, beseeching and beseeching. I said, "No, that can never again be fitting for me." He besought me for two or three days, but I did not consent. Some other people came, saying, "Why do you refuse?" I answered them saying, "What was the day on which John the Baptist was killed? Was it not that on which Herod gathered a company together and a girl danced for them? Was not John killed on that wise?" Dancing is not fitting for a Christian at all. Some agreed, while others said, "This can not be compared to that; you only show people who do not know the manner of the witch doctor." I said, "I did not come here as a witch doctor. I came by the word of the Father who liveth in heaven—if as a witch doctor I would never have reached this country." Some said, "He will pay you." I said, "No man is saved by money." They tried me and tried me, but I did not consent. There is nothing else which has surprised me as this, even this, "Come and dance for us."

Your people seek to tear me to pieces (his faith) but I can not be torn to pieces; my house is not built on the sand, but on the rock. Even though all things befall me, I shall not be anxiously troubled; the Master is with me; I shall do nothing unfitting. I only pray, Father, that my faith be sufficient for all things.

For a week and a half I have rejoiced, for I have companionship with some white and black brethren (from Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.). May God watch between me and you until we see each other face to face again. Your child who loves you, Malaka Njoji.

The Disciple Brotherhood and the Panama Canal Diggers.

Are we as a Brotherhood under any obligation to see that the religious needs of the employes of the Canal Commission are met? The number of people employed by the Commission at the end of June was 25,881, and of this number 3,686 were Americans. There can be added to this number 7 052 on the payroll of the Panama Railroad Company, of whom about 1,000 are American. Thus it will be seen that we have on the Isthmus of Panama close on 5,000 American men at work. Many of these men have their families with them, and there are not many under ten thousand Americans directly or indirectly connected with the canal work or the Panama Railroad. There are also a number of Americans in the cities of Colon and Panama. These people have gone to the Canal Zone for the purpose of taking part in one of the greatest pieces of work undertaken by our government, and they ought not to be allowed to grow indifferent to religious matters, because of the fact that serives and that which pertains to church life is not maintained in the districts in which they reside. These people are not all in one community. If they were, the difficulty in meeting their spiritual needs would be considerably lessened. But they are scattered over the line from Atlantic to Pacific in at least eighteen towns. In some of the towns there are Sunday-schools and Endeavor societies, and in six there are union organizations for the purpose of providing, as far as possible, for preaching services; but the supply of preachers is so small that the demand is not being met. What does the preaching staff of the Isthmus amount to? There are four Episcopal clergymen, two Baptists, two Methodists, and of these eight men six are Englishmen, and five of the eight are giving their time exclusively to the natives, and colored West Indians who are resident of the Isthmus. Thus it will be seen that to preach to the Americans in the Zone there are at present only three preachers, and it requires no statement from me to convince readers that these men can not begin to supply the need of the ten thousand American men, women and children who are away from their homes serving their country, and who certainly deserve from their countrymen remaining at home some consideration in reference to their religious needs. All denominations are represented, and we have a considerable number from our own churches in various parts of the country. Shall we allow our own people to grow religiously indifferent, because of the fact that they are away from all religious influences? or shall we send men who will go in and out of the various towns preaching the word and encouraging the people to be true to their Master? The temptations to religious indifference and sin of the grossest kinds are without number, and one's heart aches to think of the small amount of work done in behalf of these tempted ones by our home churches and mission boards. Shall we as a Brotherhood take a part in this great work, and have a part in saving from the "sins that so easily beset" some of our finest American sons? There need be no anxiety in regard to buildings in which to preach, as in each community church buildings have or are being erected, but thought must be given to the financial support of the men, and homes provided in which the workers can live. The National Convention will meet in New Orleans in October, and as this is the nearest southern port to the Canal Zone, it would be a fitting thing to have it go on record that the Brotherhood decided to take a part in the canal digging, by helping to meet the religious needs of the people in the Zone. I left the Zone on the 17th of June and shall be staying in the states until after the Convention, and shall be glad to give any information in reference to the Canal Zone and its people that may be desired. I have also a fine set of lantern slides which illustrates a lecture on the Canal, and I feel sure that this will prove interesting and instructive to our churches and lead to practical interest on the part of our people. We are at present in New Orleans, but mail addressed to Hammond, La., will find us, and it will be a pleasure to give all needed information regarding the Canal Zone. Wm. Pearn.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Eugene Bible University.

The Eugene Bible University (formerly the Divinity School) is planning large things, both in equipment and work. We are fully justified in this by the success of the school and the great need of the work we are doing. Our new three-story stone building is progressing nicely. President E. C. Sanderson deserves much credit for his faithful care and business-like attention to every detail. The entire cost of present improvements will be a little more than $40,000. It is a heroic work of faith. We have a noble brotherhood in the Pacific Northwest. Many expect to help, and many more ought and must do so, if we are to avoid the burden of a debt.

I am glad to state that John B. Coleman of Eugene, Ore., a few days ago deeded to the school a brick block located in the center of the business district of Eugene, worth about $20,000. Mr. Coleman retains a life interest. One of the local daily papers spoke of the gift in these words:

"Mr. Coleman's wife, who died a number of years ago, was a devoted member of the Christian Church, which denomination controls the Bible University. It was his tender memory for her, and his high regard for the church of her choice that led Mr. Coleman to make this magnificent gift. He is truly a benefactor to the institution to which the gift is made. His name will always be a household word in the homes of the thousands of members of the Christian Church of the Pacific Northwest, who are supporting the Bible University."

Mr. Coleman is not a member of the church, yet he sees and realizes a great opportunity to uplift humanity through this institution. We have at least a half dozen brethren in the northwest who ought to give to this work from $10,000 to $25,000 each.

Then it was the liquor forces against the temperance forces to elect a Republican "wet" governor. This time it is reversed. The liquor forces are solidly for Judge Harmon, the Democratic candidate, and the new whiskey organization, the Personal Liberty League, is making a thorough and completely organized fight for him and against our present governor. But the Christian forces are not asleep, and, led by the Anti-Saloon League, we expect to see Governor Harris re-elected by a big majority. But it means work and united force. Let every Christan do as the saloon interest does—discard politics and vote and work for the man who has stood faithfully by the temperance cause in Ohio.———"The Universal Elements of the Christian Religion" is a book every preacher should read. Having been in a class under the author, Charles Cuthbert Hall, at Harvard University, some years ago, this book has had a special interest to me. It is an antidote for your sectarianism, a tonic for your missionary spirit, a telescope for your vision and stimulating to your faith. The Christian Publishing Company will supply it. C. A. Freer.

West Virginia Letter.

The cause in West Virginia is making progress. At this season the Bethany boys go out and do work during vacation. As a result, a number of additions will come to the churches where they hold meetings. August is always our quiet month, as so many go away, to return September 1.

Harry L. Ice and his singer had a very successful meeting at Logan, 48 being brought into the church. He has remained there to take care of the young converts, and train them for Christian work. We commend our young brother for his good judgment in the matter. The character of a young convert is determined by the life he manifests at the start out of his career as a Christian. That point was called to my attention some years ago by a pastor who went from our state to the University of Michigan, and graduated there. He is pastor at Traverse City, and is preaching for one of the strong churches in that state. He was succeeded at Cameron, W. Va., by W. E. Pierce, who ranks as one of the best pastors in our state. He has the faculty of putting young converts to work for Christ; and as a result the Cameron church is among the best in our state as a live, working church.

The development, morally and spiritually, of the material that is continually coming to our congregations, is fundamental to our work. What made some of our work in this state a reproach, was the fact that persons rendered a passive obedience to certain commands, and accepted that for conversion. There was no consecration, enthusiasm, nor active service, and no real inspiration to be an earnest Christian. Wherever churches were filled with that kind of members, they soon went into indifference, and in a number of places the doors closed, because there were not enough religious assets to meet the demand. In order to work, a church must have spiritual assets. I can illustrate this matter better by stating a fact. Some time ago, I was holding a meeting, and called on a business man who had obeyed the gospel years before. I at once discovered that he was one of the number that had been baptized, and stopped right there. In fact, we have a number of the same kind of converts, here and elsewhere. He was proud of the fact that years before he had gone into the G—— River, where the ice was running. God only knows whether or not he ever did anything more, for I could learn of nothing else. His whole Christian experience was wrapped up in the past. Spritually, he was as cold as the water in which he had been immersed. The pastoral system is greatly relieving our churches of such dead weight, and we hail with pleasure the time when consecration, enthusiasm, and work for Christ will be looked upon as the best evidence of a right start for Christ. It is a great thing to get the best start we can in the Christian life, so we will not get away from the fellowship of the church, and spend our time in fighting things that are really fundamental in our work. One of our preachers and S. S. workers, visiting the county-seat of Wirt, thus describes the church:

"We have been attending a Sunday-school convention at a place where our people have no school, and where they oppose Sunday-schools as part of 'Babylon.' We do not doubt their honesty for a moment, and we admire their rugged 'contending for the faith.' At the same time, we pity their misconception of the truth.

"I mention the matter now in passing, that we might obey the scripture and judge them by their fruits. They are in disfavor with the religious forces of the place, therefore they are unable to deliver their divinely given message to Christ's wrongly divided church.

"They are in disfavor with sinners, as they are only supposed to stand for a fighting idea scripture for which they are willing to debate at any moment, and do not stand for a loving Savior, who is knocking at every heart.

"They are in a large degree misrepresentative of Christ, in being unloving and unkind. In other words, they are unlike the finished product of Christianity. They are not saving salt, nor lights set upon a hill, but irritants in whom is darkness."

I am glad that those congregations are growing beautifully less in our state. A newspaper correspondent, going to a county seat, found the deed of a church to have restrictive clauses, and two of them read as follows: "No organ shall ever be placed in this church, or Sunday-school services held." This was such a surprise to your correspondent that I clipped it, and with the experience of the editor of the West Virginia Christian, will give your readers an idea of some of the "breakers" we run up against in West Virginia.

Scoville Dedicates at His Home Town.

On Lord's day, August 23, Charles Reign Scoville returned to his old home and the home of his parents, at Butler, Ind., and dedicated our enlarged and remodeled place of worship, free from debt.

Jesus himself testified that a prophet is without honor in his own country; yet Brother Scoville, as a man and a preacher, hath great honor among his townspeople, and those of the surrounding community. Three services were held during the day, two in the grove and one at the church. At the grove meetings fully 2,000 people were present. The morning text was "Go." The sermon was an emphatic appeal for individual effort in the Lord's work. At the morning service $2,261 was pledged in a very short time, leaving $239, which was raised in the afternoon, in about ten minutes.

Although the church building is capable of accommodating nearly 500 people, the place was filled a half hour before the service began. Everything had been cleared away, to let the evangelistic message have the right of way. When the invitation was extended, 11 responded and made the good confession, among the number being a niece and nephew of Brother Scoville, and an entire family, the father and mother of which were old friends and schoolmates of Brother Scoville.

As a church we are extremely grateful to Brother Scoville, who, by his sympathies, services and liberality, has helped us to make possible an undertaking which means for us a modern house of worship, adequate for all departments of our work. Our prayers go with him, and we look forward to his return in December.

Our singing evangelists, J. E. Sturgis and Arthur Haley, both members of the Butler Church, did efficient work for us during the day, at the grove meetings. Great credit is due our minister, S. B. Braden, who, by his wise foresight and good judgment, has kept everything in perfect harmony, everybody interested and trying to do their part during the building campaign. Not one word of dissension has come to the knowledge of the building committee. There is a great future for the Butler Church, and while in the hands of our Brother Braden, whose life is thoroughly consecrated to his work, and whose ability will fully measure up to the task at hand, we are assured of great things for Christ.

F. L. Farnsworth;
Chairman Building Committee.

A Good Meeting at Brownsville, Ore.

We have just closed a good summer meeting at Brownsville, Oregon, in which there were 26 members added to the church. Though this is not a great number, it is far beyond what was expected. Never have I seen so many forces against a meeting as were encountered and, to a very great extent overcome, in this meeting by D. E. Olson. One less hopeful would have given up many times in despair, and declared that no meeting could be held under such conditions.

The full gospel was presented without compromise, during this meeting, and not the least antagonism aroused. Truth was presented with skill and in charity, so that much prejudice was removed. Some of the members have been heard to say that if nothing had been accomplished more than removing this prejudice, this meeting would have been a success.

The number of additions in this meeting will equal at least one-third of the average attendance at the meeting, which was certainly a large per cent. of those whose ears were reached with the truth.

Mrs. Nellie Callison, who is doing the solo work for Brother Olson has proved of value in personal work, and work among the ladies. She addressed the ladies of the church twice on subjects of interest along the line of C. W. B. M. work, and succeeded in effecting an organization of twelve enthusiastic members. Others will follow. The Bible school showed an encouraging increase, and the Christian Endeavor Society was considerably strengthened. In the small band of workers in Brownsville we found great consecration and remarkable talent.

J. M. Orrick was with us during the latter part of the meeting, and has been employed for the coming year for full time. He will be in the Bible University this autumn. His work in the ministry is well known, and the Brownsville church is fortunate in securing the services of such an earnest and able worker and leader.

Charles C. Curtis.

Herbert Yeuell in West End, Atlanta, Ga.

The West End Church has always been small, and many had despaired of its ever being any larger. The West End is about two miles from the center of the city. It is a quiet, conservative community of about 5,000 people, who nearly all either belong to, or are closely affiliated with some other church. Most of them knew nothing definite about the Christian Church, except that it had a building that looked very well from the outside. They never saw the inside. They were content to go to their own churches or stay at home.

Our beloved and able brother, R. Linn Cave, when pastor here, could draw no larger audiences than we younger men. The little band who composed the church were faithful, but it seemed that we were surrounded by a wall that we could not break through. As pastor, I have tried to preach and work faithfully, but there was rarely ever an addition to the membership. We were very unfortunate in losing members by removal. Some of our very best went away. Both attendance and income decreased, and it seemed almost impossible to carry on the work. Most of the members were discouraged, and nearly ready to quit. The First Church, with a membership of one thousand, had no hope for the West End, and their members living out here would not unite with us, for fear the work would be a failure. But there were some brave hearts in this West End Church who have never been daunted by anything, and with these as a nucleus, we prayed and planned for a great evangelistic campaign. Of course some doubted and hesitated. It took sublime faith, courage and sacrifice for about fifty active members, with but little means, to undertake a great meeting costing $2,000. It seemed foolish to build a great tabernacle, when we had never been able to fill our little church building. Our friends and neighbors thought we were foolish, too, and sometimes we almost feared they were right. But the building was put up, the meeting was thoroughly advertised, and Brother Yeuell came. He came with full knowledge of the situation, and should be highly commended for coming to this needy little church, when so many large churches were eager for him.

All our fears as to success were soon dissipated. The first night the tabernacle would not hold the crowd. From that on the building was full, and on Sunday nights packed and surrounded by multitudes. They came from all parts of the city, and the street car company had to put on extra cars. Only a very small part of the audiences were members of the Christian Church. Most of them were members of other churches. There was but little material to draw from.

The first two weeks of the meeting, the audience scarcely realized that Brother Yeuell was preaching either Bible or special doctrine, but before they were aware of it, they were quite leavened. The last two weeks he was very strong on doctrine, yet no one got angry. About 125 stepped out for Christ in some way, and nearly 100 of these are bona fide confessions or additions. Though, of necessity, the invitation had to be wide open here, yet the greater number have joined, or will join the Christian Church.

Every dollar of expense is met, and the church is in better financial condition than before the meeting began. The best possible feeling exists in the community. People of all churches rejoice with us, and seem to love Brother Yeuell just as much as we do. The Christian Church is known as never before, and has an opportunity for work that could not have been possible without this meeting.

Notes from the Arkansas Traveler.

The work in Arkansas is moving grandly on despite the warm weather. Our ministers seem to have gotten a new grip on the work in this state, and things are beginning to move. The writer has spent four weeks in the northwest part of the state recently, and he is much encouraged and delighted to note the advance all along the line. This is the land of the famous Alberta peach and of the "big red apple."

Dr. J. W. Ellis has worked wonders in the splendid new church at Bentonville. The entire debt has been about wiped out and the membership nearly doubled in the three years he has had the work in charge He is having additions at nearly every service. Brother Ellis is a power for good, not only in his own town, but in the regions round about.———The church at Gravette is at present without a preacher. This is a delightful place in which to live, and an earnest young preacher could take this work and live in Gravette, and give part time to the home church and part time to other churches near by, and have a pleasant work. Young man, here's your chance.———C. D. Purlee, Siloam Springs, has been in the Chautauqua work all summer, but is back at home, now, preparing for the great meeting which he expects E. E. Violett and helpers to hold for him in September. Brother Purlee is a splendid preacher, and has built a great church at Siloam Springs. ———The work at Rogers is in the hands of that whole-souled, good-natured J. P. Dillon. He has a hard field, but is master of the situation. He is packing the house at each service, and is having frequent additions. He wears "the smile that won't come off," and the people love him for his work's sake.———Francis E. Patton, Princeton, Kan., is a recent acquisition to our preaching force in this state. He will probably take the work at Winslow and Prairie Grove. Here's my hand, my brother, and may God bless you.———R. M. Thompson, who lives on his farm near Rogers, is preaching part time at Garfield, and would give another Lord's day to the work. Any church needing his services write him. Rogers, is his address. Fine preacher.

Little Rock, Ark. J. J. Taylor Cor. Sec.

South Kentucky.

It is not too late for me to say that we had, under very discouraging circumstances, one of the most enthusiastic conventions at Princeton we ever have had. There was a decided gain in the financial receipts over any previous year since the present evangelist has been in the work. More evangelistic meetings were held the past missionary year than ever before.

One of the special features of the meeting that added great interest was the inspiring presence and talks of such men as J. B. Briney, W. T. Moore and Carey E. Morgan. We shall ever remember with pleasure and profit their coming. But from present indications our South Kentucky Christian Missionary and Sunday-school Association is no more. For about thirty-four years this association has been doing work in the extreme part of Western Kentucky. For some years past many who have taken the most vital interest in the work have thought that a union of the entire missionary forces of the state would better the condition and further the interests of the cause of Kentucky missions. At Princeton the South Kentucky convention voted unanimously with the exception of one man to unite our missionary forces. So we expect to have the first united convention at Hopkinsville September 21-24, and any person who fails to attend will miss, I predict, one of the most enthusiastic conventions ever held in Kentucky. Get ready to attend. A one fare plus 25 cents rate for the round trip has been secured over all the railroads. Lodging and breakfast will be provided for all who will send their names to Harry D. Smith, Hopkinsville, Ky.

Be sure to attend to this at once, that homes may be provided for all.

The next thing that I want to say is that the evangelist has been constantly in the field since the South Kentucky convention was held. Three meetings have been held, one at Energesia, a country church in Christian county. Beginning July 1, at Lynnville, Graves county, and continuing 19 days, 48 souls were baptized and five others united with the church, making 53 in all. Some touching scenes of this meeting I would like to relate, but space forbids. The next meeting was held at Cuba, just four miles away, taking up exactly the remainder of the month, resulting in 16 additions. I am now in the extreme southwestern corner of the state holding a meeting at Mt. Hermon church. R. P. Meeks preaches for this little band. I could not gain the consent of my mind to disclose to the reading public the sad condition of this church, caused by some extreme views adopted and executed by some of the old church, resulting in the withdrawing of the best people I ever knew. Let us draw a veil over the scene.

The time draws nigh when all of the Churches of Christ are called on to take the offering for Church Extension. Will any one—can any church afford to refuse this call? September 6, the first Sunday in the month, is the time. Any Sunday in the month will do.

Now I want to say one more thing, viz: October 9, 1908, is the date when another great event is to take place. Our international conventions are to be held at New Orleans, La. There are so many good reasons why we should make every effort to attend that I can not undertake to mention them. Will we refuse to go and give every encouragement to the little band of Disciples in New Orleans trying to establish the cause of primitive Christianity in that great city? Let's all go up and possess the land. W. J. Hudspeth.

Hopkinsville, Ky.

News from Washington.

We just closed a good meeting with Bro. A. L. Crim, preacher, and Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Kendall as leaders in song and Junior work.——There were 65 received into the church—35 by baptism. ——While the panic was on we built an addition to our church costing $3,700, and held a successful meeting during the summer months, when others said it was impossible.——Crim and the Kendalls are at Ballard having splendid success.——The congregation at Hillman City have dedicated a new temporary building.——The work of the First Church, under J. L. Garvin, is succeeding.——At Georgetown Frank H. Herthum has broken ground for a new church building to cost several thousand dollars.——We now have eight organized church in Seattle and vicinity.——My wife and I leave to-night for a three-weeks' outing in the Olympic Mountains. Trout fishing is to our taste.

CHURCH DEDICATIONS.

Colville, Washington.

Colville is the county seat, and the largest town in Stevens county, Washington. This county in area and square miles is larger than the states of Delaware and Rhode Island.

Five years ago there was not a Christian church in the county. In the spring of 1904 R. H. Parker, who was conducting a mercantile business in Colorado, as customers came to him as well to do their trading, would drop a few words about the church. In this way he became acquainted with several who were "members of the Christian Church back East." Brother Parker was helped by Sister Joseph Liddell until they secured numbers sufficient to organize a Bible school in the I. O. O. F. hall of the village. Steps were taken towards a church organization. State Evangelist Griffiths, of Pullman, was called to assist this faithful band of workers, and a company of thirteen members banded themselves together as charter members, with several others who came in during the meeting conducted by Brother Griffiths later.

In the spring of 1905 a lot was purchased at a cost of $400. Brother Griffiths was called to other fields of labor and was succeeded by Elder Thompson, and he in turn by Elder Dodson, then the little flock was without a shepherd.

Brother Parker, Bible school superintendent and an active worker all the way along, was pressed into service and did his work well. He did not even let his matrimonial aspirations retard the work. When the day arrived for the ceremony C. F. Stevens, pastor of Central Christian Church, Spokane, was secured to be present to perform this solemn right. He preached to this congregation before leaving for home. So impressed was he that he immediately wrote J. A. Pine, secretary of East Washington Missionary Society, and urged him to give the Colville field attention as soon as possible. Brother Pine went, gave several weeks of his time planning for a church building and soliciting money, until he was obliged to leave. The members took courage from this faithful teacher of God and carried the building to completion.

S. J. Vance, of Carthage, Mo., was called to conduct an evangelistic meeting and as soon as the building was ready N. M. Field and wife, song leaders, were loaned, free of charge, by the Dean Avenue Christian Church of Spokane (where they have been laboring for the past two years as assistant pastor and musical director of this church), to conduct the music during this evangelistic meeting. At the close of the meeting the church membership reached the one hundred mark. Owing to other engagements, Brother Vance was obliged to leave for other fields of labor.

The date of dedication was announced. The meeting had closed. No preacher to lead this flock, and only one week until dedication day. Brother and Sister Field were prevailed upon to remain and conduct services during the week; a great week of song, the greatest in the history of the county. Great preparations being made. J. A. Pine arrived Friday evening and began at once to help in the work and rendered excellent service. C. F. Stevens was selected to deliver the sermon and arrived Saturday evening. The work was talked over in detail until a late hour of the night.

Lord's day broke forth with sunshine and cheer, every one was happy. The Bible school was large. The chorus was large. The building was packed. Brother Stevens delivered one of his strong sermons. An appeal was made for money and pledges. The amount raised was over $5,000, within a very few dollars of the full amount of indebtedness.

The dedicatory services were at 3 o'clock. An impressive communion service followed. Five accessions to the church at this service.

This building is the largest and best church building in the county. The main auditorium has bowlding floors and gothic ceiling as well as large gothic windows filled with leaded cathedral glass. This room has a seating capacity of 350; the adjacent lecture room, which is separated by large sliding doors, 100. The total cost of this building and furniture is about $7,000. This church is in a splendid condition and well equipped to do a great work for the Lord. They are in need of a consecrated pastor.

N. M. Field.

Mounds, Okla.

The new Christian church building at Mounds, Okla., was dedicated August 2; S. R. Hawkins, of South McAlester, officiating. The building is a frame structure, 40x60 feet, with a seating capacity of 200, and it cost $1,500.

On the day of dedication the brethren were behind only $325. Brother Hawkins succeeded in raising $682, which pays the outstanding indebtedness and leaves enough to buy the pews.

Thus is added another home to one of our Oklahoma congregations, which, like the others, "is made up of people from all over the East and North." Many of the membership here are from Missouri and have brought their working faith with them. S. W. Marr, minister.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Bentonville, Aug. 23.—Two added at regular service and a baptism Monday evening, August 24. The union evening services have been restful, spiritual and fraternal.—J. W. Ellis.

Arkadelphia, Aug. 24.—In a meeting of 17 days at Okolona, with Evangelist Percy G. Cross in charge, there were 40 additions to the church—34 by baptism. Brother Cross is an earnest, prayerful man and is especially strong in the knowledge and use of the word.—E. S. Allhands.

Georgia.

Suwanee, Aug. 26.—Have just closed a meeting with Hopewell Church, near here. There was one baptism. C. R. Miller, of Tallapoosa, preached. There was much opposition in the community manifested in petty acts of vandalism.—E. Everett Hollingworth, minister.

Illinois.

Pontiac, Aug. 26.—We had three young men added here yesterday, and there were two added to the Christian Endeavor Society.—Allen T. Shaw.

Bushnell, Aug. 24.—I am in a meeting here with ten added at the first general invitation. The cause is very weak. The city is cursed by ten saloons.—H. Gordon Bennett.

Indiana.

Nineveh, Aug. 25.—Our meeting which has been in progress for 18 days closed with 11 confessions and 10 added by statement and letter. The workers were Lee Tinsley, minister, and Thad S. Tinsley, of Shelbyville, evangelist, assisted by his nephew, George Tinsley, of the College of the Bible, Kentucky. We can not say enough of the spiritual work of these Tinsley brothers. Our church has been stirred as never before by the forceful Bible preaching, the earnest singing and personal work. It was a semi-passive church at the beginning, but is active now. There has been no undue excitement, but a steadily increasing stream of interest and spiritual uplift. Lee Tinsley had visiting him his mother, who lent her voice in prayer, while Sister Lee Tinsley preached one sermon and George Tinsley showed the family blood; although a young man, he is a rising preacher.—Arthur V. White.

Kansas.

Eureka, Aug. 24.—One baptism yesterday. I begin at Moline, September 6.—O. J. Law.

Tyro, Aug. 24.—We have just closed a two-weeks' open air meeting in the park. Two united by letter and a young man was baptized. Our attendance has grown through the hot season. Two lodges have attended our Sunday evening services in a body by invitation.—C. W. Yard.

Kentucky.

Madisonville, Aug. 20.—I recently went to Vandetta, twelve miles distant, and held a 13-days' meeting which resulted in 31 additions—27 of them by baptism. A large percentage were men of mature years. As a result of the meeting a new church was organized.—S. M. Bernard.

Louisiana.

Lake Charles, Aug. 24.—We had a good day yesterday. There was one addition. The church and school are entering with enthusiasm into the Sunday-school rally which has just been inaugurated.—Otis Hawkins.

Missouri.

Metz, Aug. 21.—There have been 34 added to date. Will close with three more services. This is already Metz's greatest meeting. There is much rejoicing. We go to Osceola next.—E. H. Williamson.

Deep Water, August 24.—We have been here a week assisting J. D. Babb. There have been eight confessions to date.—F. M. O'Neal and wife, singing evangelists.

Milan, Aug. 24.—Three from other religious bodies and two confessions here this month.—O. W. Jones.

Columbia, Aug. 25.—There have been 25 added in a short meeting of less than two weeks at Ham's Prairie. J. Errett Clive, of New Douglas, Ill., had charge of the music.—I. N. Jett.

Aurora, Aug. 29.—One confession and baptism in a ten-days' meeting at Hurley, Stone county. I can accept pastoral work at about $600 per year.—J. D. Curtis.

Orrick, Aug. 25.—We have closed a two-weeks' meeting here where I have preached half time. There were 19 accessions to the church—eight by baptism. Some united with us from the Baptists and some from the Christian Union church, while some came from an old congregation which had disbanded about 25 years ago. C. O. McFarland and wife were the evangelists. My other preaching point is Missouri City.—D. L. Ammons.

Bethany, Aug. 21.—One addition to the church last Sunday. Our work goes on despite the hot weather. We will put a new furnace in the church and build a new parsonage this fall.—Andrew P. Johnson.

Bachelor, Aug. 22.—We have closed a sixteen-days' meeting at Friendship Church with eight added—four by confession—four by letter; two of them being from the Baptists. J. M. Rhodes, of Mexico, Mo., was at the helm. He is a power in the pulpit. We are sure the church will reap a great harvest in due time.—T. L. Wood.

Clinton, Aug. 25.—Our meeting at Mount Holme closed with five added by confession and baptism. There is now a membership of 33. We organized a Bible school—the first that has been here for several years—and raised money for quarter-time preaching. There has been no regular preaching for five years.—W. S. Hood, evangelist.

Prairie View, Aug. 25.—George L. Snively closed a brief meeting here which is said to be the best in the history of the church. He was unanimously recalled for a longer meeting next August. There were several additions that will be valuable and the church has been revived.

Dearborn, Aug. 21.—At Bethel, Mo., we closed one of the most interesting meetings I ever held. It is a country church and the attendance was splendid; people coming from St. Joseph and many towns around. The farmers were never too busy to come to the meeting. Their church is first, and it could be well said of them as of the disciples of old, "Behold, how these Christians love each other!" Their time was always the Lord's time. They love their pastor, Frank Richards, a Drake student. V. E. Ridenour, of Topeka, conducted the music and was delighted with the spirit of the singers. I found in him a congenial companion, and a man of many talents. There were 20 confessions. Almost every night the front seat was occupied by the elders and deacons, whose characters in themselves made a strong plea for the gospel. We began at Dearborn with large attendance. There has been one confession.—Jesse Logan Wilkinson.

Bolivar, Aug. 25.—J. V. Coombs closed a three-weeks' meeting which was greatly hindered because of reunions, picnics and politics. Yet there were great crowds in the new tabernacle, and Brother Coombs preached the simple gospel with great power. There were 19 added to the church. Edward O. Beyer, of Chicago, gave entire satisfaction in the conduct of the music. The meeting is considered a glorious success and many who knew nothing of our plea heard it for the first time.—J. H. Jones.

Nebraska.

Vim, Aug. 28.—We closed a three-weeks' meeting here. We had only two members to begin with, Brother and Sister A. R. Fuller. More than half time we were rained out. Succeeded in organizing a new church with 11 good members. It is a union building, but is now practically ours. We go next to Liberty Ridge. Our permanent address is Wakefield, Neb.—John L. Stine and Albert Miller.

North Carolina.

Belhaven, Aug. 26.—I began a meeting here August 1, and continued 23 days, resulting in eight baptized and 17 added by statement. J. D. Bowles, Jr., was the singing evangelist for two weeks, after which he had to leave for Russellville, S. C. My daughter, Carrie, assisted during the last week. I have accepted a call to the church and remain in the field. The Ladies' Aid is putting the parsonage in good condition and the family will occupy it about September 15. The outlook is favorable.—H. C. Bowen.

Ohio.

Marion, Aug. 25.—One added by confession and baptism last Sunday at the First Church. The work of the congregation is improving. There is a great fight on to put the saloons out of the county and a chance for work is good.—Charles E. Smith, minister.

Oklahoma.

Frederick, Aug. 26.—We closed a good meeting at the Spring Valley schoolhouse, seven miles south of Kell, with 40 added—11 confessions, 10 by statement, seven reunited, 12 from other churches. We also organized. Our next meeting will be at Fletcher. L. C. Roscoe did the singing. We would like to hear from churches wanting meetings.—Charles P. Murphy.

Gage, Aug. 18.—H. R. Bryant, our pastor, being absent, Brother D. Reese, an M. E. minister, preached for us on August 9 and 16. There was one confession. Brother Reese is a good, clean man, conscientious and well educated.—F. D. Hendrickson, elder.

Texas.

Abilene, Aug. 25.—On last Lord's day evening the meeting at Proctor closed with 16 additions by confession and one from another religious body. C. C. Scitern is the pastor, and has been for three years. He is much beloved for his untiring labors. The meeting lasted ten days. The collection was twice the amount asked for—George H. Morrison.

Bowie, Aug. 21.—A good revival has been on at the Christian church here, lead by Elder Sharrett. The people hope to have him again. He goes from here to Montague, and then to Nocona, Paradise, and Chico, in the order named.

Browndell, Aug. 29.—This is a neglected field and I am doing all I can. In nine months I have organized four churches, two Sunday schools, one Endeavor, two Ladies' Aids, have had 18 baptisms, four have united from the Baptists and eight from other religious bodies. In the four churches I minister to there are about 70 members.—J. M. Gibson.

Washington.

Colfax, Aug. 22.—A. A. Doak, when it was arranged for him to take the work at this place, at once entered upon it with zeal. He has organized a Bible class and Christian Endeavor Society, has preached to good audiences and is getting hold of the business men.—L. W. M.

Ministerial Exchange.

Della F. Chaney, Saybrook, Ill., wishes to book a number of full dates as singer with evangelist or churches. Terms, $12.50 per week with expenses.

David D. Dick and wife, evangelists, Cuyahoga Falls, have October and December open.

W. A. Rousch, 1728 Lambert street, Indianapolis, Ind., wishes to correspond with an experienced male singing evangelist for a fall meeting. Must be a good leader and soloist.

A church wanting a minister of ability and experience is asked to correspond with George A. Mayer, box 398, Mount Pulaski, Ill.

C. M. Hughes, singing evangelist, is ready for work again after a protracted illness. He can begin at once. Address him Lexington, Ky., 1441 Carlisle avenue.

Miss Sylvia Keever, singing evangelist and personal worker, can be secured for meetings after November 1. Address her North Fairfield, O.

S. J. C. Erby, a senior elder at Moulton, Ia., writes: "Any church desiring the services of a consecrated minister, well educated, evangelistic, spiritual and refined, a good pastor with fine pulpit ability, whose wife is a fine help to him, can not do better than to write our present minister, J. Winbigler, at Moulton, Ia. His time expires September 1. On behalf of the board of elders."

Through change of plans Singing Evangelist O. J. Marks has an open date for this month. Address Canton, Mo.

Charles Bloom, of Newman, Ill., will be glad to arrange an exchange of meetings with some good pastor within a reasonable distance. There is a good live church at Newman.

Singing Evangelist F. M. O'Neal and wife can make dates for meetings in September, October and November. Terms $15 per week and expenses within 100 miles of Springfield, Mo. Address 896 West Turner street.

I. H. Durfee and daughter have not all their time taken. Address Painesville, O., 125 West South street.

A. E. Dubber, of Fort Worth, Texas, has all his dates filled up to December 1. He will be pleased to close dates for meetings anywhere in the North for the coming winter and spring. He has a good singer and terms are reasonable.

"Owing to the fact that the churches I am to help in meetings during October and November have local song leaders, L. W. Ogle will have those two months open. He has been my singer and helper and is fine. Address him at Paris, Texas."—A. E. Dubber.

H. A. McCarty and daughter are ready to hold some meetings. Their address is Fayetteville, Arkansas.

J. A. W. Brown, of Moline, Kan., has returned from his vacation and is ready to hold revival meetings on a freewill offering and expense plan.

Jesse L. Wilkinson and V. E. Ridenour, singer, are in a meeting at Dearborn, Mo. They expect to be together this autumn in evangelistic work.

L. C. Swan, of North Platte, Neb., writes that Miss Gertrude Gregg, a member of the church there, desires to make arrangements as singing evangelist. Her terms will be $10 per week and expenses. She may be addressed at 720 West Second street.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

Song for the Loyal Sons.

Will H. Brown, originator of the Loyal Sons movement and instructor of the Loyal Sons class at Oakland, Cal., has composed a song for the movement, to the tune, "Stand Up for Jesus," which is meeting with great favor on the Pacific Coast. It is as follows:

We're standing up for Jesus,
For Loyal Sons are we,
With Him as our Great Leader,
We're working faithfully.
Then, we must be unselfish,
Our motto tells us this:
To help "The Other Fellow,"
Means highest happiness.

"Remember Thy Creator,"
Our text in days of youth,
Prepares us for all duty—
We'll conquer by this truth.
With White and Blue our colors,
Our banners now unfurled,
Mean Purity and Courage,
And vict'ry o'er the world.

We've taken for our emblem
The Shield of Faith, in love,
And Sword of Holy Spirit,
Of Him who rules Above.
So, forward we are marching,
Strong we must ever be,
For Jesus Christ, our Captain,
Leads on to Victory!

The Chief Task of the Church.

We are indebted to the opening sentence of the paragraph that we quote below for the heading under which we write now. In these days it requires no little assurance to single out one from among the numerous great tasks which the church has undertaken, or ought to undertake, and say that it is the chief task. When a man who is distinguished for his even temper as well as for his grasp of the questions of commanding interest in the church of his own land singles out one of these tasks and declares very deliberately that it is the chief task, we may well afford to take notice of it.

That is what Principal Garvie has done in a recent contribution to a widely circulated English journal. He is a recognized educational leader, a biblical scholar of renown, an industrious author of books that are read, and a deeply-interested student of Sunday-school progress and problems. As we shall see from the paragraph which we quote, in his estimation the training of the teacher is the chief task of the church. When his conclusion is duly considered we shall not fail to note the strength of its supports. To what extent is the welfare of the church conditioned by the Sunday-school? To what extent is the Sunday-school conditioned by the quality of the teaching? The importance of training for our teachers appears in the answers to these questions.

Principal Garvie's paragraph does not contain an exaggeration that is without due warrant. If this which he says is entirely true, what are we going to do about it? But let us give careful thought to his forcefully expressed sentiment:

"The chief task, then, before the Christian church to-day must be the instruction of the teacher. The machinery of the school is not unimportant, but the teacher and the quality of the teaching is the matter of supreme importance. Progress will not be achieved in a day. We must be prepared to wait—it may be for a generation or so before seeing the fruit of our labors. The thorough training of teachers will do more for the ultimate fulfillment of our purpose than easier methods that would seem to yield more rapid results. Let the colleges train the ministers in child-study and the methods of teaching, and let those ministers in turn become teacher-trainers in their churches, and in due time the church will worthily meet the imperative challenge of the religious education of the young."

Colorado Adult Class.

A vigorous Adult Bible Class campaign is being inaugurated with our Colorado Bible schools. Some schools are already awake to the attention and have large well-organized classes. It will require some time and education to get others to understand the great value of these classes, but in a short time most of them will doubtless be lined up and make the record in this department they have made in teacher training.

All classes will be asked to conform to the International standard of organization and register with the State Bible School Superintendent, who will report to the State Sunday-School Association, thus insuring complete records of all classes enrolled. An effort will be made to have a large number of adult classes to report at our state convention next October. Little trouble is anticipated in getting our schools to take this matter up with real earnestness, for our ministers and superintendents have already become interested in the agitation and realize that no movement in the history of modern Sunday-schools aside from teacher training has equalled it. We should not and must not be behind others in this or any other enterprise which contends for the open Book and practical applied Christianity. E. M. Cosner.

The Best Starting Point.

Our Presbyterian Brotherhood is young in point of experience, but it has been at work long enough to find out that Bible study must have a large place in its activities. In reporting to the recent General Assembly, its executive offers said:

"The Men's Bible Class continues to be, in most cases, the best starting point for the development of Brotherhood work. The Cincinnati Convention recommended the holding of Bible institutes, 'for the purpose of giving the people of each community an opportunity to secure better and more comprehensive knowledge of the laws of God as revealed in his holy word,' and one or more such institutes have been successfully held. In one large presbytery a presbyterial Brotherhood has promoted a highly successful normal class for the instruction of Bible class leaders."

One of the most effective lines of work open to the Brotherhood is that which leads to the strengthening of the Bible study work of the local churches. The local Brotherhood that fails to lend its support to the Men's Bible class is failing to improve one of the greatest opportunities open to it for service.—The Westminster Teacher.

We call atention to the above discovery of the Brotherhood workers of the Presbyterian Church. The Adult Bible class for men furnishes the guarantee of a permanent Brotherhood work. The Brotherhood that overlooks the regular study of the Bible in connection with the Bible school is doomed to failure.

Every organized Men's Bible class is a strong and fruitful Brotherhood. Every Brotherhood should be organized for Bible study.

At El Paso, Texas, the ideal of Bible-school teaching is being raised in the city. The Christian church has a training class with an enrollment of 50. The superintendents of the schools of the city are having a course offered at the Y. M. C. A. in pedagogy in connection with the current lessons, which every teacher is required or urgently requested to take. The plan is this. A head teacher teaches ten teachers, who teach all the other teachers in groups according to the grade of pupils they teach. Already good results are seen. A bibliography is supplied through the public library. H. B. Robison.

Can Young Men be Kept in the Bible School?

The pastor's class, taught by Fred A. Nichols, of Alliance, O., proves they can. In a spirited contest between the ladies and gentlemen of this class, which was to run for fifteen Sundays, the gentlemen have won eight points on attendance and the ladies six, with another Sunday to close the contest. The ladies graciously acknowledge defeat, and will banquet the victorious boys in honor of their victory. This class numbered more than half of the Bible school to-day.

Committees.

The plan of organization suggested by the Adult Department committee of the International Sunday-School Association names three committees: membership, social and devotional. It is not intended to discourage the activity of other committees. The Adult Bible Class is an institution of such promise and such power that there is no work of the church which it may not successfully and properly undertake.

For instance, a large young men's class has an Employment Committee. This was a very useful committee during the winter months of 1907 and 1908, as many a young man connected with the class could testify. The committee helped the class to get a grip upon men which they would not care to shake off.

Another class has a welcome committee. They believed that flowers for the living meant more in a practical way than a house full of blossoms at a funeral.

Another class had a sick committee. Notwithstanding the name the committee was the healthiest committee on the list. Many a sick room was indebted to it for health and cheer and care; many a sufferer had a nurse who otherwise would have had none. Many a young man away from home was helped to a Christian life because some other Christian fellows helped him when he was sick.

Another class has a welcome committee, a good committee to be at the door of the church as well as at the door of the class.

An entertainment committee arranged for a fine course of lectures and entertainments in the community.

Wherever there is a need or an opportunity, the organized class has a live committee helping do that thing in the name of Christ.

An Ohio State Sunday-school Campaign.

L. L. FARIS.

As we enter upon our duties as state Bible school superintendent for the Christian churches of Ohio, we want to call upon all our consecrated Sunday-school workers for their prayers in behalf of the great work before us, and their hearty co-operation in its accomplishment.

There can be no successful work done unless we are a practical unit in our endeavors. A number of state Bible-school workers at a conference held at the great Bethany Assembly early in August agreed upon three lines of especial campaigning for the year. These lines are, 1. To push our teacher training work to a successful issue; 2. To have 10,000 organized adult Bible classes with 100,000 men and 100,000 women enrolled before the Centennial; and, 3. To push boys' and girls' rally day for home missions. And in this, our introductory note to our Ohio Bible-schools, we want to call attention to these three points.

As to teacher training, it seems to me we have passed beyond the necessity for laying stress on the necessity for it, but we do need to emphasize this point, that every teacher of a training class, whether First Course or Advanced Course, should report the same to the Ohio Sunday-School Association at 79 Ruggery Bldg., Columbus, Ohio, and to your State Bible-school Superintendent.

In the adult class work, every class whose members are sixteen years and over should be organized according to the International standard. For a nominal fee—25 cents—a class certificate is received, and each class has a part in the world's Sunday-school progress.

Rally Day speaks for itself, and we trust we may have uniform and hearty responses to appeals of this kind. A strong effort to bring up the standard here ought to be made. Let every school have part in this.

September 27 is to be made a general revival day for the teacher training work. We are hopeful that all our churches will take up the work with renewed vigor, organizing new first course classes, calling together those that have as yet an unfinished course, and organizing advanced standard classes that Ohio may be in the very forefront of this great work.

Then on September 7 let us have a simultaneous fall rally the state over, and enter into a vigorous autumn and winter campaign for numbers and efficiency in our Sunday-schools.

We are desirous of giving our very best effort to this great work, and we are also solicitous that we may have co-operation from great schools and small. In this way we may reach a much higher standard of efficiency, and our progression will be uniform. Let every one reading this fill out the following blank and forward it at once to L. L. Faris, Lynchburg, Ohio.

Notice—Centennial Bible Schools.

The national officers of our Bible School Association and other leaders in this work insist upon a literal construction of the Centennial aim, "All the church and as many more in the Bible school." This annuls the statement which I recently published admitting to the Centennial distinction schools whose enrollment is twice that of the church, without regard to the number of unenlisted church members.

This is both right and expedient. Let all be Bible Christians. Hundreds of churches can reach this standard before the Centennial, if their leaders wake up at once.

GREAT AND PRECIOUS PROMISES.

Topic Sept. 9: John 14:1-3; 2 Peter 1:4.

The Bible is remarkable as a book of promises. It is unique among all books in this. There is no book like the Bible in its outlook and uplook. The note of expectation, of exultant hope, of glorious prospects, shouts through the prophets and triumphs in the midst of tragedies. The "glorious Gospel," which Paul proclaimed and which Peter preached, with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven, adds persuasion to promise. "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you; I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there you may be also." The persuasion of Love is in these simple words of promise and of hope. They must be true, else Love is all a delusion, and there is nothing abiding and true and eternal in this world. It is inconceivable that Christ was wilfully deceiving his disciples in holding out to them false promises. "If it were not so I would have told you."

And somehow we feel that it must be so. The sanity of the Savior forbids the suggestion that he was himself deceived. There is nothing of the fanatical in the character and teachings of Christ. He was an egotist, the critics tell us. Yet with what simplicity and straightforward sincerity he speaks. His egotism is the self-assertion of the supremacy of a great soul, conscious of divinity, yet without pretense or pride. Humility mingled with the assertion of his divinity in such a way as to be perfectly natural. Even his enemies testified that never man spake as this man. He was more than man. He was the Son of God in a sense in which none other has ever been born or has ever become. This by the world's confession, from the lips and pens of the mightiest among men.

And so we read over again and again the old sweet promises of the departing Master to his disciples, and our hearts are comforted. We believe in him. His life bears witness to his words. His death is the seal of his love and of the love wherewith God has loved us. He is our Father. We are his children. His father is "our Father." And because he is our Father and Christ is his Son we are assured that we can trust him. "If it were not so I would have told you." And we rest our tired lives in his keeping. When we are troubled we lean out of the windows of the weary world and hear him say: "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me." And we pillow our heads in this persuasion that he is the Christ, the Son of God and our Savior. What he has spoken he will do. What he has promised he will perform. "For all the promises of God are yea and amen in Christ Jesus." And by these promises we are made partakers of the divine nature and are enabled to escape the corruption that is in the world through lust. We claim the promises through knowledge of him that called us to glory and to virtue. To know Jesus Christ is all our need. For this is life eternal, to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.

"In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you; I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there you may be also." The persuasion of Love is in these simple words of promise and of hope. They must be true, else Love is all a delusion, and there is nothing abiding and true and eternal in this world. It is inconceivable that Christ was wilfully deceiving his disciples in holding out to them false promises. "If it were not so I would have told you."

And somehow we feel that it must be so. The sanity of the Savior forbids the suggestion that he was himself deceived. There is nothing of the fanatical in the character and teachings of Christ. He was an egotist, the critics tell us. Yet with what simplicity and straightforward sincerity he speaks. His egotism is the self-assertion of the supremacy of a great soul, conscious of divinity, yet without pretense or pride. Humility mingled with the assertion of his divinity in such a way as to be perfectly natural. Even his enemies testified that never man spake as this man. He was more than man. He was the Son of God in a sense in which none other has ever been born or has ever become. This by the world's confession, from the lips and pens of the mightiest among men.

And so we read over again and again the old sweet promises of the departing Master to his disciples, and our hearts are comforted. We believe in him. His life bears witness to his words. His death is the seal of his love and of the love wherewith God has loved us. He is our Father. We are his children. His father is "our Father." And because he is our Father and Christ is his Son we are assured that we can trust him. "If it were not so I would have told you." And we rest our tired lives in his keeping. When we are troubled we lean out of the windows of the weary world and hear him say: "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me." And we pillow our heads in this persuasion that he is the Christ, the Son of God and our Savior. What he has spoken he will do. What he has promised he will perform. "For all the promises of God are yea and amen in Christ Jesus." And by these promises we are made partakers of the divine nature and are enabled to escape the corruption that is in the world through lust. We claim the promises through knowledge of him that called us to glory and to virtue. To know Jesus Christ is all our need. For this is life eternal, to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.

"What's impudence?"

The question was addressed to a young man who lay reading in a hammock one hot July afternoon.

"Impudence? Why, Ben, a big boy of twelve and not know what impudence means! Why, it's being saucy, of course."

"Oh!"

"Understand, now, little brother?" asked Jack, smilingly.

"Y-e-s, only I didn't know I was."

"You! Who said so?"

"Mr. Myers. He was walking past the gate and I asked him if he ever saw a snake."

"Ha! ha!" laughed Jack. "You baby, didn't you know better than that?"

"But why?"

"Just because people say that when a person gets drunk very often, as Mr. Myers does, they think they see snakes and all sorts of horrible things all the time."

"Oh! then perhaps that's why he thought I was impudent."

"Perhaps, but where did you see a snake?"

"Out in the road by the bridge. It was most a foot long, and I was scared because it wiggled so. Frank was with me and he dropped a big stone on it, and then we both jumped up and down on the stone, and I guess we must have killed it."

"Guess again! I think you will find he just wiggled into the ground. Once I shot a cat, and—"

"What for?" interrupted Ben.

"That's just it. I didn't know any better then than to kill some harmless thing that was not hurting me, but I had a new gun and wanted to shoot something, and the cat was handy. You were only a baby then so I didn't like to shoot you, I thought I'd wait awhile, and—"

"Oh, Jack, you joker!" Ben gave his arm a loving squeeze.

"Well, anyway I shot the cat and got a lot of the boys to come and look at him, and while I was gone he got up and walked away."

"Why, how could he?"

"Well, he did. Oh, all cats have nine lives!"

"Do they really?"

"Oh, I don't know sure, but people say so. They fall out of windows and off roofs, and get killed half a dozen times, but the ninth time they really die."

"Oh, isn't that queer?"

"Very; now let me finish my book like a good boy, and you'd better not say anything more about snakes to Mr. Myers."

* * * * *

The morning as Ben was passing Mr. Myers's cottage, a few doors away, he saw him coming toward him carrying a spade in one hand and a stiff and stark black cat by the tail in the other.

"Oh, Mr. Myers, what are you going to do with that poor pussy cat?"

"Who are you?" demanded the man cross.

"I'm the imp-impudent boy."

"What do you want here?"

"Why do you carry him by the tail? You should carry him by the back of the neck. I'll show you how. May I?"

"The cat is dead; he can't feel anything."

"Has he ever been dead before?" interrupted Ben, hastily. "You know all cats have to die nine times before they are really dead. Jack said so, and he knows, because he shot a cat once and thought it was dead, but it wasn't the ninth time, and it just walked away."

Mr. Myers had begun to dig during this recital.

"Oh, please, don't bury him; he might come to life again, and think how uncomfortable you would feel. You'd not like to be buried alive, would you?"

"Can't say I would," responded the old man.

"Then won't you please give him another chance? Let him lie here behind this hedge till morning, and then if you think we'd better, I'll help you bury him."

* * * * * *

"I'm afraid he's dead," said Ben the next morning, as he appeared at the cottage door.

"Aren't you afraid to come inside my gate?"

"Why, no. See, I've brought this muslin to wrap around him and this little piece of tiling for a tombstone. I thought perhaps you would like to put some of the flowers from your garden on the grave. Poor little pussy!"

Ben took the forlorn cat up in his arms very gently. A tear shone in the old man's eye, perhaps he wondered if anyone would care as tenderly for him when his time came, who can tell?

The ceremony over, Ben gazed about him as though in doubt as to whether there could be any further interest in common between them. At length he said: "May I sit on the step and talk to you, or are you going out?"

"I do go up town usually, but if you'll stay here and talk or read to me, I'd much rather stay at home this morning."

"Don't you ever work?"

"I used to sell vegetables when I worked the garden."

"Are you rich?"

"Oh, no; but I have a pension, and that keeps me alive."

The days and weeks went by, and Ben became a daily visitor at the Myers cottage. The townspeople noticed that he came no more to the saloon, and wondered.

The garden was dug and newly planted, and often one might see the old man, fishing pole in hand, going toward the brook, with Ben skipping along contentedly by his side.

Several months later, at the annual meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association, Jack Norton made the following suggestion to the members: "We need a janitor for our new building, and I believe Myers is our man. I've watched him closely these last few months, and I believe he really has reformed, and I believe he is sincere, but we'll have to help him, you know. Sometimes I've blamed myself when I have seen what Ben was doing with him. I believe we have left him alone too long and the burden was too heavy."

"I say Ben ought to be made an honorary member or paid a missionary's salary or something. He has done more than all the rest of us put together."

"Right!" responded the house.

"And I move that we invite Mr. Myers to become an associate member and come to our meetings," said another.

Years have passed and the "associate member's" chair is seldom vacant at the weekly meetings.

Ben is growing up and soon expects to commence his training for a foreign missionary, but two persons at least remember with satisfaction and pleasure that the inspiration and foundation for his choice of this high calling was laid at home.—New York Observer.

Finical Appetites.

A duty which every mother owes to herself and to society is to train her child to follow the doctrine of St. Paul and "eat what is set before him." How disagreeable is the finical notional eater many a housekeeper will testify. One man makes miserable the woman at whose house he chances to visit by his inability to eat half of the dishes that are set before him. It is not that certain viands disagree with him, but simply that he does "not care for them." Such are tomatoes, raw or cooked, fish in any form, potatoes (unless they are mashed), fruits of all kinds, except peaches, and hot puddings of every variety. Another man can not eat soups, while a third woman "never tastes a salad." The trouble with all these people undoubtedly originated in their early training. In too many families the small people are allowed to declare that they "don't like this" and "won't eat that," and are humored in their whims. Indeed, it is no uncommon thing to hear a mother speak with ill-concealed pride of the fastidious appetites of her children. In treating their whims as matters of vast importance, she is laying on her own shoulder a heavy burden, under which she may some day moan that "it is impossible to suit her family, try as she may."

Unless a child is made ill by a certain article of food, he should be encouraged to eat it, and his failure to enjoy it at once should be deplored, not praised. A six-year-old, who had many whims and notions, paid a visit to a grandmother who was wise in her generation. The dessert at his first meal in the grand-maternal abode chanced to be strawberries. He shook his head as a saucer of the sugared fruit was placed before him.

"I don't want these, grandma," he said.

"Very well, dear," was the reply, and no further notice was taken of the declinature.

The child continued to eye distastefully the saucer of berries, and soon remarked—

"Grandma, I'm tired of strawberries."

"Yes, dear," was the only answer.

"Grandma, aren't you going to give me any dessert instead of these?"

"No, dear, of course not," gently, but firmly.

"Not even a piece of cake?"

"Not even a piece of cake."

"Then," with a sorry attempt at a laugh, "I suppose I'll have to eat my berries!"

Which he proceeded to do with such zest that the sugared lobes disappeared like snowballs before a July sun. Evidently grandma was not to be tricked and coerced as was mamma.

Among the forbidden speeches at table should be "I do not like that." And if from any personal idiosyncrasy, a child is really unable to eat a certain dish, in which others indulge with impunity, he may be trained to pass the act by in silence, and to feel that his peculiarity is a misfortune, not a virtue.—Table Talk.

A Scotch minister had been away on a vacation, and on his return asked the sexton how all had gone in his absence.

"Very well indeed," was the cheering response. "They do say that most meenisters leave some one worse than themselves to fill the pulpit when they go away; but you never do that, sir."—Punch.

Horses Tethered to a Church Steeple.

Rarely has anything more wonderful and picturesque happened than the recovery, as if by a miracle, of the ancient Church of Soulac, on the shores of the Bay of Biscay, in France, after it had been lost for hundreds of years.

The Church of Soulac is about the most ancient in France. It is reputed to have been founded by St. Veronica, the woman who, according to legend, pressed a handkerchief on the Savior's brow when he was on his way to Calvary.

About the thirteenth century the Church of Notre Dame de Soulac began to be seriously threatened by the encroachments of the sea and the shifting sands which move up and down this stormy coast. Finally it was completely buried by the sands, only the top of the tower remaining visible. Several neighboring houses were buried with it.

For a time a man actually lived in the top of the tower, and then the sand blew up about it and almost hid it. At this stage it happened that people actually hitched their horses to the ironwork at the top of the tower.

Now, through a combination of interesting events, the sea has been driven back and the ancient church has been disinterred and restored to religious uses once more. It is to-day as good a church as ever, and all the more interesting on account of its strange vicissitudes.

When men hitched their horses to the steeple of the Church of Soulac they were duplicating one of the most extraordinary incidents related by Baron Munchausen in his tales. It may be recalled that the Baron was traveling over the snow when darkness overtook him and he was forced to stop for the night. He tied his horse to a stump which appeared above the snow, and lay down to rest.

"In the morning," writes the Baron, "it is not easy to conceive my astonishment to find myself in the midst of a village, lying in a church-yard, nor was my horse to be seen, but I heard him neigh soon after, somewhere above me. On looking upward I beheld him hanging by his bridle to the weathercock of a church steeple. Matters were now very plain to me; the village had been covered with snow overnight; a sudden change of weather had taken place; I had sunk down in the church-yard while asleep, gently, and in the same proportion as the snow melted away; and what in the dark I had taken to be a stump of a little tree appearing above the snow, to which I had tied my horse, proved to have been the cross, or weathercock, of the steeple!

"Without long consideration I took one of my pistols, shot the bridle in two, brought down the horse, and proceeded on my journey."

Thus one of the stories of the monumental liar of literature has been nearly paralleled by actual events at Soulac, with the trifling exception that sand takes the place of snow.

The history of the Church of Notre Dame at Soulac is one of the most interesting in Europe. Only a brief outline of it can be given. The original church, reported to have been founded by St. Veronica, fell into ruin in the dark ages, when the barbarians were overrunning Christian Europe. About 930 A. D., Count William of Bordeaux built a new church, the one now restored, not far from the original one, but in a better position.

By the close of the seventeenth century much of the population had been driven away by the invasion of the ocean, that still continued to heap its sands around the old church. The walls were first covered up to the window seats, then gradually the windows were filled up by the invading sands. The church was perforce deserted. There is extant a record by a notary dated February 16, 1744, stating that the entry to the church is entirely closed by the sand and worship is no longer possible there.

Some of the parishioners favored tearing down the walls and using the material for building a new church further inland, but the Chamber of Commerce of Bordeaux opposed the idea, stating that the bell tower was an indispensable guide for navigation. The Minister of Public Works offered the parishioners F10,000 as an indemnity for the loss of the building material, which was accepted, and a new church was built in "Young Soulac." This ended the life of Notre Dame de Soulac for more than a century.

At the end of the eighteenth century an engineer named Bremontier suggested that the seashore might be preserved from further erosion by planting sea pines on it. These trees proved a treasure to the inhabitants of the coast. Finally the plains of Gascony were protected by forests, shading and fertilizing the barren coast and solidifying its sands. The northeast winds began to undo the work of the savage west winds, blowing the sands away from the old bell tower, bringing to view the solid stone walls of the church, opening window after window.

Attention was attracted to Soulac, and a few summer cottages were built near the old church. After 1857 a small chapel was built in the neighborhood, cared for by the rector of "Young Soulac," but Soulac became a fashionable watering place, and the chapel being too small for the large number of worshippers, thought was taken of the sand-buried basilica. Fashion brought about that which archæology and reverence had failed to do. The work of freeing the edifice from its sandy imprisonment was begun. Only this year the restoration was finally completed, and the church is to-day as strong as when it was built.

Another remarkable event happened at Soulac. Workmen were digging the foundations for a new town hall when they came upon the remains of an ancient stone building. It was considerably nearer the sea than the recently restored church. Archæologists examined the remains and concluded that they could be no other than those of the little church founded by St. Veronica herself. hoped to preserve the building, and pos-

A Collection for the Bishop.

Bishop Talbot, the "Cowboy Bishop," who has recently told, in his book of reminiscences, "My People of the Plains," of his strange life as bishop among the cowboys and miners of early Wyoming and Idaho, had many an amusing experience and made hosts of devoted friends.

An incident at the close of one of his meetings, in the dance-hall of a mining town, is thus described:

"Another hymn was given out, and I was about to dismiss the congregation with my blessing, when Colonel Burns, my landlord, stepped forward, and in a low but distinct voice said:

"'Bishop, haven't you forgot something?'

"'What do you mean?' said I.

"'Why, the hat,' replied the colonel. 'It won't do to forget the hat, for yesterday was pay day, and these boys have a lot of money, and if you don't get it the saloons will, and it is much better for you to have it.'

"'Very good,' I said. 'Have you any suggestions, Colonel?'

"'Only this, Bishop: I wish you would give us about five hymns. I want plenty of time. I do not want to be crowded. The boys are a little slow on collections.'

"I stepped over to the organ, and we started in. The colonel presented the hat to the man immediately on my left. He was sitting on the edge of the platform. He brought out a silver dollar, called a 'wheel,' in the language of the camp. The second and third men to whom the hat was passed followed the example of the first, each giving a dollar; but the fourth man seemed nervous, and hesitated while he fumbled in his pocket. After considerable delay he brought out a quarter.

"'Oh, put that back. Come, now, Bill, the bishop is not after small game to-day. White chips don't go here. He wants a wheel out of you. Hurry up.'

"The hymns were being rapidly used up, and at last the colonel returned to the platform with the hat. His face beamed with satisfaction. After the service I asked him why it took him so long.

"'Oh,' he replied, 'Bishop, you see, I charge up every feller accordin' to his pile. I know these boys. Most on 'em grub with me. I made one feller cough up a ten-dollar gold piece, and you will find a good many fives in the hat.'

"I need not say that the collection was a generous one."

Many of us know how, even in our childhood, some blank, discontented face on the background of our home has marred our summer mornings. Why was it, when the birds were singing, when the fields were green, there was somebody who found it hard to smile?—George Eliot.

Where the very tallest, towering trees
Are nothing to those who ride
At swift speed
On the winged steed
That you mount on the mountain side.

What little girl would like to go
To the Land of Sleep with me?
What little boy
Would know the joy
Of a sail on the Sleepy Sea?
Who would dance on Gum Drop Isle,
Or play on Caramel Street?
Who would know
Of the candy snow
That falls in a sugary sleet?

Oh, you are the one who wants to sail
Far into the silent skies?
And you are the one
Who'd have the fun
In the Land of the Dreamy Eyes.
You are the one who'd fly with me
To the highest mountain peak;
A steed to stride
For a gliding ride
To the foamy Chocolate Creek?

Then rest your head, my little one,
And let your eyelids close.
We soon shall float
In the airy boat
On the Sea of Sweet Repose,
We'll visit the Country of Caramels,
Or follow the Chocolate stream,
To the bank of the lake,
Where we'll munch at cake
Till the morn shall end our dream.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Our ten-cent shower for our missionary is over and the sun is shining. That is another way of saying that August 12 was a success. You should have seen the letters pouring down on that particular Wednesday! That was the storm center but it rained hard the next day, and even yet there is a drizzle once in a while. Nor was our shower merely a figurative one. August 12 was really a showery day in Bentonville. It showered in the postoffice and in the streets, and Felix tried to sleep in the house (but we didn't let him, and he knocked a china cup off the refrigerator in making his nest up there. But it didn't break, not even the handle). And that night the rain poured down in a deluge; in several deluges, as if even Nature knew it was our ten-cent shower, and wanted to help it along.

How much did we catch, you want to know? At least I hope you want to know. Well, just imagine that there were 100 letters (we do not say there were), and only a dime in each (we don't say there was only a dime in so many); that would make but $10. So you mustn't be disappointed to hear that although ever and ever so many dimes fell, they didn't make it so you couldn't travel if you had on your rubber boots. I am not going to tell you plump out just what we took in, because it would spoil the story to tell how it ended before it is printed. All these letters must be printed, or at least the hearts of them, and that will take a long time, so we will just add up as we go along to keep up our spirits.

And now let me say that all contributions are to be published, but only one at a time, so if your name doesn't show up soon, please don't write to me to ask if I got your money. It is so much trouble to answer you, when it isn't necessary, and it takes my stamp or yours, a good stamp that might be used for something useful. But when I say, "Now, ladies and gentlemen, all the shower money has been reported," then, if I have left you out, that's the time to arise and protest, or write to ask what's the matter. So keep watching "The Christian-Evangelist," and wait to see what our grand total will be. Thus far I have, in previous numbers, reported a total of $18.95, coming from twenty-three different states. And when you consider that it would take 189 people to send that much, if each sent a dime, it doesn't seem so little, after all. Of course, some sent more than a dime; but some sent less, not much less, because they couldn't, but still, less. Now we will begin to add to that $18.95, and please note the variety of states we have to offer this week:

Ruth Munger, Watonga, Okla.: "The Advance Society girls send a draft for $2.04 for Drusie and Charlie. Our club has eight members now. We gave an entertainment to raise the money. This is the program: Madam Jarley's wax works; solo, 'School Days'; scenes from Great Expectations; tableau, Gossip; charade; Tableaux, Thanksgiving, Gypsy Camp, Little Bo Peep, Columbia, Sleeping Beauty. We had a good attendance and a good time. My Av. S. quarter will be up next week." (How I wish I could have been at that entertainment.)

Mrs. M. H. McQueen, Elk City, Okla.: "I told my Sunday-schol class about Drusie, and we add our collection, 45 cents, to the shower. They are boys and girls from 12 to 16, and need the best of literature, and I am going to try to get them to take up the Av. S. work." (No wonder the "new state" has attracted admiration on account of its progressive spirit!)

From the office of the attorney general, Jefferson City, Mo., comes $1, with no letter accompanying it; and from George L. Gordon, Velardena, Mexico, comes another dollar, with a letter so full of slang that it is quite impossible to translate it into handy English, so I can't publish it either, though no doubt he would like to see it in print. From Sedalia, Mo., comes a dime and this: "You said Felix is the only cat in Arkansas that receives souvenir post cards. The cat of my aunt at St. George, Kan., has a post card album of his own, although he is not yellow. He is white and blue mixed and weighs 15 pounds, and sits up when you tell him to say 'pretty-please.' He is the prettiest cat I have ever seen, but please give my respects to Col. Felix. I am a new member—am on the fifth week of my first quarter. I hope you are having showers every day. I am glad the sprinkle began in Missouri." Felix' claims to fame are not based on his beauty. If you should say "pretty-please" to him, he wouldn't pay the least attention. When you talk to Felix you have got to say something.)

Speaking of souvenir cards, here's one addressed to "Felix Ellis," showing a white-ribboned kitten (a temperate one, no doubt), inscribed thus: "Compliments of Baby Kitten Adams, Milestone, Sask., Canada." Felix is duly pleased, but I can't say he would like to meet Baby Kitten, for he shows a decided antipathy to all cats and kittens except himself. Cleo Layne, of this town, has named her kitten "Felix" in his honor, but when it was brought around for exhibition the colonel presented no souvenir spoon; quite otherwise.)

Ian D. Richardson, Havensville, Kan., writes from the office of the U. P. R. R. Co.: "Inclosed find an order for $2.45 for raindrops for Drusie's shower. My mother, Mrs. Richardson, was the originator of the idea. I, with many others, have gathered drops to make the greatest downpour ever witnessed. I have been busy with my depot work, and could not see more. May God bless Drusie in her work." There follows a list of twenty-three persons who joined together to send the $2.45. We wish space allowed their publication. Each donation is carefully recorded and duly accredited. This letter is addressed to "Mr. Trobridge Ellis," but it's all the same to me. Just call me what you please so you get Felix' name right.

Julia V. Cox, Toppenish, Wash.: "It has been a long time since I was connected with the Av. S., but as it was my own fault that I dropped out I do not deserve to be remembered." (We remember you very pleasantly.) "It is almost ten years since I and my sister Lola joined the Av. S. We enjoyed it for a long time. I have always read the Av. S. articles when at home. As we do not have many showers out here in Washington I will have to send a small irrigating ditch—$1; I wish I could turn a whole canal into Drusie's field of labor. I wonder what has become of the old members whose names used to appear on the Honor List? Perhaps, like me, they have let other things crowd out the Av. S. till they think they just don't have time for it. I took one year at the University of Washington, and taught last year. I will teach again next year, then go back to school till I finish. And then—well, in the meantime I hope the Av. S. will continue to grow." (I wonder what his name is?)

J. A. and Anna M. Chenoweth, Hartman, Colo.: "We haven't had any raindrops to spare, but as we've not noticed an account of any you have received for Drusie from Colorado, we inclose $1. May God bless the good work."

Fannie B. Walnock, St. Augustine, Ill.: "I send 100 drops for Drusie's shower; 20 from me, the rest from family and friends. We are much interested in her work. Old Tom, our 13-year-old cat, sends his regards to Felix, and hopes he has his hammock repaired." (It was too rotten to mend or I should have sewed it up.)

Mrs. Mabel Morse, Bloomington, Neb.: "I want a part in Drusie's shower, though not a member of the Av. S. A dime from

SOMETHING NEW, DIFFERENT, UNEXPECTED.

Readers listen sharp, don't miss! Investigate—best thing ever happened. Hundred years coming—here at last. Full grown. So startling you may not believe at first. Astonishing, yet absolutely true.

INGENIOUS CHIOAN INVENTS A NEW DEVICE THAT CLEANS FAMILY WASHING IN 30 TO 50 MINUTES, WHILE YOU REST. No rubbing, no chemicals, no motor.

SEE HOW SIMPLE, EASY, DIFFERENT. Thousands of users praise it. Circulars sent free, give full details.

NO SUCH DEVICE SOLD IN STORES—DIFFERENT FROM ANYTHING YOU HAVE SEEN. Nothing else like it—great seller—enormous demand. Customers delighted. R. O. Cowan, N. Y., places 13 in 6 hours, (profit $9.00). Mrs. J. Brown, Pa., sold 10 in 3 days, (profit $20.00). You can do the same.

Miracles don't happen now, but listen—there's no more wash day troubles—now dead, wiped out, forgotten. There's new invented device for cleaning clothes—nothing like it. Good-bye to wash boards, washing machines, troubles, etc.—Their day is passed. "Easy Way" of cleaning clothes is here to bless our dear women. Invention that killed wash day is small—called "Easy Way," not human. If it had life it would have a stomach. It's claimed a stomach has millions of small tissues, each with a kind of suction. This apparatus has no stomach, yet there's things inside, things that move—a place for dirt—has awful appetite for dirt—goes after all the dirt in all clothes at same time. Small, but mighty—silent, but powerful.

Operated on stove—water inside, then soap, then clothes—move knob occasionally. Dirt lets go as hot water, suds, scalding steam and vapor begin movements. 8 to 10 minutes—clothes clean—rinse, dry, that's all! Next batch same operation—same water—30 to 50 minutes family washing clean. You just wait between batches—child can do it. Laundries clean clothes without rubbing,—the "Easy Way" does the same at your home. Does the combined work of wash boiler, wash board and washing machine. When through, set away on shelf—that's all—no more attention. No wood, all metal, sanitary, should last lifetime, light, easy handled. Woman's God-send. Cleans laces, white goods, bed clothes, woolens, colored clothes, etc., without injury—no rubbing, no chemicals. Saves drudgery, clothes, labor, fuel, health and looks. No experiment—going on daily—you can do it. Customers everywhere delighted and praise it. LAURETTA MITCHELL, O., writes:—"Done big washing with 'Easy Way' in 45 minutes. Sold 3 already." J. W. MEYERS, Ga., orders 12 more, says:—"'Easy Way' greatest invention for womanhood, forever abolishing miserable wash day." F. E. POST, Pa.—"Done 2 weeks' washing in 45 minutes. Clothes cleaned without rubbing." J. H. BARRETT, of Ark., after ordering 33, says:—"Grandest invention I ever heard of."

Price, only $6.00 complete—ready to use—sent anywhere—not sold in stores. Guaranteed satisfactory, or your money refunded. Send no money, simply your name and address. Circulars, testimonials, free.

Bro. Errett Ingram, and one for myself."

A Friend, Moose Jaw, Canada: "Here is one little dime for the shower. May the Lord be praised for such faith as our missionary Drusie has." (Are you acquainted with the Baby Kitten at Milestone?)

Mrs. E. E. Ramsey, Hereford, Texas: "Ten drops for myself, ten for my 8-year-old Dorothy. You could almost count us as coming from another state, as we are way out here in the 'Panhandle.' But we do things in the Panhandle, the same as other places. God bless the work of the Av. S."

A Friend, Grand Rapids, Wis.: "I have read the Av. S. letters with much interest, and have wished to be able to send something to help, but am not able to do much as my work at home is considerable. My age is 62. I am not able to do much, but will send a dime for the shower."

Louisville, Ky.: "Born to Mr. and Mrs. O. G. Kitchen (our Av. S. friends) a pretty girl, on August 17." And there is a picture of the Louisville court house, where this girl may become famous when the women have their "rights" in Kentucky.

Mrs. Dora Griffith, Emida, Idaho: "I send $1 for Drusie's shower, and may the Lord bless her in her good work."

Harriet McCausland, Christian Colony, Acampo, Cal.: "It is hard to raise a shower in California in August, but I got a sprinkle, nevertheless. I am still interested in the Av. S., but read so much I don't take time to count the lines. I don't believe your cat is one bit smarter than my dog, if he is a very smart animal. Diamond is a fox terrier. She and I send our respects to Felix." (And Harriet sends $1.20 to Drusie's shower, which she has collected from ten persons, their names all given in her letter. Of course, the names include hers, and those of her father and mother.)

From New York, a blank sheet of paper and 50 cents.

Two friends, Jewell, Iowa: "For many years we have been reading the Av. S. letters. God bless Missionary Drusie and Orphan Charlie. May they both be spared to accomplish much good. Enclosed find two dimes for the shower."

Henry A. Blake, 42 Willow street, Providence, R. I.: "Enclosed find $1 for Drusie Malott. I have wanted to send something ever since she went to China. I admire her trust and faith. I like the Av. S. We have three black cats and two dogs. How's Felix, the old-gold cat? I am 38 years old and a bachelor." (You are a good deal like me, except you have more cats and dogs.)

Eugene Osgathorp, Winslow, Ind: "20 cents for Drusie."

Ashley S. Johnson, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.: "Our appeal for bread last year was a great success. The Av. S. sent $1, which was set apart to buy bread for supper Nov. 16, 1907," (for the Bible students of the college.) "I feel sure you will be glad to contribute the same amount and have the same date for the next school year." (We would if you or your students could take any interest in the Av. S. and what it is doing. The School of the Evangelists is a great work and we wish it glorious success; but as a society we can do nothing for it, so long as it seems to have no sort of interest in us. I do not feel it would be right to send $1 of the society's money when Kimberlin Heights doesn't seem to know we are on earth. But as individuals, I hope everybody will do what they can for all the good that is being done in the world.)

Susie Wendling, St. Charles, La.: "Here is ten cents for the shower. I made it selling home made candy. I found it hard to make the candy, and still harder to sell it."

When I stated that we had taken in $18.95 on the shower, we had not counted in the donations recorded in last week's paper. Those bring the sum up to $29.40. The money from the Watonga, Okla., girls we divide between Drusie and Charlie; we add in the 10 cents just sent us by Lillian Hall of this city, which up to date makes, counting five cents just received from Drove, Tenn., and 10 cents from Blue Spring Gap, Va., $43.27. Who will send 3 cents so we can get rid of that 27? It is also interesting to note that we have raised the number of states interested in the shower. We can now count an even 30.

The Fourteen Mistakes of Life.

An English paper (name unknown) is said to have given what are called "the fourteen mistakes of life," as follows:

1. To set up our own standard of right and wrong, and judge people accordingly.
2. To measure the enjoyment of others by our own.
3. To expect uniformity of opinion in this world.
4. To look for judgment and experience in youth.
5. To endeavor to mold all dispositions alike.
6. To look for perfection in our own actions.
7. To worry ourselves and others with what can not be remedied.
8. To refuse to yield in immaterial matters.
9. To refuse to alleviate, so far as lies in our power, all that which needs alleviation.
10. To refuse to make an allowance for the infirmities of others.
11. To consider everything impossible that we can not perform.
12. To believe only what our own finite minds can grasp.
13. To expect to be able to understand everything.
14. To live for time alone, when any moment may launch us into eternity.

"When a bit of sunshine hits you,
After passing of a cloud,
And a bit of laughter gits you,
And your spirit's feelin' proud,
Don't forget to up and fling it
At the soul that's feelin' blue,
For the minute that you sling it
It's a boomerang to you."

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, SEPTEMBER 10, 1908.

"Oh for the Gift of Vision!"

OH FOR the gift of vision, that we might behold the teeming marvels and delights of this fair earth, whose most modest shapes are rich in bloom and beauty! Oh for the gift of faith and love, that we might interpret truly the events of life, and find in each a theme for delectable song! Oh for the heavenly charity which can recognize in our brethren patience, kindness, and heroism, where a niggling intellect can see nothing but imperfection and failure! Oh that we might behold with open face the goodness of God in Jesus Christ, and live in the spirit of adoring wonder and loving consecration! If we do not grow in grace, let us turn over a new leaf; let us try the focus of appreciation instead of that of criticism; let us be freer to see the beautiful, to appreciate the good, to praise the high; and if we are only humble, sympathetic, and pure, the glory and joy of life will stand freshly revealed in everything, the law of praise will be on our lips, and in the genial glow we shall grow as flowers and palms in the sun.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

The Old Faith Restated

EDITED BY
J. H. GARRISON, A. M.

This book contains 456 pages, and is a restatement, by the men whose names are given below, of the Fundamental Truths and Essential Doctrines of Christianity

as held and advocated by

THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST

Note the subjects treated, and by whom:

1. Grounds on which we receive the Bible as the Word of God, and the only rule of faith and practice . . . . . Prof. J. W. McGarvey
2. Grounds on which we accept Jesus as the Messiah, the Son of God and Savior of the World . . . . . G. W. Longan
3. The ground of man's need of salvation—or, sin and its remedy . . . . . J. S. Lamar
4. The progress of revelation—or, the three dispensations—their limits and their characteristics . . . . . J. J. Haley
5. The doctrine of justification by faith . . . . . Prof. I. B. Grubbs
6. Repentance—its nature, conditions and necessity . . . . . H. W. Everest, A. M., LL. D.
7. Baptism, its action, subjects and import . . . . . J. B. Briney
8. The Lord's Supper . . . . . D. R. Dungan
9. Conversion—what is it and how produced . . . . . A. I. Hobbs
10. The doctrine concerning the Holy Spirit . . . . . W. K. Pendleton, LL. D.
11. Reformation in Christ—some of its results . . . . . Prof. J. M. Trible
12. The Unity of the Church—how broken, and the creed-basis on which it must be restored . . . . . George Plattenburg
13. Organization . . . . . B. B. Tyler, D. D.
14. The evangelization of the world . . . . . A. McLean, LL. D.
15. Means of spiritual growth . . . . . F. D. Power
16. Christ and the future life . . . . . B. W. Johnson
17. Lessons from our past experiences—or helps and hindrances . . . . . J. H. Garrison, A. M.

No minister's library is complete without this book. It contains the bases for one hundred sermons on first principles.

BIBLE SCHOOL TEACHERS, and all who are desirous of thoroughly knowing the things we most surely believe, will find this book indispensable.

Figures that Speak.

Some figures of great meaning have been made public by Dr. A. C. Dixon, pastor of the Moody Church, Chicago, who has been accustomed to give relief in the winter months to those needing it and applying for it. During February and March one meal was given to every man who came at 6:45 a. m. and remained to a gospel service immediately following. The following tabulation is the result of the record kept:

Number of days men were fed	59
Total breakfasts provided	58,500
Lowest number men present any one morning (first day)	62
Highest number present	1,400
Average number per day	990
Total loaves of bread consumed	53,882
Average loaf per man each meal (about)	1
Total cups of coffee drank	240,370
Average cups per man each meal (about)	4
Gallons of milk used (in coffee)	1,110
Pounds of sugar used (in coffee)	2,059
Pounds of butter (for bread)	3,074
Total expense for the 58,500 breakfasts (about)	$22,500
Percentage of men American born (about)	40
Percentage of men foreign born (about)	60
Total nationalities represented	25
Percentage of men reared in church (nearly)	40
Percentage of men reared outside the church (about)	60
Percentage reared in Protestant churches	5
Percentage reared as Catholics	35
Percentage who have been habitual church-goers	10
Percentage reared in the country	10
Percentage reared in the city	90
Total number of gospel tracts given out during the 59 days (about)	50,000
Total number conversions in the after-meetings	827

We draw special attention to the relative numbers of Protestants and Catholics. The majority of those fed were foreign born, while it may reasonably be assumed that of those American born the majority are of foreign born parents. Nearly forty per cent of those helped had been reared in the church. But with twenty-five nationalities, and thirty-five per cent reared as Catholics, leaving only five per cent Protestants, we have here a striking commentary on the value of religious training as a power in the matter of self-support.

Abolish Celibate Priests.

There are many good Catholics all over the world who do not believe in a celibate priesthood. They know well that this has brought more reproach upon their church than any other cause since the Dark Ages. We are not, therefore, surprised to learn that petitions are being circulated through Bavarian Germany—a country which is overwhelmingly Catholic—asking the Pope to modify the rule of celibacy for Roman priests. The petition is receiving the support of prominent people in the church. The Greek Church is naturally pointed to as an example by advocates of the change, who claim that the innovation will not in any sense demoralize the relation of the priests to the church. We do not think that the Greek priesthood has any too high sense of moral living, and would not use the Greek Church for purposes of argument. It should be noted that in Russia the parish priests of the orthodox communion are expected to marry before they are assigned to their charges. The fact, however, that no kind of an objection has been started is the significant one. What will come of it, however, is a question that will, perhaps, long remain in doubt.

Mormon Importations.

An investigation has been begun with regard to Mormon converts, who are being brought from Europe. Much of the numerical strength of the Mormon church, it appears, has been gained by the acquisition of these aliens. Mormon emissaries are scattered throughout the countries of Europe, and they have so painted the glories of Utah that they have had seemingly little trouble in deluding many people. But the immigration authorities have raised some questions. A number of young women just arrived at Boston are being held with a view to their being returned to their former homes, if it can be shown that Mormon elders paid their steamship and railroad transportation. It appears that most of these Mormon converts have but little money, so that if they should be dissatisfied with Mormon conditions they might easily become a public charge. This may mean a complete revolution of the situation in Utah, and will develop the fact, should there be any prohibition of the continued importations, as to whether the Mormon propaganda is a missionary one, or for the purpose of recruiting homes that will no longer be supplied by women of American birth.

Catholics and the Law.

One of the most difficult situations the honorable citizen has to face is having on the statute book an enactment which is part of the program of Christianity, and finding that the churches are not only not upholding the law, but actually disobeying it. This is the condition of things in Missouri and many other states to-day. Here there is a wide rent between Protestantism and Catholicism on the subject of games of chance. It is the duty of any police officer in the city of St. Louis, for instance, to enter any saloon, store or other place where there is betting or even raffling, and stop it and arrest those participating; yet Catholic churches not only hold, and publicly advertise progressive euchre parties "for the benefit of the church," but he who attends their bazars and lawn fetes can hardly buy outright a single article. Everything is given up to the grab bag, the raffle and the chance that is nothing more than the toss of the dice. All over the country this seems to be the policy of the Roman Church. While the state is trying to put down the gambling mania, this church lives by it. Any effort to prosecute a church raising money by such means would at once lead to a cry on the part of officials of religious intolerance. But we wonder why church people shall not obey the law of the land as well as thugs and professional gamblers.

Politics.

The political campaign has begun in earnest, and its literature is being circulated. Some of the candidates are making speeches, and some of the "big guns" of the parties have taken the stump. The Vermont election has been held. It gave a Republican majority of more than the necessary amount to satisfy the adherents of that party that the country will follow suit. We are not superstitious, so are not prepared to believe that necessarily what happens in Vermont is an index of what will happen throughout the country. It is a singular fact, however, that from the days of the Hayes-Tilden campaign in 1876 it has been the unvarying rule that a Republican plurality of more than 25,000 in the gubernatorial election in Vermont in the presidential year has been followed by a Republican success in a decisive number of the doubtful states, while a drop in the Republican plurality below the 25,000 mark has been a precursor of a swing of the doubtful states to the Democracy. Thus Vermont has come to be called a barometer of politics. This, it seems to us, will be a very good year to test the theory as to the value of such a barometer.

Christ and the Civil Code.

Most decisions of the courts are supposedly according to statute law. Occasionally the Sermon on the Mount is the basis of a decision where it may not underlie the principles of the law itself. There has just occurred a case where a judge made a public acknowledgment of his belief in the greatest of all sermons. Judge Powell, of the Georgia Court of Appeals, had before him the case of a real estate agent who sued for his commission. He had agreed with a woman to sell her property, but afterward made a second agreement with other parties to act for them in securing better terms than she offered. The judge was convinced that the agent had not dealt fairly with the woman, and here appears part of his finding:

"It is recorded of him 'who spake as never man spoke' that, 'seeing the multitudes he went up into a mountain, and when he was set his disciples came unto him; and he opened his mouth and taught them, saying: . . . No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other.' So also, is our law. Civil Code 1895, Sections 3010, 3011, 3014, 1018. Whoso, having undertaken the service of his master, counsels with another and agrees also to serve him in those same things wherewith he has been trusted, can not claim the reward promised by his master unless he makes it plain that he has not acted privily, but that his master was consenting thereto."

Editorial

"Positive Preaching and the Modern Mind."*

This has been one of the chief books of our summer reading. It is a book to be studied, rather than merely read. It contains strong meat for intelligent, thoughtful believers, rather than milk for children. It is written for preachers, being delivered originally to theological students, but anyone capable of understanding it can not fail to be profited by it. No review of the book which our space would permit would do it justice. Our purpose is simply to characterize it in such a way as to induce a large number of our ministers to read it.

The first and most characteristic note of the book is its virility. The author is a thinker of a robust, manly type, and expresses himself, for the most part, in vigorous English. True, there are obscure passages where a second or third reading is necessary to get the thought, and he hopes that his readers are people, "who do not grudge stopping the carriage to examine a mysterious cave, or to consider a great prospect." The reader will find not only such caves, but the "great prospects" as well. Take the following as an instance of the latter. He is speaking of the Bible, and has referred to the context:

"When I speak of Biblical context I am not thinking of the mere textual scale. I mean the context of the whole spiritual order in which the Bible is imbedded. * * * What is true of a text from the Bible is truer still of the whole Bible as a text. It can be truly and fruitfully studied only in its moral context of history. * * * There is such a thing as the Bible's evangelical context, its organic moral relevancy to the conscience of Humanity, and I mean that. I mean its function in the actual moral conition of the total perennial soul, in the great tissue and issue of human destiny. * * * I speak of the moral context of the Bible as a whole in the race's conscience—the human sin which the Holy Savior casts into the deeper shade, the lostness revealed by the Gospel that finds." (pp. 30, 31.)

Another feature of the book which commends it to us as a book for the times is its robust, vigorous faith in Christ, in his atonement; in a word, in the Gosepl, which he actually believes to be the only power to save the world. No philosophy, or science, or criticism can judge Christ and his gospel. These are to judge everything else. It is this undaunted faith, accompanied with the hearty acceptance of all that science and philosophy and criticism have contributed to the knowledge of the world and of the Bible, that gives the book something of its uniqueness. Too often we have learning and faith divorced, or if there be a hearty accentuation of the gospel it is accompanied with an indiscriminate warfare against modern learning; or, if the latter be emphasized, then the gospel is thrown into the shade. What the times demand is the union of the highest learning with the staunchest faith in the great certainties of our religion. Touching the matter of Biblical criticism, the author says: "It is the preacher's duty, in most cases, to touch questions of Biblical criticism only in so far as it affects the history of revelation, positive gospel. The structure of the Bible may be discussed in the pulpit only in so far as it affects the history of revelation, and not merely of religion. The popular religion of Israel is one thing, and the divine revelation that gradually emerged through it and subdued it is another. * * * The minister's conscience is not scientific, but pastoral. For this purpose he must often exercise a discreet reserve as to scientific truth in the interest of higher truth, or truth on the whole."

Our author magnifies Christ, the conscience, and the moral experience of redemption from sin. He hits Titanic blows against shams, pretenses and hypocrisies of all kinds. "The religious life," he says, "is the most dangerous of all. There are so many temptations to unreality in it. The bane of much sanctity is its unreality. I do not mean its insincerity so much as its lack of contact with world-reality, moral, historic reality." The preacher, he argues, is not exempt from these temptations. "He is a dealer in words; and it is very hard to keep them full of the Spirit, and yet to keep himself their master."

The author finds what he thinks is an extreme emphasis, in our day, on the love and fatherly character of God, and he emphasizes another side of the divine nature which he thinks needs stress in our day. No doubt the Fatherhood of God, like every other great truth, has been abused; but it is too great a truth, and too full of vast meaning, for us to allow ourselves to be prejudiced against it because of the abuses to which it has been subjected. The author seems to us to err, sometimes, in this direction. Hence, he accentuates God's holiness more than his love. "The ethics of love," he says, "has more effect on those who are in the church than of the world. It moves chiefly the already well-disposed. It is a Gospel for the sensitive. And it lacks the note of authority which is the modern world's chief need, and which is heard in its power, not in the heart, but conscience. Authority's seat and source is not God's love, but God's Holiness." What the author means, of course, is that God's love is holy love, and that is a fact which should never be lost sight of. But it is love nevertheless.

The author's distinction between primary and secondary theology, which is practically the same as that which we make between faith and opinion, is important. It is theology in its primary sense which the author magnifies. "The most present and real fact of our Christian faith is the fact accessible to faith alone. It is the fact that Christ has brought us God and destroyed our guilt. You do not yet know the inner Christ who are but his lovers and friends. You need to have been his patients, and owe Him your life. That is Christianity. A church without that experience as its center is not Christian."

We should like to quote further from this thoughtful work, but our purpose is only to quote enough to whet the reader's appetite for the book itself. From a few of the author's statements we dissent, but on the whole we heartily commend it, especially to preachers whose education and training are sufficient to enable them to follow its line of thought. What we need to-day is greater confidence in the impregnability of the Gospel—a confidence born out of the experience of what it has done for us, and our knowledge of what it has done for others. On that basis we can rest secure, while all our critical problems are being solved.

The Natural and the Supernatural.

We use terms to define things, and yet we do not understand the things we aim to define. For convenience we use the terms natural and supernatural to designate certain spheres which we assume are divided from each other by definite boundary lines. But when we come to understand the whole territory involved, we shall probably find out that one of these is only a higher reach than the other, and that they are practically co-ordinates, and consequently are in no sense opposed to each other. But no one can assume with certainty that this is the case. At present we must deal with the facts as we understand them, and certainly no well-informed person will dogmatize about a matter so entirely beyond our comprehension. That the Bible contains accounts of things that took place outside of the boundaries of what we call the natural, can not be doubted by anyone who is at all reasonable in his investigation of facts. No matter how these things may be explained, they evidently do not come within the ordinary sphere of phenomena, and are, therefore, regarded as supernatural or miraculous. This much, we think, must be conceded by all, no matter what use we may make of the fact.

Is there any way to meet the difficulty which seems to be in the minds of some with respect to what have been called the miracles of the Bible? We have recently been told that some of the miracles of the Old Testament are really fiction and, therefore, never actually took place. Now, it would be interesting if those who make this contention would tell us just how they are able to determine, with any certainty, that these supposed miracles are purely fiction. How do these gentlemen know that these miracles are fiction? We readily grant that it is possible to believe in these things as miracles, but to declare that they are fiction is assuming entirely too much. Furthermore, there is no need to take any such position, and especially as no one can tell with absolute certainty that even the most improbable statements are simply fiction; for when the supernatural element is once conceded, then there certainly need be no difficulty about the possibility of any of the cases under consideration. Indeed, the whole question sums up as follows: Must God be reckoned in the phenomena of the Bible? If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, then surely none need stumble at any of the miracles of either the Old Testament or the New. If God could create this universe, he surely could perform any miracle that is recorded in the Bible. We need not discuss the question as to whether the whale swallowed Jonah or not, but undoubtedly there is nothing in this reported miracle comparable with the resurrection of the dead. The former might be explained much more readily according to the laws of nature, as we understand them, than the latter. But those who believe in a Living Christ to-day admit, without question, his resurrection from the dead. The whole matter, therefore, resolves itself into the question as to whether we must rule out the supernatural altogether, or accept the miracles of the Bible as possible, if not even probable. Where must we draw the line if we are to decide which miracles are possible and which not? "With God all things are possible." We dare not limit his power as regards phenomena, either in nature or in grace, except where he himself has distinctly limited this power.

In what has been said we do not wish it implied that there is no difference in the miracles of the Bible, and that they are not, therefore, to be judged according to conditions surrounding them. We think it is altogether proper to test these miracles by what we know of God's method of working; at the same time we have no right to decide absolutely with respect to any of them on this ground alone. Our knowledge of God's ways of working is extremely limited, and this is an important factor in the case. We certainly can not make our knowledge in this respect an unalterable rule by which to determine what is miracle and what is not. It has already been admitted that some of these miracles may come much nearer what we understand by the boundary line between the natural and the supernatural than others do; and, furthermore, it is freely admitted that some of the supposed miracles of the Bible may be already in the sphere of the natural when we come to thoroughly understand them. But our position is, that when once the supernatural is conceded, then it is neither wisdom nor religion to reject any miracle on the ground that it is impossible. Really, if we must wait on science to determine the miracles of the Bible for us, it would seem that Paul's affirmation that "we walk by faith and not by sight" is no longer important. In all this matter there is great danger that we will magnify the intellect and minimize the heart-life. At the same time we must guard against unnecessarily antagonizing science. It is our firm conviction that there can be no conflict between religion and science when both of these are understood and co-ordinated as they should be. W. T. M.

Notes and Comments

In another place will be found an important communication from W. H. Hanna, one of our missionaries in the Philippines, dealing with the question of religious liberty in those islands. It was, perhaps, to be expected, considering the past history of those islands under the dominion of Spain, that there would be some friction in carrying out the principles of religious liberty as they are recognized in this country. We have a right to expect, however, from our own government officials in those islands that they will bring their official influence to bear in behalf of principles which we hold to be so vital to the welfare of our own country. No complaint is made by our correspondent that the teachers sent out to the Philippines from this country are not allowed to teach Protestantism in their schools. That is not expected here nor there. The ground of complaint is that these teachers, and other employes of the government, in their individual capacities, are not allowed to exercise the same liberty in matters of religion in connection with Protestant churches, that Catholic teachers and officials are freely permitted to exercise in their churches. This seems to us a discrimination that ought not to exist, and one that if permitted to exist will grow more determined until it claims, as a right, that which may be permitted now as a temporary expedient. We shall call the attention of the proper officials in this country to this reported abuse, and shall hope that some influence will be brought to bear to correct it. We have failed to give to the Filipinos the best that this country has to bestow upon them, unless we inculcate and enforce those principles of toleration and religious liberty which have proved so inestimable a boon to the United States.

Our interesting and erratic contemporary, "The Word and Way," of Kansas City, classifies Baptists in three divisions viz.: "The conservatives, reactionaries, and the radicals." What it calls the conservative element "includes a good sound majority of the denomination." In that class it pins its hope for the future of the denomination. "They are the conservators of essential and time-honored Baptist doctrine and practice." They, also, "stand for progress and denominational integrity." The "reactionary" is the Baptist that "has balked on missionary methods," and is "hampered by an unfortunate kink. But he has convictions for which he would fight and die." The radical Baptist he characterizes as one who has "made shipwreck of his denominational faith. He is a denatured Baptist, a frayed and faded Baptist fabric. He is indifferent to church relations and regards the ordinances as matters of small consequence. In fact, he does not propose to bother about churches and ordinances and doctrine."

From what we know of Baptists, liberal and conservative, we should say that the characterization of the former, as given above, is quite extreme. There are very few Baptists, we imagine, who would endorse the characterization as fairly describing their attitude. These three classes, however, exist in more or less marked degree in all religious bodies. We should characterize them, however, a little differently. There is, first of all, the great conservative body of members who stand for the essential principles of the body and the essential principles of the faith, but who believe in progress and adaptation of the gospel to the changing condition of the world. Besides these there are two radical parties—the radically conservative and the radically progressive. The one tends to division by refusing to go forward; the other by going too fast, or in the wrong direction. The one shuts its eyes to the light, the other often follows false lights which it mistakes for the true light. The one prefers the old to the new, even if the new be better; the other prefers the new to the old, even though the old be the better. The one pulls back hardest going up hill, the other pulls hardest going down hill, or along a doubtful way. Meanwhile the great conservative body which keeps in the middle of the road has to pull the radically conservative up hill and hold the radically progressive in check.

But the strangest thing about "The Word and Way's" characterization of the Baptists is that it charges the "liberals" with the heresy of favoring Christian union! "They are the liberals among us who are responsible for the union agitation. Union of Baptists with other religious bodies has been discussed in some of our missionary organizations, and committes have been appointed to confer with committees from other denominations. Some of our Baptist missionaries on foreign fields have been strongly advocating union in foreign mission work. This union agitation both indicates and aggravates a condition which has in it the promise of denominational cleavage." This language clearly indicates that our Kansas City contemporary belongs to the radically conservative party of Baptists. It would prefer division among Baptists to union with other Christians holding to the same essential principles which have made the Baptists the strong religious body that they are. What shall be said of a type of denominationalism in the twentieth century that regards all efforts for the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples as schismatical and injurious? We are glad to believe that the future of Baptists does not lie with those representing that view. And yet, while saying this, we believe that union between Baptists and Disciples, and between any other bodies of Christians, is a thing that must grow. It can not be manufactured to order.

The same journal, quoted from above, quotes, with approval, the argument of "The Western Recorder," which quotes a paragraph from "The Philadelphia Confession of Faith," to condemn what is known as "alien immersion." Both papers accept the principle that if the "Philadelphia Confession of Faith" condemns accepting any other baptism than that which has been administered by Baptists, that is sufficient reason why Baptists of to-day should refuse such baptism! And yet we often see and hear, in declarations of Baptist principles, that their only creed is the New Testament. Both these papers, we should say, are radicals, steadfastly opposing the light and spirit of the age in which they live.

Current Religious Thought

"The palpable fact that numerically the populations of our great cities are not American, but foreign, is portentous. In moral standards and in religious predilections they are un-American. These are gathered from all parts of the earth, representing almost every known form of religious belief, of superstition and skepticism, and are merged in a vast unclassified mass of citizenship. The momentous task before the Church of Christ in America is the evangelization of the alien, spiritually benighted population at our doors, and adopted members of our national household."—Central Presbyterian.

"We conceive that it would be better if our ministers, instead of saying so deferentially and apologetically from the pulpit, "Shall we sing No. ——?" or, "Shall we now join in reading responsively Psalm ——?" would just make the announcement in straightforward, manly, positive style, so that there could be no doubt about it, and so that the worshipers would know that they were in the seat of authority, "Let us sing No. ——," and, "We will read responsively Psalm ——."—Western Christian Advocate.

"The question of right and wrong, truth and error, is not one of majorities. I dislike to hear a man say, 'All intelligent persons agree with me.' Outside of mathematical demonstration there is no absolute certainty. In moral proof the contrary is always conceivable. 'Probability is the guide of life.' It is well not to be overawed by numbers. The right is often with one man. One Elijah against the four hundred prophets of Baal. One Athanasius against the world. One Luther against the whole college of cardinals."—John Woods, in "Herald and Presbyter."

"If the preaching of the olden time was overstern at times too much of the preaching of the present day is ridiculously light and trifling. Religion may formerly have been made needlessly hard, but nowadays many teachers make it perilously soft and silly. Stalwart character can be created only by that type of Christian training which educates men to fear God, and then fear nothing else besides. Men do not need coddling, but conversion, and conversion to be thorough must cause the man to stand up, with moral backbone, against all the winds that blow and all oppositions of ungodly men."—New York Observer.

"Paradise is the believing in it," says the Rev. James L. Hill, in the "Christian Endeavor World," and this is the way he illustrates his motto:

"A man was seen hurrying along over the frozen ground in the direction of the church. An acquaintance called to him, 'Where are you going?'

"'To the parish meeting.'

"'What is to be done?'

"'I don't know.'

"'Then what are you going for?'

"'I'm going to oppose 'em.'

"He belonged to the opposition. He did not propose anything, nor believe in anything, nor help to advance the business. His whole object in life was to combat those that did.

"Such a man is usually unhappy. Take two typical men. One has the soul to say, 'I'm for it.' The attitude natural to the other is 'I'm agin it.' Nothing so symbolizes the wine of life as to have a good worthy, distinct object, of which one can with all self abandonment say, 'I'm for it.' Paradise is the believing in it.

"A man's success in life, more than upon anything else, depends on what he allies himself with. From his identification with some high object comes not only a good result, but also his chief satisfaction. Paradise is the believing in it.

"There are many victims of the Doubting Folly. Some men keep the question raised in their own minds as to whether they have accepted the right position or profession. This impairs energy and concentration and pleasure. When a person faces his work, paradise is the believing in it. There is worldly wisdom, even, in the inspired advice, 'Forget thine own people, and thy father's house.' If the Gentile princess has given her hand and heart, as there is no happiness in a divided mind, let her go over heartily to the new alliance. Do not adopt a calling in which you have no enthusiasm; but, having said, 'That's the course for me,' then stand by your choice. Paradise is the believing in it."

A few weeks ago we printed in these columns an account of Dr. Grenfell's wonderful escape. The "Interior" has this to say about what the miracle was:

"In a more detailed account of his adventure on an ice cake off the Labrador coast, Dr. Grenfell explains the nature of that 'miracle' to which, in his letter to Mr. W. R. Moody, he said he owed his rescue. It was a change of wind just after midnight of his long night at sea. The off-shore wind which broke up the ice and sent him afloat, had all day and half the night been driving him out into the open ocean. Had it blown so till morning, he would have been far beyond any possibility of rescue. But it dropped to a dead calm, and so not only was the doctor saved from going out of reach of land, but the sea was found smooth enough at daybreak for the rescue boat to reach him with little difficulty. Dr. Grenfell writes with characteristic simplicity: 'I could expect, short of a miracle, nothing but death out there. Somehow one scarcely felt justified in praying for a miracle, but we have learned down here to pray for things we want, and anyhow just at that moment the miracle occurred. The wind fell off suddenly.' To be sure, the Labrador wind often falls off suddenly when it does nobody any discernable good. But what happens in the universe, as one might say, vagrantly, does not hinder a man's faith if the thing he needs happens in the moment of his necessity. This is all the miracle anybody can want anywhere—not a diversion of nature's ordinary course, but a use of nature's ordinary course for his advantage. This is the nearest and plainest demonstration of the immanent presence of a personal God who is 'keeping watch above his own;' and after a man has had one such experience in life he is beguiled no longer with pantheistic notions of a 'great impersonal Force' that is deaf to prayer and empty of will. It is another item in Dr. Grenfell's record of providence that on the day he went adrift there were four sealers cutting up seals on the shore not far from where he broke through the ice. It was so unusual for any human being to be in that vicinity at that time of year, that the doctor had no hope whatever that he would be seen, but one of these men did see him just before darkness fell, and the quartet spent all that night spreading the news of his peril along the coast. By daylight a crew of the strongest oarsmen to be found on the entire shore had been gathered for the rescue, and lookouts were stationed on every headland to scan the sea for the beloved missionary and his ice craft Soon after sunrise he was sighted waving his improvised flag of distress—his only shirt tied to a staff made of the legs of his dead dogs—and soon as possible the strong-muscled crew of fishermen were driving their boat through the tumbling ice chunks to save the life of their heroic friend."

The life of every man is a diary in which he means to write one story, and writes another; and his humblest hour is when he compares the volume as it is with what he vowed to make it.—J. M. Barrie.

Mr. Taft at one time was not enthusiastic about missions, but he has revised his opinion. The following words of his are being reproduced from a phonograph:

"I have known a good many people who were opposed to foreign missions. I have known a good many regular attendants at church—consistent members—that religiously, if you choose to use that term, refused to contribute to foreign missions. I confess that there was a time when I was enjoying a snug provincialism that I hope has left me now when I rather sympathized with that view.

"Until I went to the Orient, until there was thrust upon me the responsibilities with reference to the extension of civilization in those far-distant lands, I did not realize the immense importance of foreign missions.

"The truth is, we have got to wake up in this country. We are not all there is in the world. There are lots besides us, and there are lots of people besides us that are entitled to our effort, to our money and to our sacrifice to help them on in the world.

"No man can study the movement of modern civilization from an impartial standpoint and not realize that Christianity and the spread of Christianity are the only basis for hope of modern civilization in the growth of popular self-government. The spirit of Christianity is pure democracy. It is the equality of man before God, the equality of man before the law, which is, as I understand it, the most God-like manifestation that man has been able to make.

"I speak not of foreign missions from a purely religious standpoint. That has been and will be done. I speak of them from the standpoint of political governmental advancement, the advancement of modern civilization, and I think I have had some opportunity to know how dependent we are on the spread of Christianity for any hope we may have of uplifting the peoples whom Providence has thrust upon us for our guidance.

"It is said that there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States that authorizes national altruism of that sort. Well, of course, there is not; but there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States that forbids it. What there is in the Constitution of the United States is a breathing spirit that we are a nation with all the responsibilities that any nation ever had, and therefore when it becomes the Christian duty of a nation to assist another nation, the Constitution authorizes it, because it is part of national well-being."

"We understand that the adherents of one of the political parties in the coming election have put some campaign buttons on sale at one dollar each, containing the expression, 'I gave my dollar; did you?' They gave a dollar to help in the election of a candidate to an earthly office. But there are many church members who have not given their dollar for home missions. If the former do it to secure an earthly crown, shall we not do more for the heavenly and the incorruptible?"—Southern Presbyterian.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Or, Pentwater Musings.

Since our last musings August has given place to September, and autumn is here. There was no mistaking the change in this latitude. September came in with a stiff north wind and a rolling sea. All night the heavy artillery of the lake was heard resounding along the beach, and a deeper note was struck in this autumnal anthem than we had heard before during the present season. The new syllable of the present month seemed to be emphasized in every wave that broke upon the shore. There is a rhythm in nature, as in the stateliest of music. When the season is to change, the wind, the waves, the clouds, the foliage on the trees, the flowers that bloom by the wayside, all seem to proclaim it in a universal chorus. Nor is man unresponsive to these changing seasons. As there was something in the beginning of the summer that made him hear "the call of the wild," so with these autumnal signs before his eyes and resounding in his ears, he hears the call of the city, and of his business through which he is seeking to promote human welfare. As we have been compelled to lie awake many hours of the night during the past week, listening to the deep monotone of the waves, and the sighing winds, we seemed to be hearing the lamentations and sobs and moans of our poor, sin-cursed humanity. What a vast amount of it there is in the world! Who does not feel it to be his highest duty and his greatest privilege to assuage human sorrow and suffering, and bring healing and comfort to those in distress, has not learned of Christ. There are reformers who see no connection between sin and suffering, and who feel that they can ignore the message of the gospel in extending bodily relief to men. But this is as superficial as to ignore man's physical needs while seeking to benefit him spiritually. Christ never neglected his ministry to the body for that to the soul. Nor must we.

This will be the last of our Pentwater Musings for the rest of the season. For ten weeks we have dwelt here by the lakeside and performed our daily tasks with not less regularity, and we trust with not less efficiency, and surely with a great deal more comfort than we could have performed them in our city office. It has, in some respects, been a summer of unusual anxieties, in which we have brooded much over problems which have to do with our future welfare as a religious movement. We have been glad of this opportunity of quiet and of silence, where, amid these sublime expressions of nature, we might brood over these great interests of the kingdom of God. We have reached a point in life which we presume every man who is seeking to serve his fellow-men reaches, sooner or later, when the things that relate personally to one's self and his ease and comfort, or financial advantage, occupy a very small amount of his thought. His chief concern is the successful on-going in the coming years of the cause he loves, and which he believes is vitally related to human welfare, and to the glory of God. We have been planning, among other things, how we can make "The Christian-Evangelist," during the coming year, serve our Centennial aims, and those great co-operative interests which are alike our glory and our power for good. Our readers will know the result of this brooding and planning later on. Jesus was straitened until his mission of suffering and teaching had been accomplished. As one approaches the limits of his active life, he shares something of that feeling if he have something of Christ's spirit. His one concern is how he may best accomplish the work which God has given him to do, and so fulfill his mission and ministry that he may receive his Lord's approval. What we are in character and what we do out of love for God and humanity—only this will abide.

We had planned this closing week at the Park for a quiet, restful time, but it was decreed otherwise. We have been doing our writing all week between paroxysms of pain caused by an acute inflammation of the parotid gland. For a while the doctor diagnosed the case as mumps, although we have not heard of a case here during the summer; but he has about agreed with our own diagnosis, that it proceeds from the teeth. That does not make it any the less painful, but it relieves one of the charge of having to suffer in age for the neglect of one's youth. Mumps is something that should be attended to, like religion, "in the days of thy youth," and "before the evil days come on." If this is a delayed case of mumps instead of a different kind of parotitis, to use the doctor's phrase, it adds force to the exhortation, for we have seldom, if ever, passed through so painful an experience as that during the past week, and we are still in the midst of it at this writing. Why should we have nerves that make us so susceptible to the keenest pain? No doubt, it is because by these same nerves we enjoy a very much larger amount of pleasure and profit. The mission of pain has been one of the dark problems of the world, and has a new starting point at the bedside of every sufferer. Most of us have come to see that it is a beneficent provision of God's mercy, and that we are morally and intellectually better because of the ministry of pain and suffering. While we may be able to accept this as a general truth, there will remain phases of the problem that must wait for their final solution until all life's riddles are solved. "We walk by faith, not by sight."

Since the foregoing paragraph was dictated the physician has been in, and, after an examination, has decided that we should hasten our return to St. Louis, going to-morrow, if possible, instead of Monday. This seems like an almost impossible task, but the neighbors have been in and promised to lend what assistance they could in helping us off, and so we shall undertake it. It only remains, therefore, for us to add a few closing words to these lakeside musings, and our literary work here will close for the season. The past week here has been a delightful one, although the hilltops, the deep shaded ravines and the lakes have called to us in vain. We hope to respond to their call another season. Among the visitors during the past week have been Mrs. S. M. Cooper and daughter, of Cincinnati, and Brother and Sister Taggart, of South Bend, Ind., who, we hope, will become permanently interested in the Park. Many letters received lead us to anticipate a larger attendance among those who read "The Christian-Evangelist" the coming year than ever before. Among the improvements made during the season is a deep cut through one of the sand dunes on the lake front, connecting one of the principal ravines and prominent roadways of the Park with the lake front. This cut has been logged up, and forms what is known at Macatawa Park as "The Golden Gate," opening up one of the finest portions of the Park for cottages. On the whole, it has been a delightful summer, and if in addition to the profit it has been to us we have been able in return to give some added pleasure to our readers, as many have been kind enough to say, we have double reason for gratitude. We have reason to say with the Psalmist:

> "Surely goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life,
> And I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever!"

And now we go hence. But the lake will sing its song at morning, noontide and evening just the same, and the sun will make his daily circuits, and ride down the glorious west in his chariot of beauty, just as he has been doing all the summer months. The trees that sentinel "The Pioneer" and its sister cottages, will sing their requiem through autumn and wintry days until flowers shall bloom again, and springtime come again, and it shall be summer time, by and by. Other eyes may see these beauties, and other ears may hear these messages, but we shall be looking upon other scenes and listening to other voices. Is it not so when we make our exit from this world? How little of the things that men cherish can they take with them, when they go hence! Every removal raises this question, but the great removal in which we exchange worlds makes it a very vital question. If we have faith and hope and love; if we have trust in God, and kindness toward our fellow-men; if through God's grace we have been forgiven, and have been able to form characters that meet his approval—these things we can take with us, and all else we leave behind. Sometimes we see freight cars marked "Perishable Goods." How much of the luggage we are carrying along with us and worrying about, is "perishable goods," that perishes with the using! We become attached to places as well as persons. The associations of these lakes and wooded hills and leafy glens have been very pleasant. They have helped us to a nobler thought of God, and to a deeper charity for our fellowmen. And so, dear companions, material though you be, you have come into our hours of meditation with power to soothe and comfort, and we bid you, for the present at least, an affectionate goodbye.

Our Hymns and Our Faith---A Reverie

By May Griggs Van Voorhis

It was twilight and the baby was ready for rest. His brown, curly head nodded sleepily on my shoulder, and one little fat hand lay caressingly against my cheek. How restful it was after a busy day to hold that precious burden in my arms and to feel myself refreshed and strengthened by the touch of his young, sweet life! As I rocked to and fro in the twilight, wandering vaguely from one familiar song to another, by some chance I began to murmur over that old, half-forgotten hymn, "In the sweet bye and bye," and, brought to life all at once by the old-time strains, there flashed upon me a vision of another twilight long ago, when a little brown-eyed girl, who used to be myself, sat looking toward the western window where the mother—my mother—sat rocking the baby, the last light of day shining like a halo on her sunny hair. How she lingered over the simple words as if she loved them, and how natural it seemed as she sang, to look forward to our heavenly home and feel it very near! And I can remembering wondering, in my childish fancy, whether the angels would be more beautiful than my mother.

But when before had one of those dear little heads which I love so well nodded on my shoulder to the tune of "The Sweet Bye and Bye"? I had sung them so many familiar hymns of to-day, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," "Work, for the Night Is Coming," "Moment by Moment," "There Is Sunshine in My Soul," but among them all was there one so filled with the thought of "the home over there" as the hymns our mothers sang in their girlhood days, and crooned to us in our babyhood? "There Is a Happy Land, Far, Far Away," "I Will Sing You a Song of a Beautiful Land," "Around the Throne of God in Heaven," "There Is a Land of Pure Delight," and so many that will throng upon us if we stop to think of them. Why do we not compose and sing more of such songs to-day? Can it be that the thought of heaven is not so present with us as it was with our fathers?

We of to-day have learned, perhaps as never before, the wondrous value of this life of ours, and to feel the bliss of a walk with Jesus here and now. We love to quote the words of our Savior, "I came that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly"; and we say again and again, "this present life is all we have to deal with now; let us be sure that we are living right to-day, and to-morrow will take care of itself." Right we are to hold this earth life sacred; and God pity the man who constantly looks toward the future and neglects the task that lies nearest! But in thus exalting the present and passing over the life beyond, is there not danger that we forget our earthly limitations until they burst upon us with a blast that will leave us benumbed and embittered? Beautiful indeed is the life we are living, made sacred by its loving companionships, and by the daily walk with our dear Lord; but O, it is so short, so uncertain, so beset with suffering, sin and disappointment! Do we not constantly need to look "unto the hills" and catch a glimpse of the great life beyond that completes this one and sets it right? It will not make to-day less beautiful, but rather more so, when we add to it the fuller richness of to-morrow. During the last few months that I spent in my girlhood home before my wedding day, I seemed to feel a new tenderness for father and mother, a new appreciation for all they had done for me, a keener love for the old home, and a longing to do all in my power to make it happy while I should be a part of it. But, strange girl would I have been, had I not dreamed often and often of that home that was to be, bright with love and mutual helpfulness.

And so we shall gain new strength and courage for to-day as we ponder that glorious life beyond, not vague and far away, but real and sure as the promises of God.

But while I was thinking of all these things baby had fallen asleep. I could feel his soft breathing upon my neck, the pressure of his cheek against my own. From without came the voices of the rest of my little flock—the boy's happy shout, the girl's rippling laughter and the merry prattle of the little two-year-old. What a joyous, blessed life it is, and how truly the heart may sing, "There is sunshine in my soul to-day." And yet—and yet, the uncertainty of it all! What if to-morrow, next week, next month, I should miss this precious burden from my arms, or should listen in vain for one of the merry voices that I love so well! Thank God that though this life fail, though loving ties are severed and bright hopes fade, we still may sing,

"In the sweet bye and bye,
We shall meet on that beautiful shore."

Religious Liberty in the Philippines

By W. H. Hanna

The time has arrived in which we ought to investigate whether there is religious liberty in the Philippine Islands, how much of it there is, and for whom it exists.

The American government, on its entrance into the islands, found in the Spanish penal code this section: "Those who shall publicly perform acts of propaganda, preaching or other ceremonies which are not those of the religion of the state, shall incur the penalty of prison correctional in its minimum degree." The treaty of Paris nullified absolutely this intolerant, unchristian provision. Subsequent legislation made religious propaganda and the holding of property by religious societies free alike to all under the sun.

The fact that the population of the new possessions is largely Roman Catholic, and that there is a large vote of that persuasion in the United States, has been kept well in mind by the soldier and civilian classes of Americans—employes or agents of the United States. Usually they have guarded their words and actions so that they might seem neutral in religion. Indeed, many of the officials have felt themselves warranted in absolutely forswearing religion and religious exercises, in order to avoid criticism from Roman Catholics and authorities. There was a time when public officials outraged the highest Christian sentiment by attending to the business of state on Sundays, thus following the Spanish method. God be praised, some few always have been faithful to their God, even though this faithfulness made them targets for criticism. In the third year of the American occupation conditions improved somewhat. Members of the commission began to attend, occasionally, church services, and some few of the lesser officials proceeded to follow their steps. In 1902, the Aglipay movement enlarged greatly, Protestantism was gaining ground, and thus the religious situation became more complex.

Mr. Taft, then governor, published a letter in order to clear the atmosphere, and set forth religious liberty and the separation of church and state. The gist of the communication is found in this extract:

"The policy of complete separation of church and state is enjoined upon those who serve under the American sovereignty. This does not mean that officers of the state, as individuals, may not attend church services and take part in religious controversies, and may not aid the churches of which they are members; but it does mean that no officer of the government has the right to use his official position, or the authority which he exercises as an official, to further the interests of the church of which he is a member as against the rights and claims of other churches to which he may be opposed in religious views."

This is American doctrine. It sounds sweet in the ears of those who have grown up in the shadow of Plymouth Rock. Mr. Taft is to be congratulated for the brave and generous utterance. Alas, this pronunciamento could be but little more than an empty sound in the Philippines, where the inhabitants had never known it before, where priests were charging the Philippines' government with being Protestant, and where heed must be paid to Roman Catholic murmurs that arose in the United States.

About the year 1902 some Christian teachers began to feel pity for the people of the islands, unshepherded and ignorant of some of the sweetest truths and experiences of the Christian religion, and became teachers in Sunday-schools. This was brought to the attention of the superintendent of education, and he laid down the following rule: "Criticisms, by teachers, of doctrines of any church, religious sect or denomination, and attempts by them to influence the pupils of any public school for or against any religion, are definitely prohibited by law." In face of the treaty of Paris, the liberty accorded public school teachers in the homeland, and the pronunciamento of Gov. Taft, some few teachers since then have persisted in the belief that the rule above cited referred only to the classroom. They have been grossly mistaken.

A circular emanating from the Bureau of Education, dated Manila, March 11, 1908, cites the rule with reference to religious teaching by government teachers, and comments thus: "The law can not be construed to mean that it was intended to regulate the conduct of the teacher in public only, and that privately, not to say secretly, the purpose of the enactment might be defeated under the shadow of his own roof with impunity; and even if it could, the teacher must not hope to escape administrative condemnation for his attempt to circumvent a law whose purpose is so plain and unequivocal. One of the most serious obstacles which the American system of education has had to encounter, and is now encountering in the Philippine Islands, is the suspicion of the native inhabitants that the school is to be used to undermine and destroy the faith of their children. That this suspicion is wholly without foundation goes without saying, but the American teacher who fails to recognize that it is a factor to be reckoned with, and to conduct himself accordingly, is a detriment to the service. . . . The First Commandment of the Insular government is: Respect all religions, war with none, favor none, and teach none. The failure to be neutral in religious matters not only seriously impairs his usefulness and efficiency as a teacher, but also hampers the administration in its work of maintaining good relations with the people of the islands, and serves to discredit its frequently announced policy of non-interference in purely religious matters.''

Enough has been cited to show that it breathes a spirit of fear and subserviency to Roman Catholic opinion, and curtails that religious liberty which Governor Taft so plainly declared is the possession of every government official. The Department of Education counts it of more value to endeavor to allay the mean, unjust suspicions of priests and the people whom they can influence, than to preserve and perpetuate the priceless American treasure of religious liberty. It must be remembered that there is an American archbishop in the Philippines. He knows the way of our public schools in America and could enlighten the poor priests and people who believe them to be destroyers intentionally of the Catholic faith. There are some American bishops who are even closer to the people. Why does not our bureau of Education ask these Americans who know our public schools to explain them to the people? The truth can not be hid. The old, world-wide Roman Catholic suspicion of, and prejudice against the public schools is being felt in the Philippines. I have not heard of a single Catholic dignitary who supports the public schools in the Philippines.

All the diligent efforts of the Educational Department to make school teachers absolute ciphers in religion have availed nothing in allaying Catholic suspicion and effort to destroy the public schools. In the last two years, a large number of parochial schools have been established, by the express command of the bishops. These schools are the express rivals of the public schools, and in many cases they have reduced the attendance on the public schools from twenty-five to seventy-five per cent. It matters not whether the district has had Roman Catholic teachers or not, or whether the provincial superintendent has been a son of Rome or a nothing in religion and a disgrace in character; the parochial schools have been established. Through the hush policy, to my thinking, all the gain of the Bureau of Education has been loss. It has lost the principle and practice of religious liberty, and has itself become the mere slave of a suspicion and an un-American fear. It has lost in the character of its teachers. Many scores of the teachers, if they had not been forced to be nothings in religion, might have remained the somethings they were in character when they arrived in the Islands. They have degenerated in character, have become drunkards, gamblers and ravagers of women. Some of the best men and women of the Philippines have been driven out of the Educational Department into office-work, into other branches of the civil service, or home. Others have lived a life of continual apology to their own souls for silence, if not for cowardice. Living under the First Commandment, if a teacher is asked in private what his faith is, how can he confess, since he dare not favor any religion? The Roman Catholics will be happily enabled to cry out against the ''godless public schools,'' since the Bible has no place in the schoolroom, and religion is not allowed the teachers. This is the position to which Papists would drive the Educational Department.

Both Catholic and non-Catholic teachers would seem to be deprived equally of liberty. Theoretically, they are; practically, they are not. In a Romanist section, the non-Catholic teacher will have religious opponents to inform on him if he is religiously active; the Roman teacher may talk religion, poison the children's minds against Protestantism, and so make himself solid with the people and the priest. No complaint will reach the Department. Although there are Catholic teachers who have circulated literature and have been otherwise active, none, to my knowledge, has been denounced; on the other hand, probably not one of the Protestant teachers who have tried to serve their God as their consciences dictated, has escaped denunciation and censure. The Catholic has all the chance in the world to let his light shine and his influence count. He can go to his church, and say by his going, to all the pupils of his school, ''Go to mass; be loyal to the priest.'' Few, to date, are the Protestant chapels into which the sympathizing teacher may enter, and so wield his influence. He would make a place in which to worship, if he had his ''liberty to serve God according to the dictates of his conscience.'' A Catholic provincial superintendent can give a ball in honor of St. Patrick, and announce the fact on his invitations. At his ball, he may serve intoxicants, and some of his teachers may imbibe too freely. No censure comes from his chief. Who believes that a Protestant teacher could publicly announce an event in honor of the birthday of Luther or Wesley or any other notable schismatic, and not hear from headquarters? In the Batanes Islands, a small group lying north of Luzon, on the walls of the public school-houses hang pictures of Our Lady of the Rosary, crucifixes, and prayers to Mary, the Mother of God. Every morning the teachers seize a large cross, place themselves at the head of their classes, and march to the Roman Catholic church to hear mass. The provincial superintendent defends this state of affairs by saying that all the people are devotees of the Roman faith. He assures me that the Director of the educational affairs of the Islands saw this, and let it pass. In a section where the people are all adherents of the Aglipayano church, does the government permit the picture of Archbishop Aglipay to hang from the walls and the teachers to usher all the pupils into a daily mass? In a section where all are Protestants, will it be permitted to adorn the walls of school-houses with likenesses of Protestant worthies, sing Protestant songs and read the Bible? Roman Catholic teachers enjoy religious liberty; Protestant teachers fret under the denial of religious liberty and equality.

As to the propagation of religion by missionaries and native evangelists, no complaint is due touching religious liberty. In scores of cases, the uninitiated native officials have endeavored to turn the clock of progress back to the Spanish days, and have tried to interfere with the free practice and teaching of religion. But the higher authorities—that is to say, the Americans—have always been true and just. In the interests of the personal exercise of religious liberty, we could have wished that some so-called Protestants had been as diligent as Catholics. I know of no act of the wife of any Protestant official that can parallel in spectacular importance that of Mrs. Wright, wife of former Governor Wright. When the Roman Catholic Church was having a procession in honor of the wooden doll that is called the Patroness of the Philippines, this woman descended from her carriage and walked for some distance in the dusty street with the crowd of devotees. Romanists made capital of this act, far and wide. It was viewed as an act of official approval. Present Governor Smith is making his exalted position count for his papistic faith. At the ceremony of the crowning of the Patroness of the Philippines and her Son (an image of Mary and Jesus), Governor Smith handled the two golden crowns and passed them to the Apostolic Delegate. This fact was emphasized and reiterated in the Catholic accounts of the event. It was deemed an official act. Governor Smith thought not of the two or more millions of Aglipayano adherents, of the two hundred thousand Protestants and adherents in the Philippines, and of the millions of Christians in the United States who abhorred this act of pagan idolatry and who suspect that he is in league with Rome to save the Philippines to the papacy. As he made a tour of inspection of the provinces, it somehow always happened that, after greeting the company of officials which came to meet him, Gov. Smith passed immediately to the Roman church, where mass was said, drawing thereby soldiers and officials into the church who were in no wise sympathetic with that way. The one or two provincial governors who had the courage to refuse to go with him to Rome's altars, deserve lasting honor.

Two things that are as sure as death may be observed: No Protestant official would be so daring as to try to parallel Governor Smith's acts, and no Catholic official can become so zealous for his religion as to lose his position or become unacceptable to the administration. On the other hand, there are wives of teachers who refuse to ally themselves with any religious work for fear they will prejudice their husbands' chances of advancement. There are officials who feel forced to hide their lights under a bushel, or to put them out altogether and to hobnob with the devil through gambling and drink, so as to be solid with the people of their province or district.

Unmistakably there is some religious liberty in our new possessions; but the American eagle brand that comprehends every soul and favors no sect or party is not operative there. It is time that the Rooseveltian doctrine of ''a square deal for every one'' be planted in the Philippines. The hour is ripe for informing Rome that she has too long forced the administration to occupy an un-American position. In sackcloth and ashes should the government repent of having hired so many hundreds of young men and women to place their souls in jeopardy by denying them the right to get all the assistance that they could out of a life of devotion and service. If the public schools can be continued only by persisting in the observance of the commandment, ''Respect all religions; war with none; favor none; teach none,'' Protestants should not rest until they have banished from every school-house and from every teacher who holds to Rome as much Romanism as Romanists have banished of Protestantism from Protestants. God hasten a better day for religious liberty in the Philippines. Until then, may he have mercy upon and aid the American teacher and the official classes.

TO THE TOILERS.

By Charles Blanchard.

'Tis only noble here to toil!
Remembering this let no man spoil
Thee of thy crown! Bear up and brave
Gethsemane, the cross, the grave,
Rejoicing! Christ hath gone ahead,
And this strong word to us hath said—
''Be of good cheer! For I have overcome
The world!'' Toil! Though thy lips be dumb,
And though thy place be where
Thy face is bound to care,
And hearts break, and worn feet bleed!—
He knows thy way, thy weariness, thy need!

A Turning Tide By William Durban

Having lived long enough to witness very many permutations and combinations, as the mathematicians say, I am prepared to see further transmutations both in the church and in the world. I notice that many intelligent observers are remarking that we have arrived at a transitional juncture. They are perfectly correct, but they forget that we have always been experiencing transitions. Young people of course do not apprehend that changes in the past have been both constant and startling, and they naturally conclude that any crisis which they confront is usually sensational. I recollect that the Oxford movement was regarded as the beginning of an apostasy which would introduce the Beast of the Apocalypse. But that monster of the menagerie of pre-millenarianism is still to appear. I remember vividly a very different phase of ecclesiastical heresy in the same Anglican sphere. I refer to the outrageous latitudinarianism of Bishop Colenso, of Natal. That quite changed the prospect. It was not the high church which seemed to be bringing in Romanism, but the broad church which was going to convert Anglicanism into surpliced and mitred atheism. Nothing of the kind happened. But after a while the Baptists of Britain were convulsed by that ugly down-grade controversy which broke the heart of the great C. H. Spurgeon. Nevertheless to-day British Baptists stand in the very front rank of orthodoxy. I am intimately acquainted with many, and scarcely know of one who is in sympathy with what is now called the new theology. In respect to this it is the Congregationalists who are mainly affected by the vagaries of a small but blatant clique, headed by one leader of undoubted ability. And so we see whirling eddies in the current of experience, but they are nothing more. The stream flows on in the main channel.

I have purposely refrained during the above observations from alluding to one of the most important of all the features of the ecclesiastical history of our age. I am shy of mentioning the higher criticism, because I have on several occasions referred to it, and I am not anxious to be mistaken for a fossilised conservative, simply because I have never been able to indorse certain extreme assumptions which have been stultified and falsified by the marvellous researches of archæologists. Professor Sayce and Professor Petrie have both complained to me that there are too many mere grammarians amongst the higher critics. These experts both declare that the pick and the shovel of the explorers in Assyria, Babylonia and Egypt have absolutely nullified some of the most boasted conclusions that seemed a few years ago to sweep the decks. Some of us have quietly waited, gladly accepting all the time every conclusion that was solidly demonstrated, but declining to accept whatever was presented in merely hypothetical form. And now another change is supervening which was certainly to be expected. It is happening in Germany. It is to the credit of Harnack that after going almost as far as Pfleiderer —that brilliant scholar whose recent death we are all lamenting—he should have recently acknowledged himself in error. He has frankly reverted to the very position with regard to the Lucan controversy which he had long been disposed to reject, and I know of nothing more convincing than his latest volume, in which he maintains that Luke was the author of the third gospel and of the Acts.

I would remind my American readers that several months ago I took opportunity to commend to them the study of a German book which had just appeared in an English translation. It was the delightful treatise by Prof. Rudolph Otto, entitled "Naturalism and Religion." That work was a real sign of a change in the trend of Teutonic theological thought. It has been followed by several masterly treatises which confirm my conviction that we are face to face with an uprising in the Fatherland of an intellectual and spiritual insurrection against that dreary negationism and that already musty neology which is really identical with what is styled the new theology in Britain. I admit that this new theology can not be absolutely to this description, because it is a compost containing some fantastic ingredients borrowed from Brahmanism, Vedantism, Buddhism, Confucianism and Socialism. But in the main it is one with the barren and repellant Socinianism which killed Presbyterianism in England in the seventeenth century.

And now I would earnestly press on the attention of my readers a little counsel. I would advise them at once to secure a new book issued from the Putnam press in the English translation from the fourth revised German edition. It contains sixteen lectures delivered in the University of Berlin by Dr. Reinhold Seeberg, professor of theology, during the winter term, 1901-2. The book is entitled "The Fundamental Proofs of the Christian Religion." I greet such a production with delight. Of course I do not imagine that every student is going to indorse every paragraph written by Dr. Seeberg. But I think there is one thing which every reader will perceive, and this is the strong change evident in opinions in learned circles in Germany. Criticism, high or low, is being shelled off, and Christ and the apostles are being called in. They are being invited back into some of those academic spheres from which they were bowed out. It is curious to watch the trouble and anxiety in which the overdogmatic Darwinians are being involved, simply because they rushed on too far in a spirit of frantic eagerness to claim that every position in Genesis was cosmically absurd. After the same manner certain critics plunged into bottomless bogs of skepticism as to the validity of scholarship amongst the contemporaries of Abraham. These same critics and their ardent young disciples are not at all pleased to be reminded of the pet theories which have been exploded.

Dr. Stalker, of Glasgow, who is both popular and learned, has just been saying that in his country the people are revolting against certain forms of the higher criticism. He declares that laymen of Scotland are beginning to see that it will lay them bound hand and foot at the mercy of the experts. He was led to protest thus because at the recent international Congregational council in Edinburgh certain speakers blundered into totally indiscriminate blessing of the higher criticism. It is a relief to turn from all such discussions to the pages of a writer like Dr. Seeberg, who takes up ground on which he is independent in his own frame of mind, and yet is largely in sympathy with Schleiermacher, Baur, Hofmann and Ritschl. He is one with Ritschl and his followers in emphasizing the reality and the practical character of the Christian religion, but he objects to the Ritschlian method of isolating theology from the other sciences, especially from metaphysics. He blames the Ritschlian school for an anti-metaphysical agnosticism and historicism; he considers their history too modern, and their thought not modern enough.

I SO UNWORTHY.

What shall I say
At the dawn of the day?
"I so unworthy of all."
What shall I say
As I pass on my way?
"I so unworthy of all."

What shall I say
As at noon I come in?
"I so unworthy of all."
What shall I say
As I toil out again?
"I so unworthy of all."

What shall I say
At the twilight repast?
"I so unworthy of all."
What shall I say
As I kneel down at last?
"I so unworthy of all."

MOTHER AND CHILD

Both Fully Nourished on Grape-Nuts.

The value of this famous food is shown in many ways, in addition to what might be expected from its chemical analysis.

Grape-Nuts food is made of whole wheat and barley, is thoroughly baked for many hours and contains all the wholesome ingredients in these cereals.

It contains also the phosphate of potash grown in the grains, which Nature uses to build up brain and nerve cells.

Young children require proportionately more of this element because the brain and nervous system of the child grows so rapidly.

A Va. mother found the value of Grape-Nuts in not only building up her own strength but in nourishing her baby at the same time. She writes:

"After my baby came I did not recover health and strength, and the doctor said I could not nurse the baby as I did not have nourishment for her, besides I was too weak.

"He said I might try a change of diet and see what that would do, and recommended Grape-Nuts food. I bought a pkg. and used it regularly. A marked change came over both baby and I.

"My baby is now four months old, is in fine condition, I am nursing her and doing all my work and never felt better in my life." There's a Reason."

"Even As He Walked" By Milo Atkinson

There is a small group of Christians of unusual piety and whole-hearted consecration, who bring their lives to the altar of the Lord and unreservedly offer themselves thereon, a sacrifice acceptable and well-pleasing to God. These walk very close to Christ, "even as he walked." These we send as foreign missionaries to the ends of the earth.

Another group of Christians, pious men they are, godly in conduct, consecrated in service, giving themselves in loving loyalty to the Master, yet with not such abandon as the other class. These we call to the ministry of the Word in the homeland, and right well do they serve.

Then there is another group, far more numerous than either or both of the other groups. For these we raise a standard not nearly so high as for the other two. We expect them, of course, to be enrolled as Christians—to have some formal connection with the church—but we allow them to give nearly all their thought and time and energy and means to the temporal affairs of this earth life, and even a large measure to worldly pleasures. These some call the laity.

But I search my Book in vain for this three-fold standard. I toil for naught when I try to support, by the authority of the Word, this varying ideal for Christian service. Not one ideal for the missionary, another for the minister and still a lower one for the "average Christian." But the same ideal for every one who claims to be a follower of Christ. "He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk even as he walked." There can be no question as to how Christ walked. He is the highest type of piety, consecration and complete surrender to the Father's will.

As a preacher, I have no right to demand of the foreign missionary a higher degree of consecration, self-surrender and self-denial than I myself am willing to practice for Christ's sake. As a member of the church you have no right to require of your minister a greater degree of devotion to the Master's cause than you yourself are willing to show. I plead not for less of consecration on the part of the missionaries. Godly lives they are and Christlike in devotion. Yet who dares to say they are more consecrated than is pleasing to Christ? Far be it from me as a minister even to hint that we, as preachers, are doing more than we ought in our daily lives. But oh, that I might speak with the voice of a trumpet, or with the music of an angel's whisper, and repeat the message of that disciple whom Jesus loved and say, we all "ought so to walk even as he walked."

Help Your Preacher By G. W. Kemper

Many a preacher has utterly failed in his work because of lack of support and sympathy and encouragement from those with whom he labors. He has a great deal of human nature in him, just like others, and appreciates kindness and sympathy as much as any one else. There are many things you can do that will encourage him in his work, and some things that will have the very opposite effect.

First of all, he ought to stand very close to you in his personal as well as his pastoral relation. If he is a little backward in this respect, try to show him by your affable manner that you are deeply interested in the success of his work, and that you regard him as your friend. Take him into your confidence, advise with him and be free to tell him your feelings, and it will not only help you, but will place him in a position where he can, no doubt, be a great blessing to you.

Do not repeat to him every little criticism and slur that you may hear concerning him and his work. He knows he is not perfect, and that he has his faults, and to tell him these things continually will only annoy him and discourage him the more in his work. But, when you hear any one speak kindly of him, tell him, for it will inspire him to do his very best. Kind words are always a helpful tonic. The beautiful sentiment expressed in the motto of the Elks will always be productive of good: "The faults of our brothers we write upon the sands; their virtues upon the tablets of love and memory."

Then always be in your place at all the public services of the church. Don't let your presence be determined by the state of the weather, but remember it is your duty to be present at these services. You are needed in the Bible school and at the midweek prayer-meeting, and your presence will be an inspiration to him in his work; for when he feels that his people are deeply interested in spiritual things and in the success of the church, he realizes that his work is not in vain.

You will also help your preacher by giving him good attention while he preaches, and you will help him still more by praying for him before you go to the house of worship. When the services seem dull to you and his sermons dry, don't blame him always for it, but remember the fault may be with you. Your physical condition may be such that you are in no condition to enter heartily into the worship. There are very few men who can preach to a listless or a prayerless congregation. If you can make him feel that you are in sympathy with him and are praying continually for hs success, it will go a long way to bring out of him all the services he is capable of rendering you.

Don't expect too much of him. Don't criticise him unnecessarily. Don't speak unkindly of him to others. Don't blame him for every little thing that goes wrong in the church. But give him your hearty support at all times, give him your encouragement, and your preacher will not only be a blessing to you, but you will be a blessing to him.

LITTLE SERMONS.

By C. F. Ladd.

Unless you consecrate your all you do not consecrate at all.

Reader, are you paying God what you owe him? Be honest, now.

Many a professed Christian is robbing God systematically. Stop, thief!

It's no use to say you "love the truth" if you are not giving to support it.

The prayer-meeting is a good place to take the spiritual temperature of the church.

Some professed Christians are more faithful to the lodge than the church. Shame!

If money could talk it might tell some rather bad stories about some church members.

The woman who can not be religious in an old wrapper will not count much for righteousness in silks and satins.

Some revivals might be of more real value to the cause of Christ if they resulted in subtractions rather than additions.

When men and women are truly converted to Christ it settles the question of church finance. God loves a cheerful giver.

Jesus says: "Let your light shine." This carries with it the obligation to get rid of whatever will hinder it from shining.

It is no wonder that some professed Christians are uneasy at the thought of meeting God, when we consider how they are living.

Some folks act mighty pious in their Sunday-go-to-meeting-attire, but what a difference when they have on their just-as-I-am-every-day clothes!

Some "churches" might well be labeled "cold storage houses."

REMAINS THE SAME

Well Brewed Postum Always Palatable.

The flavour of Postum, when boiled according to directions, is always the same—mild, distinctive, and palatable. It contains no harmful substance like caffeine, the drug in coffee, and hence may be used with benefit at all times.

"Believing that coffee was the cause of my torpid liver, sick headache and misery in many ways," writes an Ind. lady, "I quit and bought a package of Postum about a year ago.

"My husband and I have been so well pleased that we have continued to drink Postum ever since. We like the taste of Postum better than coffee, as it has always the same pleasant flavour, while coffee changes its taste with about every new combination or blend.

"Since using Postum I have had no more attacks of gall colic, the heaviness has left my chest, and the old, common, every-day headache is a thing unknown." "There's a Reason."

Our Budget

—Church Extension!

—This means more than an offering.

—It is a tocsin for winter work.

—To extend the cause of Christ in every department of church work must be our aim.

—If your church has not taken the offering for the Board of Church Extension, this should be done some time during the month, and the collection reported immediately.

—The third Sunday of the month has been designated as a fitting time for the collection in behalf of the endowment of Bethany College.

—This is a plea that should not be ignored.

—All our educators have agreed to give Bethany the right of way.

—The aim is to make this a popular subscription endowment fund, asking every church member to give one dollar.

—We are indebted to our special correspondents for their excellent reports of some of the great state conventions. Dan I. Trundle tells us of what Southern California is doing. Such enthusiasm as marks the work there should put to shame many members of our churches in the older states. Just think of 20,000 people at a state convention! That would be the proportion, says our correspondent, for Missouri as compared with the attendance at Long Beach in the ratio of membership. The convention in Oklahoma was an important one, and marks the beginning of a closer relationship in the work there. O. L. Smith gives us a very full report. The state convention of Nebraska has, also, been held, and we shall have reports of this. The Illinois state convention was held in Chicago last week, with an outside attendance of about 350. Reports and addresses were well up to former standards. Our special correspondent, J. G. Waggoner, will furnish a full report of this.

—Readers of "The Christian-Evangelist" will be glad to know that its Editor has reached St. Louis, but very sorry to learn that he came home under much distress of body. For more than a week he has had no sleep, and a slight operation was decided upon as soon as he reached St. Louis. He is easier now, and hopes that he will speedily be himself again.

—We print an outline of programs of several conventions about to be held.

—Let the churches and friends be prompt to send in their offerings before the books close, September 30.

—The Foreign Society has received $1,000 from a sister in Ohio on the annuity plan. This is her second gift.

—George M. Jacobs, of Bethany, Neb., recently preached at Table Rock, in the same state, and has accepted a call for the coming year.

—J. P. Lucas has left Colorado Springs to accept the pastorate of the church at Tingley, Iowa, where he entered upon the work August 16.

—Robert Pegrum, who closed his work at Milton, Nova Scotia, on August 1, has accepted a call to North Fairfield, Ohio, and entered upon that work September 1.

—A large number of missionaries of the Foreign Society will be present at the New Orleans convention, October 9-15. Dr. R. J. Dye will return to Africa immediately after that convention.

—Our congratulations go to Elmer Schenk of Enid, Okla., who was married to Miss Lillian French, of Lamonte, Mo., on August 30. Brother Schenk is one of our promising young preachers.

—In our last issue notice was given that J. Winbigler had announced his resignation at Moulton, Iowa. Brither Winbigler is a man with fine credentials and should be located at once.

—E. L. Daugherty, of Wabash, Ind., paid us a brief visit on his way home from an outing trip in Colorado. He was looking bronzed and rugged. He has had some great experiences with the trout.

—R. F. Thrapp, our minister at Jacksonville, Ill., is chairman of the executive committee which has in charge the revival to be led there by "Billy" Sunday, beginning September 25. A tabernacle is being built to accommodate 5,000 people.

—The Foreign Society has just received $1,521.41 from the estate of the late Martha W. Thomson, of Slater, Mo. It is hoped many friends will remember this cause in their last will and testament.

—Frank W. Allen, of Paris, Mo., spent part of his vacation this year in a river boat trip. These days are not as of yore, is his testimony. Brother Allen, in earlier years of his life, had much experience on the river.

—C. E. Shultz, minister at Marietta, O., will enter the evangelistic field about the middle of October. He has, we believe, had marked success in the work, and those seeking a good evangelist might correspond with him.

—Charles R. Oakley, pastor of the church at Wauseon, Ohio, will, we believe, close his almost six years of service with that church on November 1. Churches in need of a meeting or looking for a pastor would do well to correspond with him.

—James H. Brooks who, since his pastorate in Arkansas, has been evangelizing, is settled with the congregation at Clayton, Ill. The local paper speaks of his ability to interest and hold men, at least one-third of the attendance being masculine.

—Hugh Wayt, of Barnesville, O., wrote the song that was sung at the centennial celebration there the first week in September. "Since a Hundred Years Have Rolled" was the title. Mr. Wayt also presented the souvenir to the queen.

—E. E. Violett and wife have just returned from a three months' vacation and study tour in Europe. With their singer, Frank M. Charlton, they commenced a meeting in Siloam Springs, Ark., in the Chautauqua auditorium seating 2,500 people.

—R. B. Helser, after two months of absence from his pulpit, owing to an operation for appendicitis, conducted services at Fayette, Mo., the last Sunday in August. He is rapidly regaining strength and expects, in a few weeks, to be as strong as ever.

—R. H. Sawyer, of Carrollton, Mo., conducted a party of his young men on a delightful camping trip in Colorado. After six weeks' absence, he is again at his post and the work moves forward. His son, Harold, will be in school in Denver this winter.

—Walter S. Willis has closed his work at Clintonville, Ky., and accepted a call to Hustonville, in the same state. The former church has been supplied for the rest of this year. They have a parsonage. Those interested may address W. F. Heathman.

—O. J. Law, who has closed his work at Eureka, Kan., received about 65 persons into the church there during his seventeen months of ministry. G. A. Waller, of Ohio, succeeds him. As reported in our last issue, Brother Law has accepted the work at Moline, Kan., and is now on the field.

—Charles L. Wheeler, minister at Pawnee City, Neb., writes us that H. O. Pritchard, of Bethany, delivered several able lectures at the Pawnee City Chautauqua. The people wish him to return next year. He occupied the pulpit of the Christian church for one service and there were two additions.

—We publish, on another page, some account of a meeting by Bro[illegible]over-Trimble, who are now [illegible]nvolved, ter Bible Institu[illegible]u on too far given to the work [illegible]ness to claim Baltimore, Md. The[illegible] cos- earnest.

—The churches of Newton coun[illegible], will gather in convention at Diamond on September 16, 17. James M. Miller is the minister of the church there, and this is a cause worth knowing about. Brothers Hardin, Abbott, Peters, Turner, Baker and others will speak.

—We had a pleasant but brief visit last week from Miss Dale, missionary under the Foreign Society at Wuhu, China. She is in America on furlough, and had just come from the conference of missionaries at Cincinnati. We hope to give in our next issue an account of this gathering.

—Brothers Wilhite and Adams will begin a great tabernacle meeting at Salina, Kan., on the last Sunday in October. Here David S. Shields is the present pastor, though we hear of efforts being made to induce him to go elsewhere. The tabernacle is to seat 1,500 people, and Brother Wilhite wants this to be the greatest meeting he ever held.

—Dan A. Trundle writes that he is home and happy in a splendid work. His people at Rialto, Cal., seem to enjoy his lecture on "Vacation Travels and Experiences." Brother Trundle was appointed to report the Long Beach convention for "The Christian-Evangelist." For several years he has been press secretary, reporting to the local papers.

—The church at Alva, Kan., has presented E. A. Newby, of Valley Center, with a purse. He closed his work on August 16. This pastorate of almost four years was a very pleasant one. E. W. Allen and G. B. Williamson conducted a week's meeting at Valley Center, there being ten additions. Brother Newby has continued the meeting with great success.

—During the month of August 240 friends sent personal gifts to the Foreign Society. This was a gain of 198 gifts over the corresponding month one year ago. There was also a gain of $1,713 in the amount received from individual givers. The society will show a considerable gain in the total number of gifts this year over last, but there will probably be a falling off in the total receipts.

—The Christian Church at Clarksburg, W. Va., is to be dedicated by Thomas E. Cramblet, of Bethany College, on September 20. The building and lot all cost about $35,000. Zanesville pressed brick, with stone trimming is being used. Under the same roof there is to be a parsonage. We hope to give particulars later. The state meeting of the churches of West Virginia will be held with this congregation, beginning September 15. All churches are requested to send delegates and to notify W. M. Long, 114 Chestnut street.

—Our brethren at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., have purchased the building from the Congregational church for $3,000. It is situated on the best corner in the city and is said to be easily worth $10,000. They called H. E. Rossell, on May 17, 1907, to lead them. The work has greatly prospered. R. Bruce Brown, evangelist, of Yale, Mich., was the first to preach the primitive gospel, we understand, in the north peninsula of Michigan. He preached in Reid's College, Sault Ste. Marie, having sometimes only three or four to listen to him, but as a result of his labor there ultimately was organized a congregation of 175.

—W. Edward Williams closes his work at the Lindenwald church, Hamilton, Ohio, October 4. Since he took charge last September, there have been 86 accessions and a fine numerical increase in every department. Brother Williams reports that the possibilities are more than ordinary, and provided tion, w[illegible]ities are made there is a good the Lord a[illegible]rdid church. A minister thereon, a sacri[illegible]him immediately. pleasing to God of the Christian Christ (Mo., recently held a [illegible] the parlors. E. W. Stephens, who has been on a world tour, gave a most interesting address upon Palestine and mission work in foreign lands. The purpose of this club is to improve Christian work among men. J. W. Putman is president and E. B. Cauthorn, secretary. It numbers, we believe, about forty members.

—Will H. Newlin, secretary of the third district, Indiana, desires to visit a number of the churches in this district during the autumn and winter months and give an address on our Centennial; hoping in this way to create an additional interest in Centennial plans. This district includes the counties of Boone, Benton, Clinton, Fountain, Montgomery, Tippecanoe and Warren, and has many good, vigorous churches.

—Lee H. Barnum has tendered his resignation to the church at Medicine Lodge, Kan., to take effect November 1. This was a surprise to the church there, which will now look for a successor to him. He leaves his church in good condition, having done for it a good work. George F. Guthrie is the clerk, and those writing to him should enclose a stamp. Brother Barnum has received a unanimous call from the church at Lees Summit, Mo.

—We are glad to make mention in this issue of the work of W. A. Shullenberg. There are thousands of such fields in the country as his, and what he is doing ought to be an inspiration to many men with similar congregations. These men deserve their meed of praise where they are doing their part of the world's work just as much as those who have spheres of influence in the larger centers, where public notice is more apt to be centered upon them.

—I. H. Fuller sends in word from Fremont, Neb. He was present at the state convention and says it was splendid. "O. W. Stewart's address was worth the cost of the whole convention," he writes. "Then Bro. Marion Stevenson's work was worth a mint of money. Taking it altogether it was a feast of the soul." The audiences at Fremont and Valley were good. A meeting will begin the first of October, with Charles E. McVey conducting the music.

—J. H. O. Smith, before going on his vacation, followed up the meeting started by J. L. Haddock in a tent at Oklahoma City. From one of the newspapers we learn that one characteristic of his congregation is that a great number of men are in attendance. As the report says: "They are at ease in the tent, sit in their shirtsleeves, and follow the discourse closely." On one evening the traveling men of the city attended in a body, while one class of young men, 74 in number, was also present.

—We are glad to note that our English brethren have chosen for their president this coming year one who is not a preacher. Yet no man preaches by his life more than does Frank Coop. He is the youngest son of Timothy Coop, who, in his lifetime did so much for the Cause, both in England and in a world-wide way. He left two sons, Frank and Joe, who have been equally devoted in the work of Christ. We understand that Brother Frank Coop expects to be present at our centennial gathering.

—E. L. Powell writes to the author as follows: "I have read, with very much interest, your address on Disciples of Christ read at the auditorium, Jamestown Exposition, during the Norfolk convention. It is admirably conceived in both spirit and subject matter. I regret that I did not have the pleasure of listening to it. The parallel which you institute in the address is true and wonderfully appropriate to the occasion and hour. I wish you simply to know of my appreciation." This refers to a recent publication of the Christian Publishing Company, "National and Christian Union," by J. H. Garrison. Price 5c each copy, 50c per dozen, or $3 per hundred.

—We very much regret to announce the death of Mrs. F. N. Calvin, wife of the pastor of the Compton Heights Christian Church, St. Louis, which occurred at three o'clock Monday morning of this week. Mrs. Calvin had been ill for about two weeks. No danger was apprehended until a few hours before her passing away. The funeral is announced to take place on Wednesday, September 9. Sister Calvin was a woman of much strength of character and intelligence. She was a very efficient church worker, and her loss, apart from the family relationships, will be an irreparable one to Brother Calvin. We deeply sympathize with him and the church.

—Information which ought to have reached us some weeks ago has just come to hand. It is to the effect that James Mailley, of Colorado Springs, recently had a most trying experience, and one that does not befall one in a million of men. While out on the mountains with several young ladies and his son he was struck by lightning. We understand that his cap and hair were burned off, that he was stripped of his clothing and carried senseless to his home. His son, at a distance of 150 yards from him, also felt the shock, though it had no serious consequences to him. Despite this exceptional experience, Brother Mailley has again been able to enter his pulpit.

—In the Western country the problem of the "summer slump" is a very great problem. W. A. Webster, of Rifle, Colo., writes us that they have overcome it there to a great extent during the past few months. All the regular services have kept up fairly well and the Sunday evening service has been above the average. In July he began a series of illustrated sermons, using the stereopticon. The views were from photographs he himself took while on a trip through the Holy Land, Egypt, Greece, etc. Brother Webster reports that a number of the members of other churches have become regular attendants, and the services are the talk of the town on Monday morning.

—William Oeschger, of Vincennes, Ind., writes as follows to the Editor: "Your article in last week's 'Christian-Evangelist' on 'Unity, Fraternity and Progress' deserves to become the watchword of our brotherhood, not only for the present time, but for all time to come. Under the present conditions it is a most timely note. May the spirit of God use it for the peace of Zion and the conquest of the world for Christ. Here is my heart and hand to all that desire unity, love, fraternity, and pray for progress." This is the spirit in which we would like to see our suggestions taken up. Why can not we have a great brotherhood where this watchword shall govern its thought and action?

—A preacher of fine ability and character, who, before coming among us a year or more ago, had been engaged in the lecture field, and is still so engaged, writes the Editor of this paper as follows: "The time has come when my heart yearns to preach our precious message. I have some things to bring to our work, and if the brotherhood needs me I will come." We should say this brother is needed, and that he and his wife together would be a source of strength to any church employing him. We shall be glad to put churches who need a pastor in communication with this brother. A man who has what he regards as a "precious message," which he is "yearning" to proclaim, is the kind of a man likely to have a fruitful ministry.

—We are asked by a "Disciple" to state what is the proper manner to be pursued in the election of a minister for the second year of service if it is desired to retain him. In the first place, we should say preachers ought not to be employed by the year, but as long as there is mutual satisfaction, notice to be given three months in advance of a desire to change by either party. In a case where the contract has been made for only a single year, and the desire is to continue it, we suggest that the board of officers pass a resolution recommending that the congregation extend a call to their minister for another year, or for an indefinite period, with the condition above mentioned. The church should vote upon this recommendation, in any way it may choose, at a regular meeting of the church on Lord's day. If there should be a request for a vote by ballot, it would be better to adopt that method.

—We received the announcement of the Southwest Bible and Mission School, located at Austin, Texas. It is under the control of the state executive committee of the Young Women's Christian Association, and among the faculty is Frank L. Jewett, of the Bible chair under the control of our C. W. B. M. The purpose of the school is to afford opportunity to young men and women to make adequate preparation for work in Sunday-schools, city and college, Young Women's Christian Associations, churches, and in city, home and foreign missionary societies. The first year the general headquarters will be in the Austin Theological Seminary. After this time the new building for the Texas Bible Chair, adjoining the university campus, will be completed. Those interested should address Brother Jewett at 2009 University avenue, Austin.

—We announced in our last issue that Thomas J. Clark had closed his work with the church at Bloomington, Ind., and accepted a call of the brethren at Albion, Ill. Brother Clark has had what we believe is, perhaps, a unique experience among us, having up to the present served only two congregations in a ministry of thirty-six years. We recently published some history of the church at Vincennes, Ind., where he was located for twenty-two years. From there he went to Bloomington, and has ministered to that church for the past fourteen years. During this last pastorate the church was built up from a membership of about 500 to 1,000. Here is a record of some of the things done: During this time Brother Clark preached 1,360 sermons, attended 483 funerals, 95 of them being members of his congregation, and married 188 couples. The total number of additions was 1,245; of these 796 were by confession and baptism. At the beginning of this pastorate there was a debt of $1,800 on the parsonage. This was liquidated and the church remodeled at a cost of $3,600. An investment fund has been accumulated, which can be applied later to any purpose the congregation may desire. The Sunday-school runs from 225 to 300, and the present drawback is lack of accommodation. Brother Clark is a strong preacher, and one of our most spiritually-minded men. He has several times resigned at Bloomington, but has been persuaded to continue. The work at Albion promises to be a very good one under his leadership, not being quite so heavy a drain on the minister's strength. This was formerly the field of C. C. Garrigues, who is now in St. Louis.

—We announced with great regret in our last issue the death of Hugh Smith Darsie, the oldest brother of John L., Horace G. and Lloyd Darsie. A note from his son, George Darsie, pastor of our church at Akron, Ohio, gives the following particulars: "My father dropped dead Wednesday morning, August 19, at 7:30, while standing on the porch talking to mother. It was a terrible shock, and we do not rally from it easily. We buried him at Dawson, Pa., on August 22. His home has been here in Washington, Pa., the last eight years. He was a brother of John L., George and Lloyd, all preachers. His father, James Darsie, was a preacher for sixty years. He himself has been a member of the church fifty-two years. All his nine children are members. My brother Hugh is minister of the Second Church here (Washington, Pa.) I was at Chautauqua, N. Y., on my vacation when called home by the unexpected event. I had expected to visit him this week. It is a keen regret to me that I did not get to see him before he went from us. I ought to have gone right home. I did not know he was so near the end." Brother Darsie's vacation has, indeed, been a sad one. He is now back at his work in Akron. We understand that the deceased's youngest brother, Lloyd, conducted beautiful services at Washington on August 21, and at Dawson on August 22. Our sympathy goes out to this family of preachers.

—There has come into the hands of the Assistant Editor a letter headed "An Appreciation." It is a letter expressive of the sentiments of the writer about the work and character of the writer of "Pentwater Musings." It is from one of the younger men, who feels some hesitancy in voicing what he believes is the opinion of thousands of his brethren in the ministry. Oftentimes, he says, he has been prompted to write his appreciation, but has refrained for one reason or another. A recent "Easy Chair" article drew forth the letter which we have in our hand. It speaks of the help the Editor has been to this young preacher; how he has both calmed and cheered him. "I have not always agreed with your position," he writes, "but what of it? Is that not only another way of saying we are human?" The writer believes in the Editor's fidelity and integrity, the purity of his motives, and the largeness of his faith. This letter comes from the heart of a young man who deplores some of the things he sees about him, and wants to give an encouraging word to one who is bearing many of the burdens of the brotherhood in his effort to keep it true to the ideals of Christ and free from the petty meanness of untutored humanity. We thank Brother Golightly for so voicing the sentiments of the Assistant Editor and thousands of members of the Christian churches.

Announcement Day is the Lord's Day.

What Announcement day?

Of the International Missionary Convention.

Where and when is it?

In New Orleans, October 9-15.

What is that to us?

Because it is our church, our Sunday-school, our Endeavor, our C. W. B. M., our Men's club, our colleges and our missionary and benevolent societies.

Are you going?

Yes.

Why?

Because everybody who can is going. Because I want to see the Southland and visit the most interesting city in America. Because I want to help the cause. Because I want the uplift it will give me.

What will it cost?

Rooms will be from 50 cents up, meals from 15 cents up, and all railroads in America have given the best rates that can be gotten by any convention to any city. We will have to ask our local ticket agents the exact cost of travel.

What sort of program will New Orleans have?

Prof. Hackelman will lead the chorus of 500 voices; the Netz Sisters' Quartet will sing; Miss Una Berry is the soloist; the C. W. B. M., the Christian Endeavor, the Sunday-schools, the American and Foreign Missionary Societies, the Boards of Church Extension, Benevolence, Ministerial Relief and colleges will have one of the finest issues of sacred eloquence ever put on the platform. Then there will be the union communion service and the Christian union session. Thus we can shake the hand of our missionary heroes from all over the world.

Would I have any right to attend?

Just the same as any other Disciple of Christ.

How is the weather in New Orleans at this season?

Fine; delightful.

What sort of clothes must one wear?

Rather light-weight; even white wash dresses are used some at this season.

Must I give notice beforehand that I'm coming?

Not necessarily, for the Local Reception Committee will meet every train. But, if you like, you may drop a card to our minister, W. M. Taylor, 1628 State street.

How many friends may I have to go with me?

All you can, for New Orleans has unlimited facilities to care for visitors.

Will our minister go?

He wants to go, and the church can make his heart glad and reap a glorious blessing from his future labors with us by giving him a purse and a vacation so he can attend.

Well, I am going to get the church to send the minister. I am going with him and shall get several others to go with us. Good-by, I'm off. Will meet you in the Registration Room in the Convention building (the Atheneum), corner of St. Charles avenue and Clio street, New Orleans.

This is the one chance of my life! Think of it! I just can't afford to miss it. I can afford it, for I am a child of the King; this is the King's business; it will be an education to me, will broaden me; I'm going.

An Appeal to the Preachers.

Dear Brother: Nearly everything depends upon you as to whether this proposed Centennial offering for Bethany College shall be successful or not. You are, from the human point of view, the main factor in the case. If it is a success you ought to share in it, and will share in it, not only in your own conscience, but in the approbation of your Heavenly Father and our Lord Jesus Christ, whose great cause is involved in this appeal. If it is a failure you will have to share the shame of missing a great opportunity to make our Centennial celebration worthy of the people who are to be represented.

We cannot believe that you will hesitate to throw the weight of your influence into this great enterprise. If you will put this before your congregation, or congregations, and urge your church or churches to actively participate in this unparalleled opportunity to make our centenary memorable, then undoubtedly the $500,000 mark will be reached long before we meet at Pittsburg. We can not believe that you will hesitate to bear your part in making this appeal successful.

Some months ago we sent you an explanation of the whole matter, and urged you then to enlist your congregation in this offering, but owing to the fact that then we had no specific Bethany day, and owing also, doubtless, to the fact that the financial crisis was at its height at the time you received our communication, we partially understand why you neglected to take the matter up at that time. However, any delay beyond September 20, the day set apart as Bethany day, may prove fatal to the whole enterprise. We must beg of you, therefore, to plan the matter with your church officers, and also to preach a sermon, or deliver an address, on the subject at such a time as you may think best, or on the day which has been appointed, viz., the third Lord's day in September, to take up the contribution for the Bethany College Centennial Endowment Fund. On that day, which has been endorsed by our National Education Committee, and which represents the day Alexander Campbell was elected president of the college, it is hoped that the Disciples of Christ throughout the entire world will join hands in a holy fellowship by making this Centennial offering of the brotherhood an assured success. This can certainly be done if you and every other preacher will do what we believe is an imperative duty, to say nothing of the high privilege and joyous service which this opportunity secures to every preacher among the Disciples of Christ.

Dear brother, do not put this appeal aside until a convenient season. Take the matter up at once with your officers and with your church, and get ready for the great occasion. Read carefully all the accompanying leaflets, and then throw yourself heartily into the work. We shall depend upon you, and we feel sure you will not fail us. If you feel so disposed, a postal card addressed to the chairman of our committee, W. T. Moore, Columbia, Mo., intimating your willingness to do all you can, will be gratefully received, as this will help us to know that you are interested in the matter. You might, furthermore, fill out the note enclosed, after taking a copy of the same, and send this note to Dr. Moore, who will deposit it in the St. Louis Union Trust Company. We believe that every preacher will be glad to contribute something on his own account, as well as bring the matter forcibly before his church people.

Trusting that you will receive this earnest appeal in the spirit in which it is made, and believing that you will become an active agent in whatever way may seem best to you in pushing this great enterprise, we are, most fraternally and cordially, your brothers in Christ,

W. T. Moore, Columbia, Mo.; J. W. McGarvey, Lexington, Ky.; Phillip Johnson, Bethany, W. Va.; Frances C. McMillin, Cleveland, Ohio; H. L. Willett, Chicago, Ill.; F. D. Power, Washington, D. C.; A. McLean, Cincinnati, Ohio; L. L. Carpenter, Wabash, Ind.; J. A. Hopkins, Winston-Salem, N. C.; E. W. McDiarmid, Bethany, W. Va.; Sumner T. Martin, California.

The Panhandle Convention.

This meeting will be held at Claude, September 22-25. A splendid meeting is anticipated. A good program has been arranged. Bro. C. A. White and his people at Claude cordially invite all to come and partake of their hospitality freely. The Ft. Worth & Denver Railway has granted a one and one-third rate over their lines from Quanah to Claude and from Texline to Claude. Connecting lines will probably join in the reduced rate. The last day of the convention will be given over to the District Endeavor convention. It is hoped that every Endeavor society in the Panhandle will be represented. Colby D. Hall, president of the Texas Christian Endeavor Union, will conduct this service.

The New Orleans Convention.

In our Centennial work, our eyes are fixed on our Pittsburg convention in October, 1909, as the goal of our race—the accepted time, when we shall meet to rejoice over the rounding out of our century, and the accomplishment of the aims we have set before us for the celebration of this supreme hour in our history. All over the land loyal hearts are planning to come up to that great gathering. That is well; but in order to make it a very mountain top of achievement, we must not fail to attend to the duty near at hand—our convention in New Orleans now but a month off. Our Centennial convention will fail to reach the high water mark we are expecting if the convention just preceding it shows any falling off in attendance and reports. The duty of to-day must be faithfully done, or we are not ready for the duty of to-morrow. It is earnestly hoped that a multitude will respond to the warm invitation extended to us by our brothers and sisters in the far south; the voice of need as well as the voice of welcome sounds in it; our church is weak in that part of our land, and the members there will receive strength and courage from the presence of a host of the Disciples of Christ in the Crescent City. Each of us needs to receive the impetus and inspiration that contact gives, so as to make the last year of our Centennial the crowning year of all.

It is too early to forecast what our Centennial reports will be, but we are sure we can promise that they will make your heart sing with praise and gratitude. So come! All things will be ready for you; and make this coming convention a worthy prelude for the one to follow in 1909.

Ida W. Harrison,
Centennial Secretary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

Wisconsin Convention.

The Disciples of Christ of Wisconsin will meet in convention with the First Church of Christ meeting at corner of Seventh avenue and Walker street, Milwaukee, September 18-21. The Milwaukee brethren will welcome and entertain all delegates who come. Each church in the state is earnestly requested to send delegates provided with written reports of the past year's work, its present condition and its prospects, and together we will plan for the coming year's mission work. Especially, the churches being aided, or that will ask aid, will be expected to report in detail.

The first session, Friday evening, will be mainly in the hands of the local church. J. H. Mohorter, of St. Louis, will preach the evening sermon. On Saturday the first part of the forenoon session will be devoted to business, the latter part to two addresses. The afternoon session will be in the hands of the state organization of the C. W. B. M., with Mettie J. Monroe as president, and Miss Ida Towne, of Waupun, as corresponding secretary. As speakers from abroad they have secured C. C. Smith, of Cincinnati, secretary of negro evangelization, and Mrs. Effie Cunningham, of Indianapolis.

On Sunday the Bible school will be in the hands of the local church, and following it will be a sermon by W. R. Warren, centennial secretary. At 2 o'clock the memorial service will be held at which the obituary committee will report, and the Lord's supper will be partaken of. The Christian Endeavor hour will be in the early evening, and the address of the evening will be by W. J. Wright, corresponding secretary of the A. C. M. S.

Monday will be devoted to reports of committees, reports of churches, election of officers, and a number of addresses. The evening sermon will be by C. S. Medbury, pastor of University Place Church, Des Moines, Ia. Besides the speakers mentioned we expect F. W. Emerson, of Freeport, Ill.; J. H. Berkey, of Monroe; L. L. Mann, of Waupun; J. S. Stone, of Chippewa Falls; F. M. McHale, of Richland Center; J. I. Carter, of Ladysmith; J. Harry Bullock, of Footville; H. W. Thoreson, of Hickory, and the Milwaukee preachers, C. L. Waite and S. J. Homan. Representatives of the Foreign Society and Church Extension are expected. The sessions of the W. C. M. A. will be presided over by President J. C. Thurman, of Green Bay.

Each member of the church in the state is invited and we hope to see a large number present from first to last. Send word to C. L. Waite, 433 Grove street, Milwaukee, that you are coming.

H. F. Barstow,
Corresponding Secretary.

West Virginia Convention.

The thirty-eighth annual convention of the West Virginia C. M. S., which convenes at Clarksburg, September 15-18, promises to be the best. It will be a delegate convention. Each congregation in the state is entitled to one delegate and each congregation contributing 55 or more to the work of the society is entitled to two delegates. This does not prevent others from coming; indeed, we are making an earnest effort to induce every Disciple we can to attend.

Free entertainment will be afforded by the Clarksburg brethren, on condition that all delegates and visitors send their names to W. M. Long, Clarksburg, W. Va., not later than September 12.

More speakers from outside the state are on the program this year than ever before. They are among the very best in our brotherhood.

The spiritual feast as prepared is as follows:

Tuesday Evening—Address, "The Dynamics of a Single Sentence," Crayton S. Brooks, New Castle, Pa. Quiet half hour, "Chapter Studies in 1 John," E. A. Cole, Washington, Pa. Appointment of committees.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA AND ARIZONA CONVENTION

The Southern California and Arizona convention closed Sunday night, August 16, at Long Beach. Time and place are permanent from year to year—the time as nearly fixed as possible and always ten days or longer. It is a state and not a district convention. There is no California convention. There is no California in our catalog, as there is no Dakota or no Carolina, politically. But there is this distinction. They are called "North" and "South." Our terms are "Northern" and "Southern." We have 10,000 Disciples, 67 congregations and only three pastorless folds. Eighteen of these churches are in Los Angeles, and about four of them are in Arizona. Eighteen in Los Angeles! Now, 10,000 members would not be expected to have a convention of any comparatively great proportions. Competent, well informed observers say that not only is it a great convention for a state affair, but it compares well in many ways to the national conventions. How many states can send up to their meetings one-fourth or one-fifth of their members? Think of a state convention with 20,000 delegates and many of its gatherings with 60,000 people present! To match us in proportions that is just what some of your states must do or yield to us the banner for attendance. "Now, brag!" That is California talk. Some will say, Yes, we have something to talk about and we are glad of it—but the work is hard enough to keep us meek. To match our "giving" some of your states must raise $175,000 for state missions. That would aid 500 or 600 fields quite materially or keep 500 evangelists in the field continually, with local support. Our convention is opened each year by the C. W. B. M., Mrs. Reba B. Smith, president; Mrs. W. R. Harper and other lovable souls, in the lead. Does the interest flag? Do you know they put us on our feet? "Crowded out of their quarters and hundreds turned away"—is a section of a headline after the first night session. This local paper, "The Long Beach Press," gave us very courteous treatment, as did other local papers. The Los Angeles papers gave us considerable attention. When our audiences would run to three and even four thousand a sister convention had three and four hundred. These people are fully as strong as we are in this country.

First day was "Japanese Day." The decorations were lovely. Dr. H. H. Guy and wife and members of the Japanese Christian Church did it. A native preacher (Jap.) gave us a good sermon. Another preacher, a short sermon in his tongue, Dr. Guy interpreting. Mrs. Guy entertained us with the juveniles, having them sing in Japanese and English. The addresses of Dr. and Mrs. Guy were greatly enjoyed. They manifest a sweet, cheerful spirit and a jealous devotion to their cause that is admirable. Mrs. Louise Kelley was winning, eloquent, lovable. Space does not allow me to speak of the dear home folks, always good and busy, as Mrs. Dye occupied some time on the C. W. B. M. program. She won all hearts by her sweet consecration and devoted earnestness—but her story must come with that of her husband later. The Long Beach sisters served a Jap. tea. The C. W. B. M. raised $2,000 for the Centennial aim fund. Good, isn't it? Besides this, $6,000 was raised, or $8,000 in all. Is that not a report to be proud of? Mrs. Reba B. Smith was re-elected president and Mrs. Harper secretary.

A plea was made by the brethren to the sisters of the C. W. B. M. to be true to and take an interest in the remainder of the program. It was their convention still. "We certainly will," was the answer, and no one could discover any less zeal and interest for the program which followed. Let the sisters report in a special way their very meritorious work. I can not do it adequate justice. The Christian Endeavor people surprised us by adding some really good and thoroughly enjoyable features to the convention work. Miss Butler, of San Diego, went after the "Tenth Legion Work" in a speech that had suggestions of Sam Jones' wit, Mark Twain's drollery. Her manner and style were original. Now, lest I slight some of the dear youth who gave us many good things, I'll not try to mention their names.

Frank G. Tyrrell was an "invited" speaker. I don't know what to call him. He was not a guest, for he is a native son— , not a guest, one of us and in earn about it.

The men's banquet was a great success. "Covers" were laid for about 150. At the Virginia—gorgeous, grand, glittering—I tell you most of us poor preachers had a feeling of fright in that place. I can only say it was entertaining, elevating eloquent and edible! Toasts by E. L. Curry, toast—(Tyrrell called him roastmaster)—master, Tyrrell, Dowling, Medbury, Smither, C. C. Chapman, Warren, Mayor Windom, Lewis and others were all of them good. This feature has grown in three short years out of knee pants into long-tailed broadcloth. Its voice grows more eloquent each year for a larger Christian manhood that shall see and feel and do greater and greater things for the Master.

The convention Sunday-school was a grand affair. W. L. Porterfield was superintendent. There was a general secretary and four assistants. A. K. Crawford was treasurer. We had 400 enrolled. This might as well have been 800 or 1,000, but the local church adhered to their own work and while we didn't "kick," we "didn't like it at all." This was done last year. The Sunday-school part of the convention was by no means a side show; it was part of the main ring. Our state is developing a great worker. It is Brother Thornton, of the Long Beach church. Remember this and keep your eye on him as he takes his place among the national field men.

There was the usual routine of representations of different interests, and why give space to that? One thing deserves mention. Our people have a half interest in one of the greatest private colleges (co-educational) in the country. This is located at Pomona (Claremont). The Congregationalist church is the senior member of the firm.

A few words must be given to the "spirit" of the convention. It was delightful! The proof of this was a severe test that the temper of our leaders (some of them) received one day. A lively discussion arose over a matter upon which men like C. C. Chapman, W. G. Conley, A. C. Smither, E. W. Thornton, W. M. Martin and others differed very radically. It was not baptism or "federation," or the "pious unimmersed." It was about a prize to be given for the best peace essay. You do not care for details. This tilt was lively, heated, almost stormy for a few minutes, but it was characterized by jolly good humor, by jollies and "jollying," yet no one is sore. In fact Brother Chapman settled it by appropriating $50 of his private funds to buy or contribute to the prize fund. Peace they considered more important than discussions about it, and prizes for essays on the subject. Maybe both sides were right. We know both sides were the right kind of men with the right spirit.

The foreign missionaries contributed very largely to the spirit of the convention. Their voices seemed to float down from the upper region where there is no night. Optimism, cheer, duty, determination, love, consecration, willingness, high spiritual tone—well, you know all the precious terms and phrases—I can't tell you—they spoke from an atmosphere and came with a radiance upon the face that does not come from land or sea. Theirs is the kingdom and the glory and the power of the larger, sweeter life where only love is queen. Dr. Guy and his cheer, Sister Guy with her smile that speaks always of eternal love; W. H. Hanna with his beautiful spirit of humility; Dr. Dye and his deep, very deep, strong concern, his wife with her intense yearning, longing to save, to save, to save to the uttermost parts of earth, all combined to hold us, to help us, to carry us upon a tide that drifted even from the shore of self, and earth and sin! Who can ever forget those precious hours on the mountains apart with them? The richness of such association is to be highly valued. The singing was largely by Dr. C. R. Mitchell, led at the night sessions with a well organized men's chorus of 100 to 150 male (preacher) voices. The solos by different—very different—soloists, were all good in their peculiar way. No convention ever had such a medley of male, female, classic, popular, temperance song and church anthem, and all of it good, than we had.

Dr. Chapman carried us to a high pitch of enthusiasm about that burning question—the saloon. It was very, very hopeful! Professor Gates (Disciple), Bulgin's singer, at the conclusion gave a dramatic song, his own composition, "Take the Stars and Stripes Away from Our Saloon." It was a psychological triumph! S. M. Martin, M. D., in the "D. D." business, made us happy with a visit and a good sermon—all of his sermons are such!

Now comes our "chief speaker" for chief consideration. I will not take time to tell who he is. You would soon learn that if you heard him. One casual listener who "dropped in" became so absorbed that he went away without his hat and pipe. Brother Medbury was doubtless much pleased to cause the man to leave his pipe. It is well, too, that we sometimes are willing to leave behind other things for Christly things. He treated in a masterful, broad, clear, well-defined manner such themes as the evidences, unity, our plea, missions and many such subjects. He has a gentle but firm and manly bearing. His wife, sweet, modest and retiring, was with him, but one would hardly have known it, such was her quiet, unobtrusive manner.

One closing word. Medbury set the pace for our progress largely through the year. It was this: Zealous for the cause of our fathers—but not garrulous, fussy or uncharitable toward other people in our insistence upon the restoration plea for union, not to be too well satisfied with our progress, not grow too "easy" in our promulgation of the dear, old gospel—no note of weakness of the "disappearing brotherhood" kind—well, you get the idea. He marks an era of his own and is a "wheel within a wheel," (but no "wheels in his head") with a mission all his own to and with us. "Sin at its best—sin at its worst," "get all you can and can all you get," the "great big busy world," "men of affairs, bow your backs to this great burden, bend to this great task," etc., are just a few of his expressions. He was original—sensational you might also say—in his sensationalism, concerned, earnest, loving, often in tears, no straining for effect, but with plenty of effect, high, lofty, strong always, it seems—"just right!"

Some one who had seen scores of conventions said he never before saw a time when no one said an adverse thing of the chief speaker.

We exceeded in spirit, in interest, in money raised, in results attained, any previous year of our work. There were 1,700 last year, 2,100 this year, 950 baptisms last year, 1,300 this year, about $1,000 more money raised this than last year, many new churches and Sunday-schools—in every way we are growing, growing, and God is giving us the kingdom.

To C. C. Chapman, Grant K. Lewis, A. K. Crawford, and behind this president, this secretary and this treasurer the best state board in the United States, is largely due the wonderful success that is, has been and I hope will always be ours.

Such is the press of business after a long vacation that time will not allow more now, but later more may follow to supplement this very poor report. It is a happy lot to live, and pray, and preach in the company of such a noble band as our preachers in Southern California and Arizona.

Dan A. Trundle.

THE OKLAHOMA STATE CONVENTION

The first state convention, which was a successor of eighteen years of Oklahoma Territory conventions, and almost a like number of Indian Territory conventions, and an immediate annual successor of a joint convention of both Oklahoma and Indian Territory, met in Shawnee August 24-28. Shawnee is near the center of the new state, a railroad center and a thriving city of 12,000. The new building costing $20,000, with Frank L. Van Voorhis as pastor, and a growing membership of loyal brethren, all went to make the entertainment superior and the local arrangements almost complete. The commercial club took the convention on a trolley ride, while the citizens attended the sessions in large numbers.

The attendance was general. Oklahoma works under a constitution which demands a delegate convention. Seventy-five churches were represented and 285 delegates and visitors registered. One of the cheering signs was the strength and interest shown by the newer ministers who have lately come into the state. Among these we mention M. S. Johnson, of McAlester; D. A. Wickizer and wife, of Tulsa; B. F. Hill, of Okmulgee; S. A. Roberts, of Holdenville; E. L. Allen, of Kingfisher; T. R. Noblett, of Guthrie, and Brethren Reed, of Chandler, and Reed, of Anadarko, and Owers, of Farmington, Mo., who had been vacationing in Oklahoma for a few weeks. But this was no more than the attendance of the veterans like Hon. Dick T. Morgan, J. M. Monroe, Virtes Williams, S. R. Hawkins, W. R. Walling, T. R. Dean, C. C. Ayres, Randolph Cook and a host of others who had been workers in the territorial days.

The sessions began on Monday night, August 24.

The address of Mrs. Louise Kelley was a soul-searching message, calling for a higher life in spiritual service. Mrs. Kelley was an old time friend of the writer who knew her in the "old times" in Kansas. The years of a decade have brought a growing spirit to this gifted and consecrated sister. She is a thinker with a message, and has a pleasing delivery. Mrs. A. P. Aten presided and Mrs. Crossan delivered a well prepared address of welcome.

Tuesday morning showed a largely increased attendance. B. F. Hill delivered an address on evangelism, while E. L. Allen spoke on ministerial relief. The convention sermon was preached by M. S. Johnson, of McAlester. It was an able sermon, setting forth the supreme need of the means of a spiritual deepening of the life and activities of the church. The message was wholesome. It revealed a pulpit man of strong parts, and a pastor of noble heart and sane spiritual mind.

Tuesday afternoon was the period of reports on state work and the creation of the convention committees. These reports are to be published as a part of the minutes. J. M. Moore reported a year of church building, of locating of pastors and of active evangelism. The total receipts from all sources amounted to $13,000, and there were something over 1,600 additions through the state work in the Western District. S. R. Hawkins reported a year of evangelism, pastoral locations and some new buildings. More than $4,000 was raised for state work in the Eastern District. The chairman, Hon. T. R. Dean, county attorney of one of the most prosperous counties in the state, announced the membership of sixteen committees which are provided for in the constitution. This insures thorough and systematic work. Tuesday night brought forth two strong addresses by Mrs. Kelley on "How Much Do You Love?" and by D. A. Wickizer, of Tulsa, on "State Work."

Wednesday morning was given to the C. W. B. M. work. This was a business session of model ways and thorough preparation. Sister Lucy, the state secretary, presented a printed report, which was complete. The C. W. B. M. has made gains that were truly encouraging. Special mention should be made of the addresses of Mrs. Alice M. Wickizer and Mrs. McDaniel, of Kansas, and Mrs. Kelley's memorial service for the late departed president, Mrs. Helen E. Moses. Many were the expressions of prayer and testimony of the noble life of this great and good sister.

Wednesday afternoon was given to the Bible school work. H. S. Gilliam has been the superintendent of Bible school work, and no state has enjoyed a more competent and loyal service. And no man has sacrificed more than this good man of God to keep the work going. Oklahoma will never do too much for such a spirit and such an example. Brother Gillium presented a printed report which was complete. It revealed the need of a great awakening among our Bible schools to the value of state work for our own Bible school interests. Oklahoma, however, is abreast of the times in Bible school work. J. Clarence Reid, of Chandler, delivered an address upon the adult class movement. W. Daviess Pittman, of the Christian Publishing Company, rendered valuable assistance in this session by leading a conference on class organization. Myron C. Settle, of Kansas, that man of the Sunday-school and with teacher training fame, told us how they "do it in Kansas."

Brother Settle is a modest man of deep earnestness and consecration. His message was wholesome and inspiring. He also lead a conference on teacher training.

Wednesday evening brought forth a unique thing in the brief addresses or responses of two of Shawnee's business men. Mr. Roy spoke in behalf of the Commercial Club. He said "that the church was a necessary asset in every city, and for his part he would rather see a Christian college than a factory without the college. The church helps to make men and men make a city," he said.

Mr. George A. McKinnis, a leading Baptist layman, and a leading Sunday-school worker in the state, stirred the convention by declaring that when Alexander Campbell withdrew from the Baptists and took the name Christian and asked the world to unite on that with the word of God as the only guide, he took the stand we must all come to and ought to come to. He piteously remarked that when his good pastor would call at his office next day he would say, "You are right, Brother McKinnis, but I would not dare to say what you did."

J. J. Morgan, of Fort Worth, Texas, was the church extension man for this year and for this convention. He was witty and suggestive. His cause is respected in Oklahoma. The church extension board has been a help in time of need to all Oklahoma and we should do more for church extension than we have been able to do in the past, and we will. Then late in the night came a teacher training match between three from Oklahoma City and three from Shawnee. After one hundred questions were given two on each side stood up. The result was a draw. Then followed an illustration of adult class organization and work by the laboratory method.

About fifteen young men from an Oklahoma City class, assisted by a few young men from among the delegates, put the work on the stage, and held a business meeting, and then a class meeting, and won three new recruits for the class from Armour's office force. This was intensely interesting. The people were awake and all took notice. The stage, when manned by God's people, can impress a deep lesson in a way that it will live and last. This was an idea of convention work originated by Brother Gilrum. It worked well.

Thursday morning witnessed the business session. The entire period was given to the business of the convention, and this came through the report of the committees. Many of the committee reports were received and adopted with but little discussion. The obituary committee made a tender report and paid a fitting tribute to the late W. A. Humphrey, of Guthrie. Brother Humphrey at the time of his death was president of the board of trustees of Oklahoma Christian University and chairman of the board of directors of the Oklahoma Christian Missionary Society. The committee moved and secured fifteen minutes of time to hear one-minute expressions from the brethren of the convention. It was fitting that Hon. Dick T. Morgan should present the report and that J. M. Moore should close the responses. It was a holy memorial period. Oklahoma drops a flower of remembrance for this fallen leader and consecrated man of God.

The nomination committee had reported during the Wednesday afternoon session: C. M. Bliss, of Oklahoma City, for president; L. W. Marr, of Tulsa, vice-president; Charles Hazlerigg, of Mulhall, and Ed S. McKinney, of Woodward, secretaries; W. R. Blake, of Weleetka, treasurer, and Herbert Caldwell, of Hinton auditor. All vacancies on the board of directors were filled. This required the election of five members for three years and one to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Brother Humphrey. The chief interest and long discussion came with the report of the committee on "future work." Oklahoma, although merged under one convention by the action of 1907, still maintains the old lines that were in existence in territorial days. The old corresponding secretaries of what was formerly Indian and Oklahoma territories were continued during the past year with separate treasuries, and each section doing work only in its own territory. There were many who felt that the continuance of this policy would be detrimental to the best interests of the cause in the entire state. The greater number of congregations are in the western or old Oklahoma part of the state. The committee reported in favor of a continuance of the present policy for just one more year. The discussions took a wide range. The eastern part pleaded by the voice of the major portion for this temporary compromise. The report of the committee was finally sustained upon this point. Minutes of the 1907 and 1908 conventions were called for, and the financial policy was left to the state board of directors to inaugurate and carry out. The committee of affiliated interests carried a resolution asking the Baptist brethren to enter into a series of practical discussions, looking to a furtherance of the spirit for union. The Christian church has been among the foremost in the temperance agitation and the achievement of our prohibition victories. The report of the temperance committee recalled some of our recent history and took a firm stand for the future. More and better conceptions of the importance of convention business is coming to our people in Oklahoma.

Thursday afternoon was given to the very important cause of Christian education. On Wednesday afternoon President E. V. Zollars had delivered an address on this subject, by the courtesy of the Bible school session. This was one of his strong addresses on the paramount importance of Christian education and the absolute necessity of our people maintaining our own schools. This address made a deep impression on the convention. The board of trustees of Oklahoma City University reported through T. W. Blackman, of Enid, who is the business manager and treasurer. This report will be printed as a part of the proceedings of the convention. Brother Blackman reported a present indebtedness of $56,000, with accounts due by contracts and notes of over $55,000. The net gain to the cause in value for the past two years has been $110,000. The board of trustees have carried a heavy burden. They need the sympathy of all. Randolph Cook discussed in a well prepared address the "Oklahoma Educational Society." Later in the day eighty-five names were secured to start this work and $113 was pledged or given to this society. President Zollars again spoke on "What is Christian Education?" Following this the Shawnee Commercial Club gave the convention a trolley ride to Benson Park, four miles south of the city. Here the convention took a rest, some took boat rides, while a number of the more venturesome took a plunge in the lake to recall old times.

The last evening session was a rare treat in two magnificent addresses. S. A. Roberts, a new man in the Christian ministry in Oklahoma, delivered the address on foreign missions. Not a person was present but what was thrilled with enthusiasm for the sacred cause of missions. Brother Roberts was a live wire of sympathy and a source of exhortation for the Church of Christ to arise to its divine call, and do its full duty. W. J. Wright spoke in behalf of "Home Missions." He certainly did his cause great honor in his manner and method of presenting his subject. By the use of charts and maps and his intimate knowledge of conditions our hearts were made to burn within us for the oldest organized work among us, and for the vital cause it stands for. W. J. Wright is respected highly in Oklahoma. The American Christian Missionary Society has done great things for Oklahoma. They still furnish $2,500 for the state work. Oklahoma hopes to see the day when all this can be released and much more returned in thankfulness to help in the needy fields where our brethren are weak.

The last day came with the Christian Endeavor session and an address by J. H. Mohorter. The devotions reached their real meaning and place in this session. And why should they not when the leader was a volunteer for the mission field? The writer spoke on Christian Endeavor work in Oklahoma. The address sought to give the place of Christian Endeavor in the church and to plead for a regard for its work in the plans of the brethren. The Disciples lead in numbers and everything in Oklahoma Christian Endeavor work. This entails an added responsibility. Miss Tyler Wilkinson, late of Texas, now the field secretary of the Christian Endeavor Union for Oklahoma, spoke on "The Christian Endeavor as a Training School for the More Important Work of the Church." Her address was searching and interesting. It certainly would rebuke any shortsighted man who would put the Christian Endeavor off as an unimportant matter.

J. H. Mohorter has long since won a place in the hearts of the brethren of Oklahoma. His sweet spirit, his many-sided sympathies, his clear mind and broad heart all give him real friends and strong admirers. And then his cause. We all cried. It touched the conscience, and will yet reach the pocketbook for Christian benevolence.

Promptly at 12 m. on Friday the convention closed with a united prayer of thankfulness and a petition of consecration for each life. Oklahoma is growing. Each year the work is seasoning for better service. The year to come is filled with promise. Her mile stone has been passed, the year lies ahead. With all her sister states this youngest one will try to bring in a great Centennial. O. L. Smith

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Joy at Akron, O.

It was my pleasure, on August 23, to participate in the "reopening services" at the Fourth Church of Christ, on Steiner avenue, Akron, Ohio. It was a happy day for the church, which has struggled so hard to reach its present prosperous condition. Under the wise leadership of William G. Loucks, who began work with the congregation about the beginning of the year, the congregation has increased its courage, the Bible school its membership, and every department of church work its enthusiasm. The meeting house has been newly painted and otherwise improved from basement to auditorium, the money all raised and the debts all provided for. Brother Loucks is working hard with hands and brain, and verily he will have his reward. The church lot, which is a good one in a growing part of the city, has been graded, walks placed and made presentable. A. S. Mottinger, of the High Street Church, has been an outside helper who is worthy of the thanks all give him. Brother Loucks has had the enthusiastic help of the members of the congregation, young and old, as he, vigorous as he has been, would have failed.

Hampshire District, W. Va.

The annual co-operative meeting of the Disciples of Christ in Hampshire district, West Virginia, was held at Mt. Zion church, in Hampshire county, eleven miles out from the county seat, Romney, August 20-23. Although it was at the time of the immense peach harvest, the brethren were present in large numbers at all the sessions. Sunday, August 23, was the high day of the meeting. In the morning W. B. Taylor, of Bethany College, spoke in the grove to a large audience on the question, "What Think Ye of the Christ?" In the afternoon, at the same place, Prof. E. W. McDiarmid delivered an address on Christian education. In the evening A. McLean gave one of his splendid missionary sermons. Fully 2,000 people were on the grounds that day. Good reports were read from thirteen co-operative churches. Brethren Johnson and Bilyeu, the evangelists, have done good work. They will continue in the field. They are planning to attend Bethany College during the winter. At the meeting money was raised to send these faithful young brethren to the Clarksburg state convention, September 15-18.

George F. Crites represented the state work and made several telling addresses. He is now in a meeting at Romney, with the purpose of starting a Church of Christ at that place. It is an important work of great difficulty. E. W. McDiarmid.

Beckley, W. Va.

Clark and Sturgis at Westville, Ind.

Westville's greatest meeting, and its only tent meeting by the Christian church, closed August 21, after nearly three weeks of earnest effort. The evangelists who led this work were H. H. Clark, of Salem, O., and J. E. Sturgis, of Butler, Ind., and the church is to-day rejoicing in the splendid work they did. The evangelists came highly recommended and they proved their ability to fulfill more than was promised. In this meeting the gospel had the best hearing it has had in this community for thirty years. There were 27 baptisms, two reinstated, one by statement from the Baptists (they having no congregation here), and one baptized who continues her membership in the M. E. church at Charleston, Ind. Brother Clark's lecture, "The Clay Cottage and the Angel Within," on the last night, was much appreciated.

We can most heartily recommend these brethren to any church wanting a meeting. They are earnest, godly, consecrated and successful evangelists. They leave us rejoicing and happy.

John H. Clark, Minister.

Moving Forward at Trenton, Mo.

We want you to know something about our onward move and rejoice with us. The grand old words, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," ring out from the life of more than 450 Disciples of Christ worshiping at this place; for never in the history of a church was there such a state of harmony and unanimity.

I have not the information of the past record of the church that I might give its history from the beginning, but have been told that T. P. Haley, a father in Israel to so many of us, organized this church something over forty years ago, [in the autumn of 1853.—Ed.]. If we could go back over the long period of history, doubtless this church would be numbered among the oldest in the state.

The present house of worship was completed in the year 1903, under the leadership of C. F. Stevens, who labored here six years. S. J. White followed Brother Stevens, serving the church two and one-half years. Much could be said of the good work done in the past, but it needs no eulogy, it has passed into history.

After Brother White left, the church was without a pastor for nearly six months. W. A. Shullenberger was called and took up the work the last of February, 1908. August 30 closed the first six months of his pastorate. It was "All Members' Day." It was our privilege to counsel together in regard to future plans and work, each department setting forth the work it intends to accomplish ere the close of the pastoral year; so the order of the day was to specialize—each department having a different aim. We hope to give you the desired result of these plans before March 1, 1909.

Brother Shullenberger was born in Pennsylvania, but Missouri claims him as one of her boys, since his parents moved to Maryville, Mo., when he was only two and a half years old. He is a graduate of Drake University of the class of 1904, and this is practically his third charge. He preaches the gospel fearlessly and in its fullness and a loving spirit.

The church is being added to daily, more than 50 have been received into the church in the six months. Every department is wide awake, and the fellowship is so sweet that we know that our interest in holy and heavenly things has been quickened.

Meeting and Dedication at Marble Falls, Texas.

The question, "Can a pastor do successful evangelizing?" has, in an individual case at least, been answered in the affirmative and with emphasis. Pastor John W. Kerns, of the First Christian Church of Carbondale, Ill., in deference to the solicitations of a member of the Central Christian Church at this place, who was, at one time, a member of the Carbondale church, came to Texas, held a ten days' meeting and formally dedicated the new church building here. The new building was barely complete in time for the dedicatory services. The congregation is not large or overwealthy, but has shown itself enterprising in a marked degree. The most that was hoped for by the sanguine, however, from the Kerns meeting, was that $1,000 would be raised or pledged. But the preacher was of another mind. He raised in half an hour nearly $1,500, thus covering all but $700 of the total amount needed, including seats and numerous other items not counted in the original estimate. People of all creeds and no creed attended the meetings, and filled the church at nearly all services, and large numbers unable to get in utilized the space around the large open windows.

W. A. Shullenberger.

The universal verdict here is that Pastor Kerns' sermons were never surpassed in this section. Nor can this be said to be a local verdict, for the vast number of tourists from various sections who are just now flocking to Marble Falls on account of the lake, mountains, cataracts and mineral springs, add their voice to the popular acclaim. The large number of additions to the church the ready concession by people of all beliefs that the discourses have been eminently uplifting, without partaking of the too frequent abusive style, are telling items.

The new granite church building is now ours and there is a strong sentiment to employ some good Hiram man for pastor, Brother Kerns being taken as a sample of the Hiram product. W. P. C.

Haddock at Brownwood.

J. L. Haddock has come and gone his second time. With his first coming he found a city of 8,000 people, with its full share of sectarian prejudice. He left after a six-weeks' siege, as one of God's conquering heroes. His second coming found a host of sympathizing friends, and a well-planned battle of silence among our religious neighbors. The meeting began with the anticipated interest and enthusiasm and was well sustained up to the close of the four weeks' service. By many this year is considered much greater than last year's effort, although the number of additions was not so great. There were 57 additions this year, with an influence that will be lasting, as Mr. Haddock had an opportunity to place the simple plea of the gospel before the people in a way that it can not be forgotten. The Sunday night audiences were estimated at 1,500 people. An analysis of the results of this year's meeting recalls some very interesting facts. Of the additions only five were under 16 years of age, five were between 16 and 21, the remaining number were all over 21 years of age. Of the 57, thirty-six were married; 20 husbands and wives formed ten united families in the Master's cause.

Our people feel that J. L. Haddock has been the right man in the right place, and we hope to have him again some time. He is pre-eminently a teacher, and our people are proud of him and the gospel sermons he has preached for us. We had over 180 additions during his two meetings. All the expenses of the meetings were met with the least effort, and $350 was pledged on the new tabernacle. Our pastor, John W. Smith, by his continued efforts and Christian character, has made this great work possible, and under his guidance we feel that the Brownwood church is a "live wire" at work in the Master's kingdom.

Christian Church, Brownwood, Texas.

Disciples at Winona.

"A meeting of the members of the Disciples church in attendance at the Bible conference was held at Bethany hall yesterday afternoon. Rev. A. B. Philputt, of Indianapolis, was chosen as chairman, and Rev. W. H. Smith, also of Indianapolis, as secretary. Throughout the meeting there was expressed a high appreciation of Winona as a place of rest, and its Bible conference as an inspirational uplift, and its interdenominational fellowship as a token of and force for Christian union. Of the thirty in attendance, 26 were ministers. Those present were: C. H. Winders, Miss Clara Shank, Mrs. W. H. Carter, A. I. Berninger, Matthew Small, Charles M. Fillmore, Samuel Buckner, all of Indianapolis; F. W. Burnham, Springfield, Ill.; J. E. Lynn, Warren, O.; L. H. Stine, Tipton; S. A. Harker, Parker; Mary Alice Johnson, Ladoga; George W. Sweeney, Chicago; Finis Idleman, Des Moines, Ia.; Miss India Burke, Chicago; H. S. Hale, Mayfield, Ky.; F. A. Wright, Erie, Pa.; G. E. Springer and T. W. Grafton, Anderson; M. D. Dudley, Paynesville, Mo., L. E. Brown, Lebanon; James Small and G. L. Reeves, Columbus; J. H. Craig, Logansport; Urban C. Brewer, Hall, Ind.; B W. Huntsman, Adrian, Mich.; H. E Sala, Westville, O.; John P. Sala, Elyria, Ohio."

The above appeared in the "Winona Assembly Reviw" of August 15. During the meeting a resolution was passed asking me to furnish our church papers with a notice of this meeting and to call attention to "Winona Lake" as a place where our people can spend a very pleasant and profitable vacation. Winona Lake is situated in the northern part of Indiana, about 125 miles north of Indianapolis and 100 miles east of Chicago The lake, fed by springs, is probably more than a mile square, and is surrounded by a beautiful and well kept park of several hundred acres. The "Bible conference," which lasts ten days, is the period of chief interest to ministers and church workers. No admission is charged during these ten days and room and board can be had for from $6 to $9 per week, making the stay inexpensive.

Among those who gave from three to five addresses during the Bible conference may be mentioned the names of W. L. Watkinson and Gipsy Smith, of England; F. W. Dawson and C. F. Aked, recently of England, but now of the United States; Dr. Mullins, of Louisville; C. L. Goodell, of New York, and Bishop Hartzell, of Africa, and many others not less distinguished as preachers or teachers. While I believe there were a good many Disciples in attendance who were not present at this meeting the number in attendance was far too small, as our people may very profitably attend at least the Bible conference. This does not mean that one will not hear things at this conference with which he will disagree. We all do this at our own meetings. But he will hear much here that will be instructive, inspiring and in every way helpful. The attendance at Winona from the ranks of the Disciples should, and I think will, greatly increase. C. H. Winders.

A Summer Meeting.

D. W. Moore, of Carthage, and the writer spent the month of August with old friends at Fayetteville, Ark. During the time we held a revival meeting at Baldwin, Brother Moore's former home. The meeting continued two weeks, and resulted in the organization of a church of sixty-three members. Most of these were conversions. B. R. Davidson, one of the best lawyers in Arkansas, and the superintendent of the Sunday-school in Fayetteville, was present when the new church was organized and made an admirable address. The meeting was remarkable for the number of young married people who were converted. A Sunday-school was begun and an Endeavor Society will be organized soon. A house of worship will be completed before the new year. N. M. Ragland.

Springfield, Mo.

Our Plea in the Forest.

The close of July and opening of August found us at Perry Hawkin, a little country church on the eastern shore of Maryland. The district is commonly known as the forest. The services were held in a grove, which added much to the interest and inspiration of the revival.

This part of Maryland has recently gone "dry." Many of the men who live under the shadow of these tall pines had furnished splendid arguments in their lives for the abolishment of liquor. After it was gone, paradoxically, it was still there. These same men found ways and lived, many of them, as shackled slaves of appetite. There were a dozen men on whom the church had claim that associated together for mutual support in mischief and meanness. Most of these were won at the meeting.

It was a blessed thing to see men who had not been living right to straighten up and start again with Jesus as a guide. One sister came by conviction from the Roman Catholic church. Standing by the river during the primitive baptismal service, she realized that obedience to Christ is the shortest road to true happiness. It was the first scriptural baptism she had ever seen. She could not contemplate the sight unmoved. It dampened her eyes and melted her heart. She soon surrendered.

At the last service of the meeting one was importuned not to turn away, as he so many times had, without confessing Jesus. The man was old and his beard, like that of Aaron, was long and white. The invitation song continued; two had stepped out and confessed Jesus. Another verse was sung, and then out from one of the rear benches walked the venerable old man, steadily but firmly, but straight he proceeded to the front, and there told the world of Christ and the love he had never before discovered. When this old man was baptized, two of his sons walked out, made the confession at the water's edge, and all were buried together with Christ.

Twenty-five came as a result of the meeting altogether, nineteen by baptism, two reclaimed and four from other sources. Two, possibly three, of the young men who came in at this service are expecting to enter the ministry. We found the parent who stood between the child and Christ at this meeting, too, one girl being sent out of the state to prevent her baptism.

There was a sad side to it all. Two young men who ought to have come did not. In the picture they sit in the boat; the earnest look of one can not be hid. Every sermon preached, every prayer, every hymn had these two in mind. One left the meeting and went away; the other kept coming on up to the last service. Then a special service was held for him alone with a little group of Christians in the home. He did not come. We talked to him; he said no. The last memory of the meeting is shrouded in his refusal. As we drove toward the depot he was asked once more if he would not confess. The horses were held, but he shook his head. All during the trip of many hours back to Baltimore, and through the days and nights since, the vision of that man standing back, shaking his head no, is ever present. How can a man say no to Jesus, the Savior of the world?

Annual Conference of Our English Churches.

The twenty-eighth annual conference of our churches in England was held at Lancaster, with our extreme northern church. It was certainly one of the best we have had. We have never been more cordially received by the ministers and churches of a town than we were at Lancaster. The most significant note of the entire series of meetings was that of Christian union. The subject was referred to over and over again, although only one brief address was down on the program bearing on the theme. Our feeble folk in this country have an influence in this direction far beyond what our numbers would warrant, and some of us feel that this is the field in which our work should be largely devoted in the future. The field is such that the propagation of our principles need not depend, exclusively, upon the multiplication of our churches as such.

We have suffered a slight loss in membership during the year, in common with almost every other religious body in the country. The reports from the various churches show a hopeful spirit, however, and several forward steps are sure to be taken during the coming year, both in local centers and in the general work.

The presence of several American brethren was appreciated, including Prof. B. C. Deweese and Hamilton and Garmong, evangelists.

The conference sermon was delivered by Dr. David Brook, of Southport, president of the National Free Church Council. The power of his message, which was on "The Print of the Nails," was in its simplicity. It went straight to the heart. Dr. Brook was entertained at luncheon, together with the ministers of the town, by our ministers in attendance at the conference, and a delightful fellowship was enjoyed. Our preachers conducted fourteen or fifteen services in the town on the Sunday preceding the conference, including a large open-air meeting in the evening, under the auspices of the Free Church Council.

The president for the year has been Eli Brearley, and he closed his year of office by delivering an excellent address on "The Present Position and Its Problem." The president-elect is Frank Coop, of Southport. This is the first time that any other than a preacher has occupied the position. Brother Coop will make the Centennial year a significent one, although it was with great reluctance that he accepted the post.

Texas Missions.

We—W. A. Boggess and the writer—closed a very pleasant and profitable meeting with the church at Memphis on Sunday night, August 23. There were twenty additions, as follows: Four confessions, six who had heretofore worked with the opposed-to-organs brethren, and ten who had been members elsewhere. We had a large hearing from the beginning to the end, all the churches of the town joining heartily in the services. Brother Boggess begins at Plainview on the fifth Sunday. I will spend a few days in Roswell, N. M., attending the territorial convention, and begin a meeting of fifteen days at McLean, Gray county, on September 6. We close the campaign with a meeting at Texline, which is to begin on the fourth Sunday in September. This has been a very pleasant and profitable summer spent campaigning in the Panhandle. Within three years we have started churches by co-operative effort at Melrose and Clovis, N. M., Farwell, Panhandle, Stratford, Texline, Lubbock, Happy, Tulia, Childress and Allenreed. New houses have been built at Clovis, Farwell, Stratford, Memphis and Childress. A new concrete foundation is completed at Lubbock, and the men with the hammer, saw and plane are now busy with the woodwork. M. M. Smith, the new minister, is on the ground, and will devote half his time to the work at Lubbock and also build up our cause in the regions round about. We have about completed a similar agreement with a new man at Plainview and two mission points near by. J. D. White, formerly of the "Sound" brethren, is located for full time at Canyon City. He is an intelligent and faithful gospel preacher, and will do good work. We have applications from two other able men from the "loyal ranks," who will do faithful service in the forward movement henceforth. We have had word from ten of these erstwhile "loyal brethren" who are convinced of the error of their way, either by reading or hearing the Mason-White debate or the Clark-McPherson discussion. These brethren all testify that our organized work had been misrepresented to them, and was therefore misunderstood by them. Let the good work go on. J. C. Mason.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Bentonville, Aug. 31.—Two additions at our regular meeting service yesterday. Our people rejoice, work earnestly and bravely go forward.—J. W. Ellis.

California.

Orange, Aug. 31.—There were four added during August—one by baptism and three by letter and statement. We have large audiences and the future is full of promise.—C. C. Bentley.

Colorado.

Fruita.—I concluded a tent meeting of six weeks' duration here, resulting in organizing a church of 100 members, 47 of whom I baptized, and the remaining 53 coming by letter or statement, reclaiming or from other bodies. A lot was provided for a new house, money pledged to inclose new building, and a good officiary of eight deacons and three elders chosen. There is a Bible class of over 70 people, and three young people volunteered for special work as a missionary, evangelistic singer and minister. I am to begin at Montrose, Colo., in a tent on September 8. There is no congregation, no music director, but I am hoping to find Romans 1:16 applying to that place as well as to all others where the gospel has been preached in love and faith.—Charles G. Stout, general evangelist, Des Moines.

Florida.

Madison, Sept. 2.—I closed a meeting at Mt. Zion, a small country church near Live Oak, Suwanee county, Florida, with five added by confession and baptism, one by relation and one was formerly a Baptist. The meeting lasted ten days. R. I. Hinely, of Lake Park, Ga., their much-esteemed regular minister, assisted in the meeting.—T. A. Cox.

Georgia.

Rutledge, Aug. 31.—Just closed a week's meeting with Reese Church, Morgan county, with two additions by baptism and one reclaimed. Two of these are heads of families.—E. Everett Hollingworth.

Illinois.

Eureka, Sept. 4.—Seventeen additions—six by baptism—at Ann Arbor, Mich., since last report.—A. C. Gray.

Auburn, Sept. 2.—Just closed a 16-days' meeting with the Pleasant Hill church, near Pawnee, Ill., with 12 additions—nine by confession and three by letter. Three had made the good confession at the regular meetings before, thus making 15 additions to the church since taking up the work. I was assisted in this meeting by my brother, Bruce. F. A. Sword will begin a meeting here the last of October.—Roley Nay.

Hoopeston, Sept. 2.—Three additions here since last report—all by letter.—Lewis R. Hotaling.

Centralia, Aug. 29.—I concluded a two-weeks' meeting at Donaho Prairie Church with 27 additions—23 by baptism. A reorganization of the church was effected.—J. F. Rosborough.

Flanagan, September—I assisted a few days in a meeting at Denver, Mo., led by Evangelist Cooper, of Grant City, Mo. There had already been several additions when I left. The congregation at Denver is not large, but they are all awake. I am now at Flanagan, singing in a meeting for John R. Golden.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

Iowa.

Perry, Sept. 2.—Seven added the last two Sundays—about 15 since last report—two by obedience, two from other religious bodies, the others by letter and statement. Have debt on church nearly raised, and hope to soon have a mortgage burning.—R. H. Ingram.

Indiana.

Thorntown, Aug. 30.—On August 23 we closed a series of revival meetings which continued for two weeks, with five added by confession and one by letter. We had the able assistance of Earl Wilfley, of Crawfordsville, who levies tribute upon all the graces of rare mental culture, literary charm and rhetorical training in his presentation of the gospel message.—Will H. Newlin, minister.

Ft. Wayne, Sept. 1.—On Aug. 16 the Third Church had four additions; on August 30, one addition. Bible school gaining all through vacation months. Organized a Christian Endeavor last evening. Our pastor, H. F. Stafford, is solving our problems.—Edward Shellaberger, clerk.

Kansas.

Sharon, Sept. 1.—Evangelist M. B. Ingle closed an 18-days' meeting at Hazelton, Kan., August 30, with 11 additions—two confessions, two from another church and the remainder by letter and statement. Miss Grace Merchant, of Alva, Okla., was soloist, and did her part well. This was a good meeting considering the hard field.—S. E. Hendrickson.

Homewood, Sept. 5.—Closed a meeting with 41 accessions in all—11 from the Baptists and four from other bodies—six by letter and statement, 20 by confession, one not baptized on account of parental restraint. L. W. Myers, of North Lawrence, did the preaching. He believes in the power of the old gospel and preaches it straight. The greatest meeting in Homewood in twenty years. Fred E. Lee, pastor, assisted by personal work and song service. The church was much strengthened. Such a meeting means much for a small church. Brother Myers came for the free-will offering and we found him a man of many talents.—W. E. M.

Kentucky.

Clintonville, Aug. 26.—We have had an excellent meeting here, with nine additions—eight by baptism. F. M. Tinder, of Lancaster, Ky., did the preaching, and Al Lamar Wills, of Lexington, conducted the singing.—Walter S. Willis.

Louisiana.

Lake Charles, Aug. 31.—Splendid audiences at both services yesterday, and the largest Sunday-school attendance we have had. There was one confession and one added by statement. We begin the Bible school rally next Sunday.—Otis Hawkins.

Missouri.

Canton, Aug. 31.—Our seventeen-days' meeting at Laclede closed with 23 additions—15 by confession, six by statement and two from the Baptists. We received two others by baptism that have not been reported.—E. W. Killion, minister.

Shelbyville, Aug. 31.—E. M. Smith, of Centralia, closed a three-weeks' meeting here. C. E. Wagoner, of Palmyra, led the singing. The results were nine confessions and baptisms and eight by letter and statement. The church has been strengthened spiritually. The evangelist and singer did very satisfactory work.—R. B. Havener, pastor.

Webb City, Aug. 31.—Five added since last report—three by confession and two by letter.—H. M. Barnett.

Marshall, Aug. 31.—Brother Herndon, of Centralia, closed a meeting at Salam Church, in Salem county. There were 12 additions—all by primary obedience. C. E. Burgess, of Columbia, preaches for the congregation.—J. M. Marksbury.

Richards, Aug. 31.—In a seven-days' meeting there were four confessions. It is a fine working congregation. We begin at Osceola September 2. We have open dates for January.—E. H. Williamson and wife.

Bucklin, Aug. 31.—I am here assisting A. Munyon in a meeting. There have been 18 additions. Violett and Charlton are to help us at Canton immediately after the election.—C. W. Buckner.

Kansas City, Sept. 1.—I just closed a meeting at Lewistown (my sixth for this church). There were 12 baptisms and three reclaimed. I am to begin a meeting at Steffenville September 7, and during the month of October have an engagement at Harristown, Ill. Churches desiring meetings after January address me at 3016 Euclid avenue, Kansas City.—C. L. Harbord, evangelist.

Laddonia, Sept. 3.—J. M. Rhodes, of Mexico, recently held a meeting for me at Friendship, in Callaway county. There were four by primary obedience and four by letter and statement. He is now holding us a meeting at Hayes Creek Church, in Ralls county. He is doing splendid preaching.—J. D. Greer.

Salisbury, Sept. 5.—We recently closed a short meeting at Keytesville. There were 29 added—21 by confession, six by statement and two from another religious body. O. J. Marks had charge of the music, doing his work well.—G. H. Bassett, minister.

Ozark, Sept. 3.—We closed a meeting at Nixa, which began August 14. There were 36 additions—28 being by primary obedience. M. Ward Ellis, of Richland, was leader of song and personal worker. He preached each Sunday morning.—Alden A. Wallace.

Booneville, Sept. 5.—I closed at two-weeks' meeting at Pilot Grove, and had nine baptisms. The church has been without preaching for several months. Under all the conditions this was a good meeting, the people being revived and hopeful. I will continue to preach there on Thursday nights until they secure a good man for their work. J. H. Bryan is to be with us to-night to start our Bible school rally. We hope to make this a Centennial Bible school. The rally will be followed by a meeting in November and V. E. Ridenour will assist me. Our work is steadily growing.—J. B. Weldon.

Denver, Sept. 3.—The church here is having a successful revival, led by Evangelist Cooper, of Grant City. Charles E. McVey, en route to Flannigan, Ill., stopped off for a few days to assist in the music.

Mayview, Sept. 8.—R. Tibbs Maxey and wife, of Des Moines, closed a meeting with 12 added—six by confession and baptism. The remainder were by letter, but were as great an acquisition, so far as the church is concerned, as were those by primary obedience. One young man has about decided to become a minister. The general work in the church goes on as usual. The parsonage is being improved at an expense of $250. After July 1, 1909, I am anxious to locate a man with this church and at Corder, where Brother Maxey will hold a meeting next week.—Arthur Downs, minister.

Corder, August 30.—We begin a meeting here to-day. It is a more promising field than Mayview, where we just closed. Arthur Downs, minister of both these churches, is loved by all. Many have said they dread to see the time come when he leaves to go to Drake University. D. G. Dungan, my former partner, will join me for another strong effort in evangelistic work during October. We want the best opportunity possible. We have been greatly blessed in the work together.—R. Tibbs Maxey.

Nebraska.

Grand Island, Aug. 25.—The Lockhart and Garmong meeting goes grandly on. The city is being stirred as never before.—James R. McIntire.

Table Rock, Aug. 31.—I preached here August 23, and administered the ordinance of baptism in a stream near by in the afternoon. I have accepted a call to the work. We have voted to have Harry G. Knowles for a meeting in November.—George N. Jacobs, Bethany, Neb.

Unadilla, Aug. 31.—In our meeting which closed yesterday, 56 people took a stand for Christ. There were 39 baptisms. W. Thompson was the evangelist and A. Ritchey, singer. We praise God for the victory.—M. G. E. Bennett.

Ohio.

Farmer, Aug. 30.—The revival here, led by I. H. Durfee and daughter, is increasing in power. There is some strong opposition.—Fred Rinkel.

Oklahoma.

Carney, Sept. 10.—William N. LeMay, of Enid, who has returned from a five-months' tour of the Holy Land, held a two-weeks' meeting for us here. There were 16 additions by primary obedience and four from other religious bodies. Among the former was the principal of our public schools, while her parents, who were members of another religious body, also joined us. The seed sown will produce good fruit in the future. Brother LeMay is an earnest contender for the faith once for all delivered, and preaches ably in the spirit of love. I have just received a letter from James Cage, former minister here, who is now serving the church at Crescent. It will be remembered he is the brother who received a terrible beating at the hands of an outlaw early in the summer. He gives me the good news that last Lord's day he received into the church there 42 souls—27 of them coming by primary obedience. This is remarkable, considering that Crescent is a town of only 700 population, and no protracted efforts were put forth, the people coming simply at the plain presentation of the gospel of redeeming love faithfully preached.—A. G. McGown.

Texas.

Paris, Aug. 31.—I spent my vacation in holding three short meetings in needy places. There were 41 additions in these meetings. Three have been added here recently.—J. T. Ogle.

Abilene, Sept. 1.—There were four added last Sunday—two by confession and two by statement and letter. Mrs. Morrison leaves this evening for St. Louis for additional treatment for our little girl—G. H. Morrison.

Dallas, Aug. 31.—Cephas Shelburne reports two additions and one confession Sunday. There were two baptisms on Wednesday, making ten additions since his last report, and a total of 25 since he took charge of the work at East Dallas. The Christian Endeavor societies have taken both banners from a city local Christian Endeavor union, in which ten or more societies are represented.

Marshall, Sept. 1.—We are in a great meeting conducted by J. O. Shelburne and Professor Knight. There are 2,000 present every night. This is the first time there has been a fair opportunity to hear our plea in Marshall. Professor Knight has a class of over 200 singers, and a Sunbeam chorus of sixty voices. No such meeting was ever held here before. We hope to give a full report later.—T. F. Weaver.

Virginia.

Roanoke, Sept. 1.—I have just closed a series of meetings at Piney Grove, three miles south of Roanoke City. There was a large attendance and much blessing. I found the church luke warm, with a membership of 57. But after 15 days' of labor we report 130 and a congregation days' of labor we report 130 and a congregation in good working order. There is a unanimous desire for me to become pastor, but my work seems to be evangelistic. I have had several meetings at other points which have been equally successful, especially that of River Mount, in Bedford county, where there were 35 conversions. Many are begging for an organization. At many places people are starving for want of attention.—T. A. Childress.

Eno, Aug. 31.—I closed a two-weeks' meeting at Salem Church yesterday. There were 20 baptisms and four reclaimed. The church was revived. B. H. Melton did the preaching at Forest Grove, where three were added—two by baptism and one from another religious body.—W. L. Burner.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

Over Half of Our Sunday-school Scholars Lost.

FACTS AND FIGURES LAID BEFORE THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' CONGRESS. WHAT CAN BE DONE FOR THESE.

(From an address by James B. Murray, delivered before the Sunday-school superintendents' congress at the recent twelfth triennial convention of the International Sunday-school Association.)

"'What is the true measure of success of the Sunday-school?' was asked the Sunday-school superintendents' congress, at the recent twelfth triennial convention of the International Sunday-School Association,—'Is it to teach the scholars about Christ, or to lead them to accept Christ?' Without a dissenting voice the reply came back, 'To lead them to accept Christ.'

"If the true measure of success of our Sunday-schools is to lead our scholars to accept Christ, let us consider for a few moments how far have our Sunday-schools attained their true measure of success?

"The report of the general secretary of the International Sunday-School Association shows that at present (1908) there are 13,515,498 Sunday-school scholars in the United States and in Canada in the forty-six associations reporting, or, to allow for all others, say about 14,000,000 in all; and that there were converted during the last three years 903,028 of them (who have joined the church) in the forty-six associations reporting, or, to allow for all others, perhaps as many as 1,000,000 in all (in order to give our Sunday-schools full credit for all work done). That is, during the last three years, there have been converted each year about 333,500 scholars, or about 2.38 per cent of the 14,000,000 in the Sunday-schools.

"This is a great improvement since the year 1902, six years ago, when the percentage was but 1.66 per cent a year. It is a gain of nearly 3-4 per cent annually, probably due in large measure to the increasing observance of decision day and to the increasing efforts now made to reach them before they leave the schools. But how about the rest of these 14,000,000 scholars?

"By collating the best authorities it appears that scholars begin to attend Sunday-school, on an average, at about the age of six years, and leave it, on an average, at about 14, and thus have, on an average, but about eight years of Sunday-school life. (In schools in which the organized Bible class has been introduced this average is increasing. But as the above report shows over 170,000 Sunday-schools and less than 1,700,—less than 1 per cent,—organized adult classes, it is evident that for the purpose of this computation, they do not greatly alter the result, except as a very important growing factor.)

"If the rate of conversion (2.38 per cent a year) should continue during the eight years that these scholars are likely to remain in the Sunday-schools, there would be converted about 2,667,000 (about 19 per cent) of them, before they leave. (Whether your school is above this average can be tested by counting all the scholars from 6 to 14, and then seeing whether or not over 19 per cent of them have joined the church).

"After they leave (at the average age of 14), during the six years from 14 to 20, conversions will still occur, though less frequently (as the favorable influences of the Sunday-schools would be lacking), and the rate would, of course, be less.

"In 1902, when the rate of conversions in the Sunday-school was 1.66 per cent, the rate after scholars left the Sunday-school, for these years from 14 to 20, was estimated at about 1 per cent per year; and as there is nothing to indicate any advance in that rate, if that rate be taken for these six years, 6 per cent more would be converted of these 14,000,000 scholars, that is about 780,000, making, with the 2,667,000 converted before the age of 14, a total of nearly 3,500,000 (or nearly 25 per cent) before they reach the age of 20.

"Statistics of conversions show that more are converted before the age of 20 than after. The figures for 1,000 conversions (as given by Mr. John R. Mott) are:

Under 20 years of age	548 or	54.8
Between 20 and 30	337 or	33.7
Between 30 and 40	96 or	9.6
Between 40 and 50	15 or	1.5
Between 50 and 60	3 or	.3
Between 60 and 90	1 or	.1
Totals	1,000	100

"We see, therefore, that while nearly 55 per cent are converted before the age of 20, during all the years after 20 there are converted but 45.2 per cent. These figures are believed to be very conservative, as a rising vote in Christian assemblages often shows about half or more are converted at or under the age of 16.

"Now, with less than 3,500,000 converted before 20, at the ratio of 54.8 per cent to 45.2 per cent, but about 2,886,861 (or about 20.62 per cent of them), would be converted after 20, making a total of less than 6,500,000 (less than 46 per cent) out of the whole 14,000,000 during the whole course of their lives.

"But what about the souls of the remaining seven and a half millions (over 54 per cent) of these 14,000,000 of our Sunday-school scholars, who, under present conditions, and if the present rates of conversions continue, are going down at the close of life to Christless graves and to face a Christless eternity?

"What a mighty host! What an awful spectacle!"

Can Nothing be Done to Save These?

"Let us examine the condition of these scholars. If you have ever asked any of them, you will find there is not one of them but expects at some time to become a Christian. All that stands between them and salvation is the difference between 'some time' and 'now.' If that 'some time' could be changed to 'now' they would all be saved.

"Next let us consider what the church is doing. Outside the Sunday-schools, in the outside world, she has evangelists for some and rescue missions and homes for others, and is spending hundreds of thousands, nay, millions of dollars every year in the effort to reach, with great expense, here and there a single perishing soul. And what is she doing for the scholars in her Sunday-schools? Here we find she is making comparatively almost no serious, organized, persistent effort to win them to Christ. Instead of doing this, she is permitting the great mass of them,—over four-fifths of them,—to drift out into the devil's territory of the world without the protecting shield and inspiration of a Christian life, there to fight a losing fight with temptation and sin, and become entangled in the devil's meshes before she seriously tries to win them. Then after sin has fastened its clutches upon them, she attempts with great effort and expense to reach them, but only succeeds in getting here and there one.

"Is this wise? Is it right?

"If a farmer has four fields, one of which will yield 55 bushels of wheat to the acre, one 33, one 10, and one 2, is it good farming to lay out his efforts on the 33, 10 and 2 bushel fields, and let the 55 bushel field go uncultivated,—getting from it only its volunteer crop? Would it not be better husbandry to cultivate the 55 bushel field thoroughly, and put the balance of his labor on the poorer fields?

"If Niagara were full of poor wretches being swept on to the falls, and a small steamer were sent out to save them, would it be wise for her to approach as near the brink as possible, and there put out a long hawser,—forming such a drag as to almost use up her power,—in order to rescue here and there one of the poor souls being carried over, or to go higher up stream in stiller water, where, with her hawser, she can sweep them in by the thousand to the shore?

"Is there any difference in the value of souls? Is a child's soul less valuable than that of an adult? Is it not rather more valuable, because of a longer life of service? If adult souls are not more valuable, why ought not the church to turn her efforts to saving first the children?

"But is it right for the church thus to neglect her Sunday-school scholars? Are not these Sunday-school scholars her wards, placed in her hands and under her guardianship, and entrusted to her tutelage and care? Is it right for her to permit them to go out into life and into an unequal fight with the devil, without having exhausted every effort to provide them with the only possible means of success,—the only possible foundation of victory?

"If but a tithe of the effort, time and expense that the church is laying out upon the outside world were spent in bringing her own children to Christ, they all might be won. And if won, would not this solve the question of 'How to reach the men?' and 'How to reach the masses?' and with half the coming generation Christians, why could not a large portion of the remaining half be swept into our Sunday-schools, and thus in the next generation this nation be substantially won for Christ?"

What Methods and Means Can We Use to Save Them?

But what can be done to save these myriads of perishing souls of our other Sunday-school scholars? What means can we use to reach them?

First. Have Decision day twice a year for all the schools (except where conditions render this undesirable), with Decision day or any other day for individual scholars as opportunity may offer. (A very slight introduction of Decision day in New York state much more than doubled the rate of conversions in one year—from 12,295 in 1900 to 29,008 in 1901. See reports of New York Sunday-school Association.)

Second. Prepare carefully for some time in advance of each Decision day, by the united prayers of the teachers, parents, superintendents and minister; by simple addresses to the scholars by the minister and superintendent, and, if desirable and possible, also by some conservative evangelist, if thought best, and by giving the scholars a week or more notice of it, but without mentioning the precise day. In New York an evangelist has recently been added to the force of the New York State Sunday-school Association, with the result that 1,000 additional scholars are believed to have been won for Christ in the last four months. But while inviting them, do not urge them to accept, as the decision should be that of the child's own mind, of and by itself, and not a mere assent uttered at the request or on the urging of some one else.

Third. The most effective measure, and one which would most effectively do the work, is to teach and lead the teachers themselves to become soul-winners (for if all the teachers were soul-winners, all the scholars would be personally spoken to and worked with). That this is not an easy undertaking is conceded, but it is believed it can be accomplished by, first, laying upon the hearts of the teachers the burden for these unsaved scholars that is now upon your own, as an incentive to action, and then forming in each Sunday-school a Personal Worker's class (not to take the place of the teacher training class, but as a supplement to it), to meet once a week for ten or twelve weeks, composed of such of them as are willing (all probably would be, but putting it in this way avoids all seeming compulsion), and also all other Christian workers in the church who would join, and then putting in their hands, weekly in advance, for prior study:

1. The precise requirements God asks of a seeking heart before that heart can be born again; with each requirement supported by at least one verse of scripture.

2. Next, a simple method of presenting these indispensable requirements to a seeking soul, i. e., of pointing that soul to Christ (to be used tactfully with different ones, as scholars' natures and temperaments vary.)

3. Then a few hints as to how to lead a procrastinating soul to seek Christ now (supporting both these last with illustrations). For, as has been said, if the scholars will change their "sometime" to "now" practically all of them will be won.

4. After that, take the teachers out into actual personal work, where they can see practical examples of the use of the foregoing in actual work.

5. Then, a brief statement of the personal preparation needed by every would-be soul-winner (the actual steps necessary are perhaps best set forth in Rev. R. A. Torrey's booklet, entitled, "The Holy Spirit; How to Obtain Him in Personal Experience"); and later lead them to take this step, and make the absolute self-surrender to let the great Helper—the only Worker (John 3:5)—take complete possession of them and work through them, for without him they can do nothing.

Ought not every teacher of souls in our Sunday-schools to know how to point a soul seeking Christ to him?

Fourth. After completing the above course, hold weekly teachers' meetings, led by the minister and superintendent, to

(a) Pray for self-preparation.

(b) Pray for the souls of their unsaved scholars.

(c) Learn how best to teach and apply that week's lesson in its relation to Christ and personal salvation.

Fifth. Nurture. After conversion young converts should, of course, be nurtured in a separate class by the minister, superintendent or some other competent teacher. This is probably the weakest part at present in most of the efforts made to save our scholars.

If the foregoing steps are taken and persistently continued, it is believed that almost all the scholars in our school can and will be won, and that our Sunday-schools will thereby attain to their true measure of success.

The Right Spirit.

We recently celebrated the close of the three months' contest between the two schools at Chester and Belvidere, Neb. We Chesterites won. Our friends at the stations joined in the chorus of songs that were sung en route. On our arrival at Belvidere about twenty carriages were in waiting to convey "the old folks" to the beautiful picnic grounds on the banks of the Big Sandy, about half a mile from the station. The Belvidere school, under the superintendent, G. R. Dill, distinguished themselves in their hospitality and ability to entertain. They provided their visitors a splendid dinner. In the afternoon the usual sports were indulged in and the two pastors, C. F. Rose and C. E. Cobbey, made a great hit in their acrobatic feats.

Our Bible school at Lamonte, Mo. has four regularly organized Bible classes.

The International Sunday-School Association of Pettis County met with it and H. H. Pearce, minister at Lamonte, reports that all were much benefited. The Teacher training class recently gave an open session at which time the public had an opportunity to hear the drill questions answered. The second quarter's examination has been held.

GREAT ENDINGS TO GOOD LIVES.

Topic for September 16: John 17:4; Acts 7:54-60; 2 Tim. 4:6-8.

"I have glorified thee on earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." Thus the Christ lived. He came not to do his own will, but the will of the Father who sent him. Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered, and being made perfect he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him. He became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. His death was the fitting end of a life of perfect self-giving. He laid down his own life. He gave himself up freely for us all. The glory of the Christ's life and of his death is that he gave himself without reservation. He entered into his glory through the giving up of self, thus teaching us the truth of his own saying: "He that will save his life shall lose it; but he that giveth his life for my sake shall find it and shall keep it unto life eternal." This principle holds through all the great lives of the ages. Those who have served others with unselfish devotion, despite all gainsaying and all misfortunes and all misanthropies, somehow are remembered, while the memory of the wicked perishes. Abraham, Moses, Christ, Paul, are the divine demonstration of the fact in history. And what is true in Bible history is true in the records of the race. "He that will be greatest among you, let him become the servant of all," the Master said to his disciples who strove among themselves as to who should be the greatest in the kingdom of heaven. And it is true in the world, though Christ's kingdom be not of this world. There have been unnumbered humble good who never were known outside their own community. But those who have risen to abiding greatness, even as this world measures greatness, have been found to possess something of real goodness. The good are the immortal, even on the pages of history. "The memory of the just is blessed." And the death of his saints is precious in his sight.

Not all the heroes have died upon the battlefield. The death of Stephen is as heroic as that of the bravest warrior that ever died on the field of battle. Courage of the rarest sort is shown in his speech. He fronted the enemies of the Christ with words that fairly flame. His was the old-fashioned faith that rested hard upon the word of the Lord. The history of Israel was to him an illuminating illustration of God's dealings with his people. He uses great plainness, even bluntness of speech. He spake as the Holy Spirit gave him utterance. And while he thus spake, being full of the Holy Spirit, he looked up steadfastly into heaven and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. Few have caught such a vision. Few have died such a triumphant death. Stephen was a humble man, who was made great by humble service and immortal by a death that was glorified by its likeness to that of the Christ whom he served. "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge" is the final farewell of one who had not only caught a vision of Jesus through the gateway of glory in the skies but had caught the breath of his spirit in his life. He died, like his Master, with forgiveness on his lips. And such a death is great, whatever the suffering or the shame.

The departure of Paul is set about with the halo of hope in the midst of a Roman prison, the gloom of which could not shut out the glory of the Presence of the Lord who stood by him in the midst of his abundant labors and manifold persecutions. The shout of triumph is in his final charge to the young man, Timothy. "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith, I have finished my course. Henceforth"—and his thought sweeps the summits of faith and grasps the guerdon of victory, beholding the crown of life; yea, more, the "Crown of Righteousness," the symbol of life well lived and of victory worthily won. Nor was he selfish in his death who was unselfish in his life. "Not to me only, but to all them also that love his appearing." And so the life of the great apostle went out in a flame of faith that has lighted a pathway to the skies for millions since that day.

Country Churches—Another View.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I was much interested in the number of "The Christian-Evangelist" of August 20.

The symposium on "our country churches" reveals many interesting features. I would not have you think that you made a mistake in not asking me to answer some of those hard questions. But my fifteen years of "country riding" in three sections of our great state of Ohio has taught me a few lessons on the present needs of our rural work.

I give you one example of a real country church. I was called to preach for a congregation in Central Ohio. The work was in rather a rundown condition. The house was old-fashioned, with the pulpit between the doors, and the plaster on the ceiling hung ready to fall at any moment. The people were discouraged. They said: "We are ruined by the removal of our best members to the city." And so it looked. I said to the elders, "Are not the houses all occupied?" He answered that they were, but they were not Christians. Said I, "Then that is our work."

We went at it and remodeled the house. We nearly doubled the value of the church property, dedicated free of debt, held a meeting with some 30 additions and thus set the work going for good. Well, what of it? It was just a country church, a country preacher and a country meeting, and no notice was taken of it.

Suppose I had gone to a town church with a membership of 500? I double the value of a ten thousand dollar church and hold a meeting with 125 additions. The people everywhere would take up the cry, "A rising evangelist." I receive a note from the "Christian Standard" and one from "The Christian-Evangelist" requesting photo and a report of the meeting from the standpoint of the evangelist; from the standpoint of the singer, and as viewed by the church.

Yes, it was a great work. But I have done no more than I did over at that country chapel, and did it at much less sacrifice. Well, we are all mortal.

The foregoing is no exaggeration. I have duplicated that work several times myself, and know of many others who have done the same, or a little better. What a sensation it would make if a country preacher were put on a state or national program, or on an important committee!

Our country churches, however, are doing quite as well as our country stores and our country schools. They are likely to continue to be feeders of the city churches.

A few years ago I had the honor of graduating the second best training class in the State Sunday-school Association. That was before the teacher training craze, too; and in a country church. That school had a superintendent and a corps of teachers who, without an exception, held diplomas from the international association. We didn't think though it was worth mentioning. They have a training class now of thirty members.

There was another interesting feature about that country work. I held another meeting a year after and thought I would take a glance at the audience and see how many of the converts of a year ago were present. What do you think? Every one of them right in their seat. Remarkable! But it just shows the solidity of the country work. Similar work is being done elsewhere. Only it is in the country and you don't notice it. Yes, and I held three or four meetings in the four years ministry there and the church just swelled the missionary offerings and women kept coming into the church until nearly everybody in the neighborhood was in the church.

A nearby city church about the same time called a pastor from another town and paid him $35 per week and furnished him a singer at a cost of $20 per week. The church had a membership of 800 and a large Bible school. Well, with the aid of competent pastor and a well organized church there were 100 accessions. A great meeting! Truly. And that evangelist was called to the pastorate of a large church.

Some 75 per cent of the people who united with the church in that meeting came directly and indirectly from the surrounding country churches.

After four years' of ministry that was so strikingly successful I no doubt had inviting calls to the town and city. Don't think it. It had not even put me in line for promotion. "He's just a country preacher."

Would I advise a young preacher just from college to take up a country work? In a general way I would answer, no. Our colleges train a boy away from the country. The average young preacher falls under a country charge. If one desires to make the country a life study and a life work he can fit himself for such a work in the post-graduate course of experience. The average farmer can have no respect for a preacher who doesn't know a pumpkin vine from a morning glory, even if he is good at a Greek exegesis. A country church demands a pure gospel, and looks more closely to incorrect scripture quotations than to errors of grammar or rhetoric.

The country is now better educated and demands a higher class of ministry. Our country churches are ministered unto by a noble class of men. Though their salaries range from $400 to $800 a year, they usually pay their bills as they go and are making light demands on our relief fund.

Let me say in conclusion that the country preacher is not receiving due notice in our organized work. The church in general and not the preacher is the sufferer.

I do not write this in the spirit of criticism, but rather to emphasize another phase of the subject.

After All.

We take our share of fretting,
Or grieving and forgetting;
The paths are often rough and steep, and heedless feet may fall.
But yet the days are cheery,
And night brings rest when weary,
And somehow this old planet is a good world, after all.

Though sharp may be our trouble,
The joys are more than double.
The brave outrank the cowards, and the leal are like a wall
To guard their dearest ever,
To fail the feeblest never;
And somehow this old earth remains a bright world, after all.

There's always love that's caring,
And shielding and forbearing,
Dear woman's love to hold us close and keep our hearts in thrall;
There's home to share together
In calm or stormy weather,
And while the heart-flame burns it is a good world, after all.

The lisp of children's voices,
The chance of happy choices,
The bugle sounds of hope and faith through fogs and mists that call;
The heaven that stretches o'er us,
The better days before us,
They all unite to make this earth a good world, after all.

The Broken Buckle.

It is related of a hero in Scottish history, that, when an overwhelming force was in full pursuit, and all his followers were urging him to more rapid flight, he coolly dismounted, in order to repair a flaw in his horse's harness. While busied with the broken buckle, the distant cloud swept down in nearer thunder, but just as the prancing hoofs and eager spears were ready to dash down on him, the flaw was mended, the clasp fastened, the steed mounted, and, like a sweeping falcon, he vanished from their view. The broken buckle would have left him in the field an inglorious prisoner; the timely delay sent him in safety to his huzzaing comrades. There is in daily life the same luckless precipitancy, and the same profitable delay. The man who, from his prayerless waking, bounces off into the business of the day, however good his talents and great his diligence, is only galloping on a steed harnessed with a broken buckle, and must not be astonished if, in his hottest haste, his most hazardous leap, he be left ingloriously in the dust.—Selected.

Love and Old Age.

We forget that the inward craving of old age conceives of no analogies and knows no reason why the old-time cares and fondling should be things of the past. It transmutes everything into neglect. Age softens the heart, and the soul pines for the touch of the hand that would stroke the golden locks of a prattling child. Let's love them more than by mere sentiment! What would we do without these saints?

Impregnable Castles.

It is not enough to put on a bold face and try to look brave. There is little good in saying, "There is no danger," when we know well that there is danger. Our Lord did not give peace to his disciples by telling them that it would always be smooth sailing for them. He gave peace by assuring them of the unfailing divine presence in times of peril. He said: "In the world ye shall have tribulations; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

One beautifully says: "The forests in summer days are full of birds' nests. They are hidden among the leaves. The little birds know where they are; and when a storm arises, or when night draws on, they fly each to his own nest. So the promises of God are hidden in the Bible, like nests in the great forests; and thither we should fly in any danger or alarm, hiding there in our soul's nest until the storms be overpast. There are no castles in this world so impregnable as the words of Christ."—Onward.

Chide your soul little; cheer it much. Cheer it with thoughts and words and actions of a wise, humane, noble and heavenly sort. Fret not against nor brood over the limitations of your lot, but consider its divine possibilities. What you can do, let that have your heart and mind and strength. —Nicholas E. Boyd.

Dead Memories.

"She has a book all full of dried leaves and pressed flowers from ever so many places and folks," explained little Grace after a visit to an older girl. "They're 'sacred memories,' she said so, but she's forgotten what most of 'em are about now." There are a great many so-called sacred memories that are very much of that order—dead flowers and withered leaves pressed between life's pages, bits of the past that have lost their meaning and only encumber the book. Life would be a stronger, freer, more useful thing to many of us if we did not hold fast to so many traditions and customs that have lost all present value, but which are dragged along day by day under the impression that age has made them sacred.—Forward.

The Head-Hunters of Borneo.

The "head-hunting" propensities of the Dyaks are well known to the students of ethnology. The leading thought in the taking of heads is the idea that the conqueror should secure the "soul" of the conquered and add it to his own, increasing thereby his courage and strength, and consequently his reputation as a hero, as long as the head of the victim remained in his possession. It is, therefore, the custom of the people, after battle, to wrap the severed heads in a loose crate of rattan, and smoke them over a fire of damp wood and leaves. Then they hang the ghastly trophies in the houses in bundles having an uncanny resemblance to gigantic clusters of grapes, each head forming a berry. These war trophies are considered by the Dyaks their most sacred possessions, and are guarded with the utmost jealousy and vigilance. Their loss would mean not only a considerable decrease of personal prestige, but also the loss of a part of the "soul," that is of courage and strength.

I have often had the questionable privilege of sitting under the bundles of heads in the Dyak houses as the seat of honor, and of examining them closely. Anakoda Unsang, who claimed to be my friend, was not a talkative man, but, when roused from his usual stolidity, would relate the circumstances of many a battle and victory in the past with apparent gusto, not unwilling to declare his courage and reputed invulnerability.—H. L. E. Luering, in the London "Christian."

If You Want to be Loved

Don't contradict people, even if you're sure you are right.

Don't be inquisitive about the affairs of even your most intimate friend.

Don't underrate anything because you don't possess it.

Don't believe that everybody else in the world is happier than you.

Don't conclude that you have never had any opportunities in life.

Don't be rude to your inferiors in social position.

Don't repeat gossip, even if it does interest a crowd.

Learn to hide your aches and pains under a pleasant smile. Few care whether you have the earache, headache or rheumatism.

Learn to attend to your own business—a very important point.

Do not try to be anything else but a gentleman or gentlewoman, and that means one who has consideration for the whole world, and whose life is governed by the Golden Rule: "Do unto others as you would be done by."—The Parish Visitor.

The Humdrum News.

The "American Humdrum News" should be the most widely read paper in all the country. Did you ever see a copy? No—nor I—but just glance with me in imagination over the pages of one issue, just at the headings, if you please:

First Column Heading—10,000 Bank Cashiers have done their work faithfully for periods ranging from ten to twenty-five years.

Second Column Heading—100,000 Ministers of the Gospel are not scoundrels—they have labored all their lives with tireless unselfishness, faithful to their trusts, faithful to their wives, faithful to their God.

Three-Column Large Type Heading—Twenty Million Married Couples in this country were not divorced this year.

Smaller Headings:

Five Million Laborers kept sober last year.

Most women are good women.

Eighty Million Citizens have not committed suicide.

Ten Million People made railroad trips in safety last week.

Would we buy the "Humdrum News"? No, we wouldn't—we would believe in it, of course; we might even rejoice in it; but pay our good money for it—never!

But there is one thing that we can all learn from this never-to-be-published paper, to-wit: The front page of the modern newspaper does not reflect the real conditions of modern life. The reason why the news in the daily press is a record of crime and misconduct is because it is the one case in a thousand. In small type and in obscure corners, if at all, is the record of Humdrum Life—the life that you and I and the great majority of our fellows are doing our best to live.—Exchange.

THE GRAY-HAIRED BLOCK

The Story of a Novel Idea — By WILLIAM H. HAMBY

"Well, Major," I asked as we sat down to luncheon, "did you ever get rid of that hundred thousand? You remember that when I was here the last time you had a hundred thousand dollars you wanted to give away, and were worrying over how to do it?"

"I did not give it away, after all," he said with a smile that I always loved to see, it meant so many things to follow. "No, I invested it. I will show you after luncheon."

As I knew the Major always did his showing before his talking, I curbed my curiosity, and talked about other things.

"I believe we will walk," he said as we went through the gate; "it is only a few blocks."

"There it is," he said as we approached the business section of the town. The building to which he pointed was a handsome three-story structure covering an entire block. On the stone tablet over the high arched door at the main entrance I read, "Speed Block." On a sign which projected from the third story was "Speed Hotel." The Major's name was also on every business sign I noticed along the block.

As we entered, a very old, grayhaired man opened the door for us, and greeted the Major with an affectionate smile.

In the elevator the white-haired boy in charge—he must have been more than seventy—greeted the Major in a way that somehow gave me a queer sensation at the heart.

We began at the hotel on the third floor. The clerk came from behind his desk to shake hands with the Major.

"How are you, Uncle Johnny?" Mr. Speed asked. "How is the hotel?"

"Fine, fine," replied the gray-bearded clerk. And I noticed the old fellow held his hand until the Major released it.

It was a first-class hotel, and well kept. The manager was a fine old fellow of sixty-five, who formerly managed a large hotel in Denver. The cooks, waiters, bellboys, everybody about the place, showed signs of at least threescore years of experience.

On the second floor we went through tailor-shops broom-factory, shoe-shops, printing-office, and many other busy rooms. And everywhere it was gray heads that bent over the tasks, but somehow the load of drudgery had been lifted from the work. Their faces were bright, and the spirit of the place seemed unusually jolly. Every now and then we caught snatches of song and laughter as we went down the halls.

Everywhere at our approach the faces turned to the Major were filled with that peculiarly affectionate look I had seen in the old doorkeeper's eyes, and there was a note in their greeting that unaccountably contracted the muscles in my throat.

On the ground floor were stores and shops of various kinds—clothing-stores, shoe-stores, dry-goods stores, grocery-stores, fruit-stand, news-stnd, boot-blacking-stand, barber-shop, and many others were included in the block; and in all of them were old men as clerks and managers.

In the best corner of the block was a bank. As we entered, the cashier looked up over his glasses, and hastily put his hand through the window.

"Well, well, Major, I'm glad to see you. It has been several days since you have been around."

The bookkeepers all lifted their gray heads from over their ledgers, and turned happy faces toward the proprietor. It was not the usual look worn when the "boss" comes in, but rather the expression of happy children when a favorite uncle comes home.

"Well, well," I exclaimed when we were on the street again, "it seems to be a remarkably well-kept institution from top to bottom; but where did you get that collection of gray-beards? I never saw anything like it."

The Major laughed. "There are only two men in the whole block under fifty-five. In town they call it the 'Gray-haired Block.'"

The Major had business to see after, and not until twilight, as we sat on his porch, did he tell me the story.

"That hundred thousand that I wanted to give away worried me more than any money I ever had.

"Doubtless many people would think it easy to give away money. It is easy to throw it away, but I tell you it is exceedingly difficult to spend money for the good of others and get value received.

"For months I studied over ways and means to get rid of that hundred thousand which I felt belonged to the public good. As I have often remarked before, it seems to me the poorest sort of help to wait until a man has lost all that is worth keeping before you assist him.

"The help that counts for both the man and society is that which saves his self-respect and keeps him at work.

"It was from Lightner I finally got my idea.

"I came home one evening, and found my wife had been crying, and knew there was something wrong with some of the neighbors. I think she carries fully half of all the joys and troubles of this end of town.

"What is it, Mary?" I asked.

"'The Lightners,' she answered simply, her lips quivering. 'I don't know what will become of them.'

"What is the matter?" I asked anxiously, for they were our near neighbors and very good friends. 'He hasn't lost his job?'

"'Yes,' she answered, putting her handkerchief to her eyes. 'Poor Mrs. Lightner is nearly killed. What will they do?'

"It was a problem. Lightner had been bookkeeper in the Third National Bank for thirty years. In the early days they scrimped and saved enough from his salary to pay for their home,—it is that pretty cottage on the corner across there,—but not a cent more had they saved or could they save. There were no children upon whom they could depend, no rich relatives. And I knew very well that a bookkeeper who loses his job at sixty-five has lost it for life.

"I worried about them a good deal, but I could not for the life of me see any way out. He was not qualified for any other position, and of course he could not earn wages at manual labor.

"I watched the old fellow go by every morning, his head held up with an effort that took both grit and will power. I knew he was hunting work.

"I saw him come home every evening, his head bent forward, and knew he had not found it.

"One evening about three months later I saw him come home early with the most dejected look I ever saw on a man's face. I learned later that he had been refused credit at the grocery-store—the first time in his life.

"The next day Mary said she was sure they were trying to sell their home. She had seen two or three real-estate agents looking around the place.

"That evening I went over to see Lightner, although for the life of me I could not think what I should say or what I could offer. Still, I felt they must be helped someway.

"They received me with the same friendly courtesy I had always known in their home; but there was a restraint, the restraint of trouble. Lightner's eyes wandered frequently from mine, and he several times dropped the thread of conversation. The wife gazed most of the time through the window at her rose hedge now in full bloom; and several times she turned her face away, and I fancied that she was surreptitiously wiping her eyes.

"'Jeems,' I said blunderingly, 'I am sorry about your job. Is there anything that can be done about it?'

"'No, no, Mr. Speed, thank you, no,' he answered. 'There is nothing to be done.' And then added pathetically, 'I'm just down and out.'

"'O, no,' I protested, 'you are good for many years yet.'

"'Yes, yes,' he said, 'that is the worst of it. I am still able to work, but not able to earn. My pride and self-respect and love of life are as strong as ever, but there is no way left for me to earn a living; that is what hurts. We shall have to sell the place and rent a cheap one; and then, when the money is gone—well, I don't know, I don't know.'

"'Jeems,' I said, an idea coming to me suddenly, 'I am going to start a small bank myself, and should like to have you act as cashier, if you will.'

"'You don't mean it, Mr. Speed, you don't mean it,' he exclaimed, jumping up excitedly.

"'Certainly,' I said, 'and mighty lucky I shall be to get you.'

"He gripped my hand until it hurt, and I am not sure we both did not cry a little as the dear old wife sobbed with the joy of relief.

"After I went home the idea began to grow. There was a fine old architect whom I knew, who had recently lost his job with a construction company on account of his age.

"He was the proudest man you ever saw when I commissioned him to plan a building to cover a whole block.

"We employed old bricklayers, plasterers, carpenters, hod-carriers, and all, and paid them for what they could do.

"While the work was going forward, I made Lightner my special agent; and together we gathered our force from the gray but efficient ranks of those who had come to the end of their jobs before the end of their strength.

"We started a shop or business to fit pretty nearly each of them, and pay them according to what they can do. They are happy in their work, for they know that coming age casts no shadow over their jobs.

"I wish you could have seen some of them when they finally realized that we were offering them work and salary such as they used to have. Poor old fellows who had almost lost all hope—their eyes would suddenly grow bright, and they would grip my hand and tell me how much they could do and how faithful they would be.

"There are more now than we have places for, but we put them on the waiting list, and they act as substitutes. When one of the workers is sick, a substitute takes his place, and gives the sick one half his wages."

"How long," I asked, "do you think your hundred thousand will keep this thing running?"

"How long?" he echoed, "Why, man, the thing is paying 6 per cent, and we are getting ready to build another."—Christian Endeavor World.

THE THINGS THAT MUST BE DONE.

A busy woman was once asked how, with all her domestic duties, she could find time to carry on an important work.

She hesitated and looked surprised. Evidently it had never occurred to her that there was anything remarkable about a woman's combining public and private work. After a moment's thought, she said:

"Well, you know there are certain things that must be done. I put my public work in the list of things that must be done, and somehow I manage to do it."

"Certain things that must be done!" Here is the secret of all the world's successes.

The people who achieve are not people of leisure. They are people who have a fine sense of the relative value of things, and who know what things have to be done and what may safely be left undone.

Catherine Booth reared a large family of very remarkable children, and yet found time to be a leader in the Salvation Army.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton was an admirable housekeeper and a devoted mother to her seven children, but she found time to think, study, write and lecture as one of the leaders of a great reform movement.

When Harriet Beecher Stowe was writing "Uncle Tom's Cabin," she had her domestic work to do; several students boarded with her, and two or three small children complicated her domestic problem. She put the writing of her book among the things that must be done, and it was done.

On the other hand, there were many things these women never found time to do. I do not suppose that Catherine Booth ever had leisure to make ice cream, chocolate cake, angel food, and chicken salad for a church supper. I can not imagine her spending a week dressing dolls for a church bazar. To her these were things that need not be done.

I do not believe that Mrs. Stanton ever gave a dinner party with nine courses, or consecrated a day in every week for making fashionable calls. These things she thought could be left undone; but the advancement and development of the race through the advancement and development of woman, this was a work that must be done, and she found time to do her share of it.—The Morning Star.

Dr. Campbell Morgan tells of some answers given by a little girl in an examination at his own church after a course of Bible studies which he had conducted. She defined the difference between a "pastor" and an "evangelist" by saying: "A pastor is like a fixed star, he is always there. An evangelist is like a comet, he comes and goes. Our pastor," she added naively, "is more like an evangelist."

THREE RULES FOR HAPPINESS.

Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, known and beloved as the President of Wellesley College, was wont to devote part of her time each week to the very poor children found in a vacation school in Boston. On one occasion Mrs. Palmer talked to them on how to be happy, and gave them three rules to follow. In her husband's biography, which has just been issued ("Life of Alice Freeman Palmer," Houghton, Mifflin & Co.), is given Mrs. Palmer's story of one little girl who tried to follow the three rules given her.

"One July morning," wrote Mrs. Palmer, "I took an early train. It was a day that gave promise of being very, very hot even in the country, and what in the city! When I reached my destination, I found a great many girls in the room, but more babies than girls, it seemed. Each girl was holding one, and there were a few to spare. 'Now,' I said, 'what shall I talk to you about this morning, girls?' 'Talk about life,' said one girl. Imagine! 'I am afraid that it too big a subject for such a short time,' I said.

"Then up spoke a small, pale-faced, heavy-eyed child with a great, fat baby on her knee: 'Tell us how to be happy!' . . . And the rest took up the word, and echoed: 'Yes, tell us how to be happy.'

"'Well,' I said, 'I will give you my three rules for being happy; but, mind, you must all promise to keep them for a week and not to skip a single day.' So they all faithfully and solemnly promised that they wouldn't skip a single day.

"'The first rule is that you will commit something to memory every day—something good. It needn't be much; three or four words will do—just a pretty bit of a poem or a Bible verse. Do you understand?' I was so afraid they wouldn't, but one little girl with flashing black eyes jumped up from the corner of the room and cried: 'I know; you want us to learn something we'd be glad to remember if we went blind.' 'That's it exactly!' I said; 'something you would like to remember if you went blind.' And they all promised that they would, and not skip a single day.

"'The second rule is: Look for something pretty every day; and don't skip a day, or it won't work. A lear, a flower, a cloud—you can all find something. Isn't there a park somewhere near here that you can all walk to?' (Yes, there was one.) 'And stop long enough before the pretty thing that you have spied to say: "Isn't it beautiful?" Drink in every detail and see the loveliness all through. Can you do it?' They promised, to a girl.

"'My third rule—now, mind, don't skip a day—do something for somebody every day.' 'O, that's easy!' they said, though I thought it would be the hardest thing of all. Just think, that is what those children said—'O, that's easy!' 'Didn't they have to tend babies and run errands every day? and wasn't that doing something for somebody?'

"'Yes,' I answered them, 'it was.'

"At the end of the week, the day being hotter than the last, if possible, I was wending my way along a very narrow street, when suddenly I was literally grabbed by the arm and a little voice said: 'I done it!' 'Did what?' I exclaimed, looking down and seeing at my side a tiny girl with the proverbial fat baby asleep in her arms. . . . 'What you told us to do; and I never skipped a day, neither,' replied the child in a rather hurt tone. 'O,' I said, 'now I know what you mean. Put down the baby and let's talk about it.' So down on the sidewalk she deposited the sleeping infant, and she and I stood over it and talked.

"'Well,' she said, 'I never skipped a day, but it was awful hard. It was all right when I could go to the park; but one day it rained and rained, and the baby had a cold, and I just couldn't go out, and I thought sure I was going to skip, and I was standin' at the window, 'most cryin', and I saw [there the little face brightened up with a radiant smile]—I saw a sparrow takin' a bath in the gutter that goes round the top of the house, and he had on a black necktie, and he was handsome.' It was the first time I had heard an English sparrow called handsome, but I tell you it wasn't laughable a bit—no, not a bit.

"'And then there was another day,' she went on, 'and I thought I should have to skip it sure. There wasn't another thing to look at in the house. The baby was sick, and I couldn't go out, and I was feelin' terrible, when [here she caught me by both hands, and the most radiant look came to her face] I saw the baby's hair!' 'Saw the baby's hair?' I echoed. 'Yes; a little bit of sun came in the window, and I saw his hair, an' I'll never be lonesome any more.' And catching up the baby from the sidewalk, she said: 'See?' And I too saw the baby's hair. 'Isn't it beau-ti-ful?' she asked. 'Yes, it is beautiful,' I answered. You have heard of artists raving of Titian hair. Well, as the sun played on this baby's hair there were the browns, the reds, the golds which make up the Titian hair. Yes, it was truly beautiful. 'Now shall we go on?' I said, taking the heavy baby from her."—The Presbyterian.

Eager for Learning.

New Mexico is credited with having a larger percentage of illiteracy than most of the states of the Union. Possibly one reason why the territory makes such a poor showing in this respect is that a large number of the people speak only Spanish, and careless census takers are apt to set down as illiterate a person who does not speak English.

However that may be, there is among the younger generation of the native or Spanish-speaking people a keen desire to learn English and get an education. The absence of good schools in many of the rural districts makes it necessary for the ambitious but sometimes nearly illiterate young men from the hill districts to go far from home to attend the elementary department of one of the territorial institutions.

The following letter, which is faithfully reproduced with its original diction, spelling and punctuation, was written to the president of one of the territorial institutions by a boy who had come nearly two hundred miles to attend school the year before, and had earned his way by serving as assistant janitor. A year ago, when he applied for the job, he spoke and wrote only Spanish. Now he plunges boldly into English, and requests a chance to earn his schooling for another year.

Here is his letter:

Breaking it Gently.

A New York financier recently returned from a business trip to Europe and was considerably surprised to find no one at the dock to meet him but the butler. He asked if things at home were all right, and the following conversation ensued:

"Yes, sir, except that the dog is dead, sir."

"What was the matter with the dog?"

"We think, sir, that he died of eating too much burnt horse flesh, sir."

"Burnt horse flesh? Where did he get burnt horse flesh?"

"The horses were all killed, sir, when the stable burned, sir."

"The stable burned! How did it happen?"

"It caught fire from the house when the house burned, sir."

"Is the house burned, too? How did it catch fire?"

"We think, sir, it was from the candles, sir?"

"From the candles? What were candles doing in the house? You know I don't want anything but the electric light."

"The candles around the coffin, sir."

"Around the coffin! What coffin? Is somebody dead?"

"Your mother-in-law, sir. She's dead, sir."

"My mother-in-law dead! Why, I hadn't heard that she was ill. What was the matter?"

"We think, sir, it was the shock, sir."

"Shock! What shock? What has happened?"

"Her daughter, sir, your wife, sir, ran away with the coachman."

LULLABY LAND.

One for the money and two for the show,
Away to the lullaby land we'll go!
Away to the valleys where shadows creep
To the gentle eyes of the child asleep!
Over the hills where the dreams come down,
Heigh-ho for the village of Shut-Eye town!
Up, my sweet, to my knees and away
On the dreamy wings of the childheart lay!

Three to make ready and four for to go,
Away to the lullaby land, you know!
The steeds are ready, up, up, my love,
While the starman lighteth the stars above,
And soft and silken on silver shoon
Walks over the ripples the lady moon!
Up, up, my bonny, with locks of gold,
To arms that wait with a sweet enfold!

Lullaby land is a little way
By the capes of dream and the coasts of play;
Over the river that sings of rest
It leads to the valley of childhood guest;
The fairy princess is there, my sweet,
With gleaming sandals upon her feet,
And she will lead with her magic art
To the lily land of her April heart!

With songs of slumber and to and fro
In the rocking chair and the evenglow,
Gold-headed and sweetheart elf,
Oh, would I were only a child myself,
That I might lie on a breast I knew
In the beautiful eons of childheart true,
And hear her singing and hold her hand
And drift in dreams to the lullaby land!

One for the money and two for the show;
The twilight deepens, the moon is low,
The eyes are heavy, the feet are still,
The Dog Star rises beyond the hill;
The hour is quiet and calm and good
And I think of the beautiful fatherhood
That rocks us thus in his world to rest
With a song of dream on his tender breast!

To lullaby land, sing-ho, my sweet,
With the folded hands and the weary feet!
Eyelids closed and lips that smile
Like rose leaves parted in love's beguile—
O dear one, dreaming and drifting there,
I kiss thy lips and I smooth thy hair
In reverent memory of days that were
When I was a child on the breast of her!

MARY AND HER LAMB

By EDWARD T. CURNICK

Richard Kimball Powers, a relative of Mary Sawyer, who owned the "little lamb," is in his ninety-eighth year. He is probably the last survivor of those who lived in the days of Mary's childhood near her neighborhood, and who can speak with authority about the incident that has gone over the world.

Recently the writer called upon Mr. Powers, and heard from his own lips the story of "Mary and her Lamb." He is residing with his daughter-in-law in the beautiful town of Lancaster, Mass., which is only a few miles from Sterling, Mass., the early home of Mary. Although nearly one hundred years old, Mr. Powers' faculties are remarkably preserved. His hearing is good, and his heavy white beard adorns a face which expresses kindness and good will. His mind is as clear as that of a man of forty, and he recalls names and dates with much ease. The material parts of his remarks during our interview are herewith presented to our readers that they may know that the poem they have all learned is based, not on a myth, but on facts.

Richard Kimball Powers was born in Sterling, Mass., November 26, 1810, not over fifty rods from the schoolhouse to which Mary went when the lamb followed her to school. He is second cousin to Mary.

They both had the same grandmother but different grandfathers. Mary's grandfather was named Sawyer. After his death her grandmother married a Mr. Ephraim Powers, who became the grandfather of Mr. Richard K. Powers, my informant.

Mary's grandparents were blessed with a family of boys. One died in the Revolutionary War. The names of the others were Ezra, Thomas and Nathaniel. Thomas Sawyer was the father of Mary. She was born about 1803 on the farm in Sterling, Mass., where she raised the lamb. The house in which she was born is still standing in good repair. A picture of it, recently taken, is here shown. Mary had two brothers, Ezra and Thomas, and two sisters, Emma and Susan, older than herself, and two brothers, Nathaniel and Luke, younger than herself.

Mary's father not only cultivated the soil around his humble home, but he also kept sheep. These grazed on the parts of the farm which were not suitable for tillage, and their flesh and wool added to the modest income of the family. At one time twin lambs were born to a mother sheep, and strangely enough, she utterly rejected one of the lambs, and would have nothing to do with it, but would knock it to one side.

Mary, then about ten years old, saw the poor little unmothered lamb, and her loving heart was moved in pity toward the lone and forlorn creature. She went to her father and said: "Papa, can I have that little lamb for my own and bring it up by hand?"

"Yes, daughter," said her father, "I am willing, if your mother will give her consent."

Upon this Mary ran to her mother, and made the same request. Her mother readily agreed, and from that day the little lamb was Mary's own. She fed it with her own hand. She saw that it had a comfortable place in which to stay; in fact, it was often with her in the house. Soon the lamb became so attached to her as its friend and protector, that it followed her about like a dog, and seemed most pleased when she was near.

One day Mary and her brother Nathaniel started to school. At that time the road was not wide and well kept as now, but was nothing more than a path through the woods and fields. It was crossed in different places by fences, and the children had to lower the bars to get through, and then put them up again. The lamb followed them along this path.

Mary wanted to take it back home, but Nathaniel said: "No, let it follow; it won't hurt anything." Nathaniel was a funny little fellow, full of life and spirit, and perhaps he wanted the lamb to follow them to school so that there might be some sport for the children. So the girl, boy and lamb went on together to the little schoolhouse, which was quite a distance ahead.

When they reached the schoolyard the fun began. The teacher had not yet arrived, but some of the scholars were there. They crowded around the little lamb, and they were much amused to see it at school. Now Mary was in a quandary. She did not want the teacher to know the lamb was at school, so she hid him in the box-like desk at which she sat.

As this schoolhouse was one of the most famous in America, and as it has disappeared now, we will endeavor to give Mr. Powers' description of it. The schoolhouse fronted the east, the road running past on the east side. A door stood in the middle of the end facing the road. This door led into an entry. Then another door led into the schoolroom. The room was about twelve feet square. The teacher's desk stood a little to the right as one went through the door. On the right of a big fireplace was placed two rows of seats, and on the left two other rows of seats. Each seat had before it a large desk, which was enclosed at the sides. There were two windows on the north side, and two on the south side. The outside of the house was covered with clapboards, which were painted. The inside of the house was plastered.

Into this schoolhouse Mary took her lamb. She was afraid the teacher would not be pleased to see a lamb at school, and thinking its presence, if seen, might stir up the children to become unruly, she hid the lamb in the lower part of her desk. But the lamb soon got tired of its close quarters, when lo! and behold! it walked out into the open space where all could see it. Then began a commotion among the little folks. They laughed and tittered and twisted and turned in their seats to see the new pupil, and whispered to each other about the strange sight.

Even the teacher, who was named Miss Eunice Kimball, could not refrain from laughing, but she soon composed herself, and discovered that if she would keep order she must dispose of the lamb. So she turned it out of the schoolhouse doors. Mary wanted her lamb, and the lamb wished to be near Mary, but this was impossible; so the little animal remained outside the schoolhouse till "Mary did appear." Then she went to it and patted it, and spoke kind words to it, and started home, the lamb following her, and doubtless glad that it was again under the protecting care of its kind mistress.

A young man by the name of John Rollstone was in the neighborhood about that time, and he heard the story of the lamb following Mary to school, and wrote the first four stanzas of the little poem to commemorate the event. Subsequently the two other stanzas were added by another writer.

The fate of this little lamb was a sad one. Mary's father had a number of cattle in his barn, and the lamb somehow got in front of them. A cow, seeing it, became enraged and hooked it, and the poor creature was so injured it had to be killed. Mary had the wool made into yarn, and with it knitted a pair of stockings, but she never wore them.

Mary Sawyer lived on her father's farm until she grew up. After a time her mental strength failed, and she was taken to Mechanics Hospital in Somerville, Mass., a suburb of Boston. Here she recovered from her malady, and became matron of the institution. In the course of time she married the man who had care of the hospital, Mr. Columbus Tyler. She outlived her husband many years, residing in the house he had owned. She died in Somerville. Some time before her death the historic Old South Church of Boston, Mass., became financially encumbered, and there was danger of its being sold for debt. A public sale was organized to relieve this embarrassment. Mary took the stockings which she had knitted from her lamb's wool, unraveled the yarn, and cutting it into bits sold them as souvenirs to help save the old church. This pair of stockings, converted into little pieces of yarn, brought over $100, showing the widespread interest the people had in "Mary and her Lamb."—The Junior Herald.

Essays About Korea.

One of our subscribers, who teaches English in a certain school in Japan, has sent us the two following compositions recently written by his students. He adds that they were written offhand in the classroom, and represent about the average ability of the class:

COREA.

Corea is a pennynsula which situated in the north-west part from Japan. And this country is under the power of our Japan. We are very glad that the country is very hopeful one for us, and we can begin any of the work and the other kind of business. In this country, I think, the agriculture is the most hopeful one. Our government set "Tokanfu" at Seoul and ordered Prince Ito to be the master of "Tokanfu." I think he is very suitable man and he will do best of his duty. I am very glad to hear that many of our nation go to Corea, and they are working hard in their business. I hope that our government will do a good act on the Corean, and bring them civilization. At the same time I hope that "Tokanfu" will make many of important things,—such as, school, railway, bridge, public building, &c. At the end, you must not forget that there are very dear relation between Japan and Corea.

COREA.

Corea situate in the eastern part of Japan. Once upon a time this country belonged China, but now it is under our prodiction. The people of this country is very idle one, so they are lesure all time! but I think this country, by and by, proceed civilization. See, Now-a-day the crown price of Korea come our country and study his task very carefully, if the price grow old and return his fatherland, he would be very good King.

On the other hand I am very sorry, for this country can not content the advice of the other country, so that, our country often quareled of it. Japan-Chinese war, Russia-Japan war, were not for this country?

Last day's news papers tells us, that, Some exchange was done by the polical field. I am expect some good effect comes for that.

In short, Corea is the most important country for us. If this country can not be civilized, our country would become poor one. So we must struggle to teach this country best.

Tact is the knack of keeping quiet at the right time; of being so agreeable yourself that no one can be disagreeable to you; of making inferiority feel like equality. A tactful man can pull the stinger from a bee without getting stung.—George Horace Lorimer.

Sure of His Mother.

"Now, Jamie," said a school teacher, "if there were only one pie for dessert, and there were five of you children and papa and mamma to divide it among, how large a piece would you get?"

"One sixth," replied Jamie, promptly.

"But there would be seven people there, Jamie. Don't you know how many times seven goes into one?"

"Yes'm. And I know my mother. She'd say she wasn't hungry for pie that day. I'd get one sixth."—Congregationalist.

How Does It Seem to You?

It seems to me I'd like to go
Where bells don't ring, nor whistles blow,
Nor clocks don't strike nor gongs don't sound,
And I'd have stillness all around

Not real still stillness, but just the trees,
Low whispering or the hum of bees,
Or brooks, faint babbling over stones
In strangely, softly tangled tones.

Or maybe a cricket or katydid,
Or the song of birds in the hedges hid
Or just some sweet sound as these
To fill a tired heart with ease.

If 'tweren't for sight and sound and smell,
I'd like a city pretty well;
But when it comes to getting rest
I like the country lots the best.

Sometimes it seems to me I must
Just quit the city's din and dust,
And get out where the sky is blue—
And, say, how does it seem to you?

Steam and Trolley in Palestine.

Steam and electricity have laid hold on Syria and are compelling the land to move and be enlightened. Railroads are now completed between Jaffa and Jerusalem, between Haifa, Tiberias and Damascus, between Beirut and Damascus, between Beirut, Baalbek, Hamath and Aleppo, and between Damascus and Tibok and Medaien, on the Mecca Hejaz Railroad, some six hundred miles on the way to Mecca.

An electric trolley road runs through the streets of Damascus, and the city is lighted by electricity. Iron pipes are being laid to bring the crystal cold water of Ain Fyi fifteen miles to Damascus. A Belgium company is building an electric trolley tramway through the streets of Beirut, and will furnish electric lights. These railways are increasing business.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Current Events

The devil can quote scripture to serve his purpose, so we may not be surprised if some people, who would profess to be shocked if told that they were aligned with his Satanic majesty, seek the Scriptures for the purposes of their argument. The National License Model League is sending out a letter to some 5,000 ministers signed by its president, T. M. Gilmore, which winds up with the quotation, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and today and forever." The purport of this letter is a defense of the Rev. A. W. Pitzer, a Presbyterian minister, who sought to make out that the Bible supports drinking. We think most ministers are competent to handle the question submitted to them by President Gilmore. Another curious trend which the brewers have taken is a plea for "religious freedom." A large brewing company in Cincinnati alleges that the prohibition law in Georgia permits the sale of altar wines for sacramental purposes; but what have the breweries to do with wine making, and how much interested are they in men going to the altar? It is a far-fetched reason this, that starts a brewery going to the United States court to have the prohibitory law declared unconstitutional on the ground that persons wishing the sacrament can partake of it. Surely the traffickers in liquor are in a bad way when they have to resort to such arguments and such means to bolster up their cause!

The Brewers at Bay.

Twenty night riders burned a millinery store, and the young woman proprietor lost $1,000. One phase—thank God, only one—of Kentucky chivalry and American lawlessness.

After Russia, Turkey, and after Turkey—what? The sleep of the ages is broken, and China steps into the arena, an aspirant for self-government. That great country makes progress slowly, but after 4,000 years of history, on August 30, a new edict was issued, stating that in nine years a constitutional form of government will come, and setting forth in detail the stages which will be reached each year as progress toward this ideal is made. Some of the reformers are naturally impatient, and after recent events in Turkey and Persia are eager to have the constitution at once. But in matters of this kind it is best not to be in too great a hurry. Persia is in a turmoil because things were forced too rapidly. Evolution, wisely directed, makes for greater stability than revolution.

Another Popular Government.

It is prevalent everywhere, though it is not often honored by being classed with diseases. Most people call it "pure laziness" when it affects spoiled children, card-fiend women or worthless husbands. But there is such a thing as "lazy sickness." Of course, the aforementioned folk would not wish to have it as the diagnosis of their complaints, for this sickness is due to the "hook-worm," while theirs is just due to "cussedness" or bad training. The real sickness comes from a worm picked up in the embryonic stage by barefooted children in Southern Georgia, which enters the circulation and develops. The children grow into indolent, stupid adults. The disease can be cured, and if shoes be worn there is no danger of a recurrence of the malady. The Georgia State Board of Health believes that the deaths from the disease in the state exceed those from tuberculosis and pneumonia combined.

Lazy Sickness.

In days of old when knights were bold they did do mighty deeds. We sometimes find it hard in these days to associate ostrich plumes and lodge banners with deeds of real value. Yet there has just come a fine illustration of the value of discipline in the training for service. While the Knights of Pythias were encamped on Franklin Field, Boston, a dwelling house within view suddenly collapsed, pinioning an entire family in the ruins. At the sound of the bugle a company of the Knights started for the scene of the disaster, and under the direction of their officer in an orderly and expeditious way proceeded to liberate the victims. When the police and surgeons arrived the bugle again sounded and the Knights retired as if nothing unusual had occurred. If discipline were properly used in Church work, what added force there would be to this!

Training for service.

Has the pure food bill, signed by President Roosevelt two years ago June 30, but really in operation only since January 1, 1907, been a success? Here are some of the results. During this time over 7,000 samples of foods and drugs have been collected in various parts of the country. These samples have furnished the material for at least 176 cases of violations of the pure food law which have been or will be referred to the Department of Justice. In the first case tried the defendant, a wealthy wholesale and manufacturing druggist, was found guilty of misrepresenting a branded drug. The court decisions have been issued by the Board of Food and Drug Inspection. The wisdom of the law is apparent. Of course, it will not prevent all adulteration or impurity, but the very fact that there is a statute will prevent much of this, while the real value to the consumers will depend upon the vigilance of those who represent them. An honest and active city chemist ought to have a big salary these days, so great can his value be to a community.

The Pure Food Law.

As has been apparent to the reading public there has been a large campaign of advertising in the newspapers on the part of the brewers Through this means an effort has been made to control the press, many newspapers being informed that they would not secure the advertising contracts if they published any news detrimental to the brewing interests. Of course, many of the large papers could not be controlled in this way. In this connection a great victory has just been won for temperance in Maine. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of that state has, after seven years, handed down a decision confirming the constitutionality of the statute prohibiting the publishing of liquor advertisements in the state newspapers. The influence of this decision can not be estimated. If a prohibition state can rule out liquor advertising, may this not be applied in local option counties where a whole state is not involved? With importation prohibited, newspaper advertising barred, and the mails closed against it, liquor will have a hard fight to win its battle on boot-legging lines.

Liquor and the Press.

After the flood the fire and after the waste by fire more flood. The depletion of our forests by lumbermen is deplored, because, among other reasons, it is conducive to floods. When great acres of timber are burned out—as has been happening in four states at the same time—not only is there more flood prospects, but there is waste of valuable wood. And the fires in Minnesota have eaten up whole towns. How much longer of such conditions must we have to convince every man of the need of national action for the preservation of our natural resources?

Forest Fires.

Editorial

An Impregnable Basis.

We are sure, from many things we see and hear, not only from our rank and file, but from many of our ministers, that there is great need for a reproclamation and re-emphasis of our old-time position as a religious body, viz.: that Jesus Christ is the foundation of his church, and that other foundation than this no man can lay. We still preach this, and write it, of course, but there seems to be failure on the part of many to grasp the significance of the position. Many are taking positions wholly at variance with this fundamental doctrine. When our fathers discovered that foundation-truth in the New Testament, they struck a rich lead, and for a while they worked it with great effect. Many of us who have come after them are not doing much to mine the gold of truth there is in this vein, and to mint it for circulation in the kingdom of Jesus Christ. Let us look at some of the plainest possible corollaries that flow out of this fundamental truth, which has been the greatest source of strength to the cause we plead.

1. If Christ be the only foundation, then all attempts to build ecclesiastical organizations on doctrinal statements called creeds, are unauthorized, and such building will have ultimately to be so modified as to be brought into harmony with this truth.

2. Then, also, the "unwritten creeds" of which we hear occasionally, that is, those doctrinal conclusions which we have quite generally reached in our study of the Bible, however important they may be, are not a part of the foundation on which we have built, provided we are building according to the pattern shown us in the Mount. Any attempt to put these intellectual conclusions into the foundation and make them essential conditions of fellowship, are at variance with the statement that Christ is the only foundation.

3. It follows, also, that this foundation is the object of our faith, and is the true confession of faith. We have no right to require men to confess any truth which is not necessarily involved in accepting Christ as the foundation. We do not ask men when they confess their faith in Christ to confess any particular theory of the inspiration of the Scriptures or of the authorship of any of the books of the Bible, nor any of the conclusions of higher criticism. Whether these be true or false, they are not a part of the foundation on which Christ built his church. They may be important, but they are not vital.

4. One of the most important corollaries involved in the truth we are emphasizing is that the church of Christ will stand and go forward, and do its work, whatever set of theories or doctrines may prevail on these disputed questions. Jesus Christ is the great certainty of history. To build on him is to build on the Rock of Ages—the impregnable rock "against which the gates of Hades shall not prevail." This ought to quiet the apprehensions and uneasiness of not a few good people who imagine that the foundations are dropping out of the church because brethren differ about some of these subordinate and incidental questions. In Christ we are complete. If we believe that, we will cease to fret and worry about the safety of Zion.

5. Finally, another practical and important corollary is that, having the common faith and the common obedience of faith, and having been built upon the foundation of Jesus Christ and his apostles, we ought to regard each other as brethren in spite of differences of opinion on other questions, no matter how important some of them may be. We may indeed differ, and must as long as we are all imperfect, but we should differ as brethren and find our oneness in the great fundamental facts we hold in common.

"Faith and Miracle."

Under the foregoing title the "Christian Century" closes its treatment, in two articles, of the subject of miracles. In the first it gave a brief resume of attempts which have been made to explain the miraculous, and in the last it comes to definitions. It presents two views of miracles. "One asserts that miracle is the intervention of a supernatural power in the realm of natural law. According to this theory there are two realms of life, the natural and the supernatural." This view is ruled out as impracticable for one who has the modern view of the world. It is to be regretted that the terms natural and supernatural are introduced here, as they are terms that can easily be juggled with. There is a material world, undoubtedly, and there is no less certainly a spiritual world. These are facts which confront the man who believes, whether his view of the world be ancient or modern. If the modern view of the world makes it incredible that God, who is spirit, should, on occasion, subordinate the material to the spiritual to accomplish his purposes, then the modern view of the world is entirely out of harmony with the New Testament record of facts.

The other definition given, and one to which the "Century" apparently gives its approval, is "that miracle is the unusual, but normal activity of a perfect life in the domain of nature. There is no such cleavage, or dualism in the universe as that which requires the assumption of two realms, the natural and the supernatural." That depends altogether on the sense in which we use these terms. As the editor says, "From one point of view there is no supernatural, for all things are natural and orderly." The issue is, therefore, not formed in the use of these terms. The question is, Does science, or the modern view of the world, permit us to believe that such events as the birth of Jesus, his life and character, his reported deeds, his death and resurrection, lying as they do beyond the range of material forces, are credible? Is there not a class of facts before which science must uncover its head and worship? Is there not a spiritual realm, as well as a material realm, and is not science, as we ordinarily understand it, limited to the latter, while we learn of the former and its realities through faith?

The "Christian Century" says further: "The redemptive facts of Jesus' life are independent of miracle." Is this true? We would suppose "the redemptive facts" in the life of Jesus to be his sinlessness, his divine wisdom and power, his sacrificial death and his resurrection from the dead. We can not separate these from the miraculous. In vain do we apply our scientific tests to these great gospel facts. If we take the supernatural, or the miraculous, out of the character of Jesus, out of the nature of his death and his triumph over death, we have no gospel left that is adequate to meet the needs of this poor, sinning, suffering and dying race. The editor of the "Century" indeed acknowledges that "the greatest miracle is the life of Christ." Can this great miracle, therefore, be separated from "the redemptive facts" of Christ's life? Was it not the supernatural or divine nature of Christ that gave redemptive value to his death and resurrection from the dead in our behalf?

Surely our esteemed contemporary has allowed itself to be caught in the meshes, only temporarily let us hope, of a rationalistic philosophy which must trim down the narrative of gospel facts so as to receive the approval of modern science. Science can do much, and has done much, but it has its limitations. Christ came a light unto the world that whosoever believeth on him might not abide in darkness! But outside of faith in Christ, no matter how much science and philosophy the world may have, it "abides in darkness" on the deepest and profoundest problems of the human soul. We must forever get rid of the idea that our gospel—the great facts of Christ's personality and his death and resurrection from the dead, wait for the explanation or approval of modern science. They belong to the realm of faith.

Never have I seen Thee so clearly as when I was breaking bread to the hungry; never have I loved Thee so dearly as when I soothed a brother's pain. I sought the friendless children, and I discovered Bethlehem. I visited the humble homes, and I found Nazareth.—George Matheson.

Notes and Comments

"Speak kind words now, because it will cost something to put them on tombstones."

We see that the "Baptist World" has to defend Dr. E. Y. Mullins, president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky., against the charge of "seeking to lead the Baptists over to the Disciples under the guise of Christian union." The "Baptist World" rightly denounces this charge as "born of malice" and without foundation. The incident shows that human nature among Southern Baptists is not essentially different from what it is among the Disciples. The Editor of this paper has, for many years, been charged by a certain class of men with betraying the cause of the reformation we are pleading into the hands of the "sects," because of his advocacy of such co-operation with our religious neighbors as is now possible, in carrying on the great common aims of Protestantism. It shows that there are members in both bodies that believe in no other kind of Christian union than that which would promote their denominational pre-eminence. We are sure this element among the Disciples of Christ is not large, and is a waning quantity. We hope it is by no means a controlling factor among Baptists.

A few years ago the Editor of this journal invited President Mullins to read a paper before our congress on "The Relation of Baptism to Regeneration and Remission of Sins." He courteously complied with the request, and gave an able treatment of the subject from his point of view. We have never heard that any Baptist charged it with being unsound. During the same congress, if not at his suggestion at least with his approval, informal committees were selected in an informal way to prepare a doctrinal statement of the two bodies, with a view of showing how near they are together, and in what respects they differ. These committees, we believe, with I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, and President E. Y. Mullins, of Louisville, acting respectively as chairman of our committee and that of the Baptists, have their reports about completed, and will probably report to some informal meeting, or publish the results in the religious press of the two bodies. Certainly in all this there was nothing on which to base a charge of disloyalty to Baptist principles against Dr. Mullins, unless it be with those who regard Christian union as a modern heresy.

Some of the religious bodies at their national assemblies passed resolutions favoring the enactment of a law for the protection of the states which have adopted prohibition, against the shipment of alcoholic drinks into these states under the protection of interstate commerce. Among these was the Methodist Episcopal general conference. Such a bill was formulated, referred to the appropriate committee, and the committee, we understand, was prepared to unanimously recommend it. The "Central Christian Advocate," which can not be charged with any anti-Republican leanings, lays the responsibility for this defeat of the will of the people and of Congress on the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who, it alleges, is opposed to the bill, and therefore refused it a hearing before Congress. We understand that the Speaker justifies his action on the ground that he believes the bill unconstitutional. But the people will hardly be satisfied that he should usurp the function of the supreme court in deciding that question. The will of the people will ultimately be enacted, for, sooner or later, the people do rule.

In justice to Speaker Cannon we should add that since the foregoing was written, in a speech delivered in his home town he denounces the charge conveyed in the foregoing as "absolutely false." He claims that two-thirds of the committee to which the bill was referred believed in its unconstitutionality, and expresses his willingness to assist in the passage of any bill looking to the protection of prohibition states that meets the approval of Congress. Having given the two sides we leave our readers to hunt out the truth for themselves, and fix the responsibility where it belongs. What we are sure of is, that a great majority of the people of this country believe in protecting the rights of those states which have enacted prohibition as a part of their policy.

Down in Arkansas they don't do things by halves. The preachers in the various denominations "utter no uncertain sound." Their denominational ear-marks are visible to the naked eye as far as one can see, or audible to the naked ear as far as one can hear. A correspondent writes that a Baptist minister in that state is charging publicly that the Christian Publishing Company has two books which it refuses to sell to anybody, except elders of the Christian (Campbellite) Church. These are "Christian System" and "Living Oracles." He claims that he has in his possession a letter from the president of the company, in answer to one he had written, saying that we only sold these books to elders of the Christian Church, and that if he were one he might get them. He replied that he was an elder, without stating in what church, and by that device he was enabled to secure the two books! All of this is "rich, rare and racy." No doubt this man is what is called a "loyal" Baptist. The only trouble with him, as with most extreme partisans, is that the development of the conscience has not kept pace with his sectarian zeal.

The "Standard" (Baptist), of Chicago, publishes an article by Rev. J. B. Gambrell, entitled, "Concerning Baptist Fools." He mentions a number of varieties: "One is the man who never agrees with the brethren. He is not a bad man. He is not vicious, but he makes a specialty of never agreeing with the brethren." Another type is "a man who gets hold of a fad and holds to it. If he is a preacher he preaches on it. It is some little extraordinary interpretation of some dark prophecy, or it is some rare bit of pure dogmatism, and he holds to it through thick and thin. In a little while he is understood. Churches will let him go. The brethren avoid him." Unfortunately no religious body has a monopoly on fools or foolishness. There are fools in all religious bodies. They are seen stalking through Bible history—the fool who said in his heart, there is no God, the rich fool who was going to enlarge his barns, the fool who built his house on the sand, and the fool who refused to believe in the resurrection until he knew just what kind of a body the resurrection body would be. As a rule, the Bible fool is the man who looks only to the present and sees only material things. How many there be that belong to that class, judge ye.

"Tell us, by what authority doest thou these things?" The question the Jews asked Jesus is a natural one, and the quest for authority need not be discouraged. Especially so when we deal with soul interests. But the greatest thinkers have come back from excursions of rationalism with the testimony that Jesus Christ is the only teacher of mankind whose authority will endure the severest scrutiny. After all is said and done it is not the intellect that counts most in finding the source of authority.

"So spake my Head; I thought me wondrous wise,
I thought me wondrous wise, and thought so till
My poor heart did in rank rebellion rise,
And tenderly subdued my stubborn Will.

* * * * *

"So spake my Heart; I thought me wondrous wise,
I thought me wondrous wise, and thought so till
My Head did free itself from Reason's guise,
And eager grasped the Faith that calms me still."

To commend what we believe to the world must be done on the basis of the best scholarship of the world. There is no merit in ignorance; we will not be saved by prejudice; nor will we reach heaven through mathematical skill, or philosophical disquisitions. But sanctified scholarship deserves our consideration. And if the rank and file of us be controlled by sanctified common sense we may have confidence that the outcome will be that the truth of the scriptures will shine forth from an exposition in the hands of reasonable men. Let us not cease to think, but above all let us not cease to pray.

Current Religious Thought

"Dr. Robertson Nicoll, 'a man of Kent,' has an article in which he comes round to some such thought as that we have expressed. He quotes from a sermon in a story, wherein a preacher at a funeral analyzes the character of the saint there in the coffin between him and the congregation.

"'He was stop-gap in a Sunday-school,' said the preacher; he was a busy laborer in the harvest of men's souls. Like other laborers, he tried to bring men to do right, and he saw them do wrong; like other laborers, he tried to make souls live, and he saw them die. And yet he was not vexed; why? That is the secret. It was the secret between himself and God. He could not have told us why. Who can explain the nature of that whispered intercourse which the Almighty holds with man? It is a secret buried in the heart of life, which, to learn, you do not dig up, but bury so much deeper. 'Buried with him,' says Paul, 'and hid with Christ in God.'

"He was not vexed. He lived his life hour by hour, taking up successive opportunities—taking them up promptly, one at a time, and always at peace, because he had touched somewhat the patience of God.

"It is the putterer who loses his patience, and whose soul is vexed. The master workman goes on. He sees the work go forward in the heart of man. He toils on and lies down in peace to die. No man will have the vexed soul who has really touched the patience of God."—Central Christian Advocate.

"'God - bless - us - hand - around - the - biscuits-Betsy.' This, uttered in breathless haste, my father heard at a farmer's table. Too eager to get at the biscuits to spend much time on 'blessing.' Rather, it maybe, making the grace a meaningless formality.

"'Lord, make us thankful for these refreshments.' So often the grace is thus begun. After the gracious giver of blessings has given us the dinner, must we ask him to force us to feel grateful for it? If I should give you an apple, you would never say, 'Please make me thankful for it.' You'd just thank me heartily.

"'Spr, sp, s, sh, s, s, spr.' No wonder the child asked mother, 'what the man said to the picture on his plate?' For it was just a whispering, not a word of which could be understood. If you are alone, you may say grace in an indistinct whisper; or you can give thanks without speaking words at all. But, when you are giving thanks for yourself and others, speak distinctly so every one can hear. No mumbling.

"'Adorable and opulent Provider, we crave thy gracious acceptance of the sincere acknowledgment of our grateful hearts for this undeserved grant from thine unwasting fullness.' Tut, tut! Use everyday English. 'Father, we thank thee for this dinner' would sound much more like your ordinary language. Be natural, simple, direct, in what you say. Big, unusual words, and high-sounding, gushing language, are not best in talking to man or God."—Cumberland Presbyterian.

The "New York Observer" points out that a London firm of clockmakers recently discovered that a rival firm of German manufacturers was doing a large business in cheap clocks on the West Coast of South Africa. They made an attempt to introduce a better clock than the German article, but could not make large sales. At last the puzzle was explained. The new clocks were too quiet. Those supplied by the Germans had a peculiarly aggressive tick, which satisfied the savage's love for noise. The noiseless clock was the better timepiece, but the savages would not take to it. There are many people, outside of Africa as well as in it, who prefer the noise of boastful aggression to the quiet of superior accomplishment.

President Schurman, of Cornell, believes in the relation of the Bible to education. He says: "The Bible is the most important document in the world's history. No man can be wholly uneducated who really knows the Bible, nor can any one be considered a truly educated man who is ignorant of it."

Don't forget the cheering! That is a good injunction. The editor of the "Western Christian Advocate" quotes a story going the rounds of the newspapers about some boys running a race. All felt sure that Tommy, the boy in the lead, would win, as he was the fastest runner. Those looking on began to cheer the different boys, and Tommy gradually fell behind, until he was the last one to reach the goal. His friends gathered around him, inquiring why this was. And Tommy, wiping the tears from his dirty little face, replied: "You yelled, 'Go it, Johnny!' 'Go it, Jimmy!' But there was not a one yelled, 'Go it, Tommy!' and somehow I just couldn't run at all!"

The "Advocate" editor comments: "In college athletics the 'yell master' and the cheering squad are considered indispensable adjuncts for the football field, and certainly no home team of baseball players ever expect to win on the diamond without benches full of 'rooters.' The bugles put inspiration into the soldiers as they charge. A word of cheer frequently makes the difference between success and failure, and if there could be more encouraging words said to and of the pastors of our churches, and fewer captious, cynical, and critical words, we are of the opinion that a good deal better work would be done in the pulpit and parish."

"There are a number of serious objections to editors and the ways in which they conduct themselves. We know of some objections, or of objections to some editors rather, of which we decline to speak. One of the most common objections is, that for some reason the editor does not always take the view of all his readers. It is strange indeed, but he will sometimes say things with which all of his readers do not heartily concur. No doubt he ought to be more considerate, and, if possible, ascertain the views of every one of the large circle of his constituency before he opens his mouth or dips his pen.

"Another objection, of which he ought to be told candidly, is that somehow he fails to print all that is sent to him; the spring poetry, the long sermons, the personal controversies the interminable effusions on erudite and remote subjects. He ought to know better. He will use his own judgment, not having anybody to judge for him, and his judgment is confessedly sometimes in error. His apology is the want of space, but he ought to be more like the astronomer, who has more space than he knows what to do with."—Central Presbyterian.

"They were two travelers spending their Sunday in a hotel many hundred miles from home. Entire strangers to the city, they sought one of its popular churches to find a semi-patriotic service going on with a sermon designed for the members of a secret fraternity who were there in regalia. In the evening the travelers sought another church of a different denomination whose fame had penetrated to their native city. A visiting minister preached what one of them afterward termed as a scientific sermon, but lacking the distinctly gospel note. Somehow, when they returned to the hotel, they felt as if the public services of the day had brought them little spiritual food. 'You know a man's a bit homesick on Sunday,' said one of them the next day in recounting his experience, 'and he yearns for a sermon that gets home to his heart with the comfort and hope of religion.' It is a rather unusual congregation these summer days that does not include some people who are on the wing. In preparing the weekly homiletic output it is well to have such persons in mind. There is nothing that a Christian traveler is more grateful for, when spending a Sunday in a strange place, than a sermon directed to his everyday needs and fragrant with the very essence of the gospel."—Congregationalist.

"In the September number of the 'North American Review' appears a long article from the pen of Police Commissioner Theodore A. Bingham, on 'Foreign Criminals in New York.' It embraces a mass of amazing information gathered from the police records and census reports, and forms a strong argument in support of Commissioner Bingham's frequently reiterated demand upon the board of aldermen for authority to form a secret service branch of the police department.

"The commissioner states that 85 per cent of the population of this city is either foreign born or of foreign parentage, and that 50 per cent of the residents of the five boroughs do not speak the English language.

"He estimates the Hebrew population of the city (mostly Russian) at 1,000,000, or one-fourth of the population. Nearly one-half the criminals of the city who get into the police records, according to his figures, are of that race.

"Outside the Hebrews, Commissioner Bingham, from estimates submitted by the federal authorities, figures the foreign-born population of the city at 500,000 Italians, 150,000 Hungarians, 100,000 Austrians, 150,000 Germans, 75,000 Bohemians, 80,000 non-Hebraic Poles, 4,000 Slavs, 50,000 Greeks, 25,000 Armenians and Syrians, 12,000 to 15,000 Swiss, 15,000 French and Belgians, 10,000 to 12,000 Hollanders, 25,000 Irish, 10,000 Chinese, 4,000 natives of Balkan states and a few thousand non-Hebraic Russians, besides scattered representatives of nearly every nationality on the globe.

"Chinatown is described by Commissioner Bingham as a plague spot that should be wiped out. He estimates the number of rabid anarchists in the city at 1,000. In addition to a secret service for work among the foreign population, Commissioner Bingham calls for more rigid immigration laws, which would prevent foreign countries from dumping their criminals upon New York.

"For over a century we have been prating and ranting about the oppressed of Europe and have welcomed the 'oppressed' criminal classes of Europe to our shores. The Russian Jew in particular has excited sympathy, and now we are paying enormously for that sympathy, which has filled New York City, and, to a lesser extent, the country generally, with Hebrew criminals, as well as criminals of other colored and inferior races. It is time for the country generally to wake up to the fact that unless this flood of criminal immigration is stopped, our form of government will have to be changed to meet the change in the character of our population."—Journal and Messenger.

The Glory of the Church By J. E. Lynn

I will fill his house with glory, said Jehovah of hosts. * * The latter glory of this house shall be greater than the former, saith Jehovah of hosts.—Haggai 2:7. 9.

These words were spoken at the dedication of the second temple. It had been built after a great struggle and much sacrifice. The people were poor and their own homes had to be builded and their own lands cleared. But at last the Temple was finished. At the dedication the young men shouted for joy. It was to them a great and notable victory, and they were happy. But the old men wept. They wept because, as old men are apt to do, they were looking back. They remembered the former temple and could not help contrast the new temple with the grandeur of the old. Solomon's temple had been built in the days of Israel's wealth and prosperity. It was inlaid with pure gold. Its ceilings were festooned with pomegranates of gold wrought out in the costliest manner. The new temple, built in the days of Israel's extremity, was plain in comparison. Moreover, in the original temple was the ark of the covenant with its sacred shekinah, and the Urim and Thummim by which God's will was discerned. These things had been lost in the captivity, and the Most Holy place in the new temple contained nothing but a great bare rock. Remembering these things, the old men wept. But Haggai, a young man, with the inspiration of every true prophet of God, spoke words of encouragement. He reminded his hearers that the golden age is always before us, not behind; that God is always doing greater things than he yet has done. He affirmed that the glory of this latter temple should be greater than the former; that Jehovah would fill this house with glory. Though it lacked in material glory it should excel in spiritual glory. He was seeing the vision, no doubt, of the coming of the Messiah, whose feet should press these pavements they were that day dedicating, and whose voice should echo through those sacred corridors. Haggai saw the glory that Christ should give to this temple. To-day there is manifested to us the material glory of this building we dedicate. But its true glory is not that which we have bestowed or wrought out with our hands. The true glory of this house is spiritual; that which Christ shall bring into it. Of this I desire to speak. I remember hearing a dedication sermon once by our eminent brother, Zack Sweeney, on the "Glory of the Church." It greatly impressed me. I can not recall what he said. I wish I could. But I thank him for the text and the theme, and I trust that some of his thoughts, that have become my own by adoption, will repeat themselves. Let us consider the spiritual glory with which Christ fills his church:

I. This church will be made glorious by the truth of Christ proclaimed here.

When Jesus was brought before Pilate, he was accused of being one who set himself up as a king against Cæsar. "Are you a king, then?" Pilate asked. "Have you a secret army that you expect to lead out of Galilee against the Roman rule?" "Yes," Jesus answers, "I am a king, but my kingdom is the kingdom of truth. I depend for my power not upon swords and soldiers, but upon ideas, upon truth." Pilate did not understand, but later Roman rulers did. Gibbon tells us how the ideas of the Carpenter invaded Rome and undermined the pagan power; how thrones tottered and fell and the banner of the cross was erected where the Roman eagles were. Ideas are the greatest weapons of conquest in the world. The men of ideas have been the world's true conquerors. The glory of this church is in the fact that here shall be proclaimed the great conquering truth of the world's Redeemer. What is that truth? It is the truth that Peter, under the tutelage of the Master, gave expression to at Cæsarea Phillipi. The truth not only of the divinity of Jesus, but all that flows from it—the fact of the divine in the world. There was never a time this truth was more needed or more welcome than now. Men need to-day, above all days, to be taught that there is a divinity in everything and everywhere; that there is a divinity over us and in us and working through us; that divinity shapes the past and forms the future. The glory of this church shall be to constantly remind the hard working, prosperous men of the community of God, the divine Father of us all; of Christ his divine Son and of the divine life he will beget in us. To tell men that possession of mere things is nothing, but to possess the life of God in the soul is everything. To tell discouraged, burdened men that human life is not a failure, that human life is potentially divine. That man is made in God's image and will come to his own.

That is a glorious truth. It makes glorious the church where it is preached.

II. This church will be made glorious by the Spirit of Christ cultivated and manifested here.

It is possible to know the truth of Christ and not possess his spirit. The disciples were in that state on the night of the betrayal. They had learned many of his truths but they had not caught the spirit, and were quarreling among themselves as to who should sit next to the Master. That night Jesus gave them a great lesson in spiritual culture that they never forgot. It is a lesson every church should learn. The church that has not the spirit of Christ is not his, and is a reproach to the name they wear. What is the spirit of Jesus? Let the Upper Room answer:

1. The Spirit of Unity.

He knew human nature. He knew how hard it would be for Peter and James and John, seeing things differently as they were bound to do, to work together in unity and keep the church one. How he prayed for them that they might be given strength so to do! How wonderfully that prayer, as far as the apostles were concerned, was answered! I would that this church should be made glorious by the spirit of true Christian unity. I have met in this community persons of at least a dozen different religious beliefs. This is the only church here or that is likely to be erected here. What a glorious thing it would be for this church to present the Christian truth and spirit so true to the Christ that you all love and to the New Testament that you all accept that you can all worship and work together here in the spirit of Christian love and unity, as you are already doing. It will fill this church with glory.

2. The Spirit of Service.

On that night none were willing to take

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair for this week, and for the past two weeks, has been a bed of almost unceasing pain. Pain has been our constant companion by day and especially by night. It is a new type of suffering with us. It has brought us into closer sympathy with the great army of sufferers, and with Him who was "made perfect through suffering." If only by God's grace this suffering we are now passing through may be made to minister to our greater fitness for his kingdom and service, we shall thank Him for every throb of pain. The physician whose statement occurs elsewhere, makes no prognosis. Nor do we. Whatever He sends we will try to gratefully accept and endure. We still hope to get to the New Orleans convention, but it may be otherwise. Our plans are often frustrated by the wider and wiser purposes of God. This brief paragraph must represent the Easy Chair this week. It is not often, in all these years, that we have failed to fill our allotted space. But now we plead our readers' indulgence and to be remembered in their prayers.

PENTWATER ECHOES.

A tiller of the soil am I;
A laborer on life's way:
Each morn I drive my team afield
And toil while it is day;
Yet every week, there comes to me,
An echo of the balmy sea!
In "Pentwater Musings."

What though I labor every day,
And toil with sweaty brow:
It seems, for me, God's chosen way;
I'd not repine it now—
For every week, there comes to me,
An echo from the balmy sea!
In "Pentwater Musings."

God bless the "Editor's Easy Chair!"
His words of cheer, o'er flowing,
Lift up the heart, from toil and care,
To love the Life worth knowing.
All summer long there comes to me,
This echo of the balmy sea,
In "Pentwater Musings."

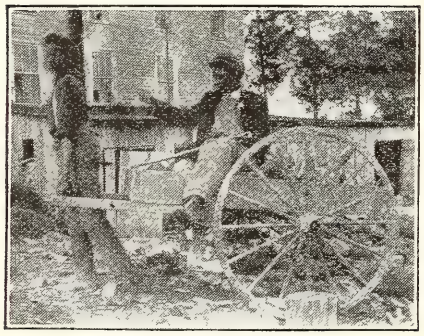
Our Southern Field---A Grave Responsibility

I have just come from the school room, where everything is overcrowded. In some seats there were three and some few had four pupils. They ranged in their studies from first primary to fourth year scientific. With the three teachers who aid me I could not cover all this ground, so we have called in nine of our most advanced students who teach one or two classes each. These students are busy and animated over their work as though they were preparing for a great task. I said it must surely count some day; but as I thought of the great field before us I thought, oh, how insignificant and feeble is our effort in comparison to the problem of saving this people! Here are about ten millions of people, or about one-tenth of our population, awaiting a Christian education in order that they may not be a menace to our civilization. We ourselves came up through ten centuries of "Dark Ages," a period of bloodshed, civil and religious bigotry, and reformations through martyrdoms, ere we were transformed from barbarian instincts to civilized endeavor; and we dare not let this people have the same time for such an evolution.

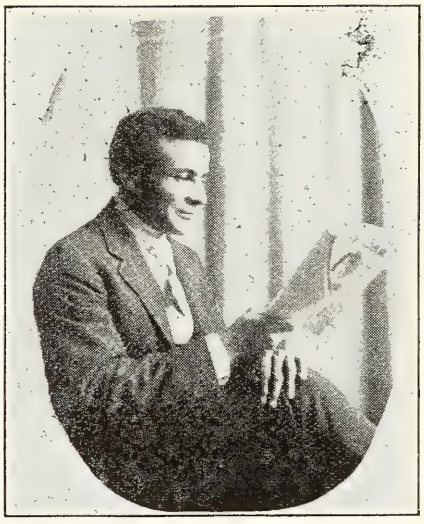
And then I said, Who has a more distinct call to this work than we, the Disciples of Christ? We are not divided into North and South, and surely no work can be lasting that is not participated in by the Christian people of both sections. We are not creed-bound, but can teach the Bible in its fullness, and we need not exhaust ourselves in the discussion of meaningless dogmas. And the work that we do ought to save this people from centuries of religious gymnastics through which we have gone to our sorrow.



At their first job.

And then, oh, the problem itself! How crying its need! And it must be done now. A few more decades may bring our nation into civil and political crises that will so change things that the present work can not be done. This one-tenth of our population must be given a conscience in matters moral and religious ere the status quo changes. Already we see the premonitory symptoms of a dangerous situation. On the one side are designing politicians appealing to the racial prejudices of this people; on the other side are equally designing politicians appealing to the prejudices against this people. Both act from the same motive, and the result of both will be the same, viz: the Negro will be forced into the maelstrom of partisan politics ere there can be a full development of public conscience. Never did a clearer call come to a religious body. It amounts to a heavenly vision, and God grant that we may not be disobedient to it.

For every minister we can train, fifty calls come in. For every teacher we can train, a half dozen schools will open. We find ourselves in such environments that we can prepare these and send them out, provided we can have the means to take advantage of our opportunities. Below we give some of the elements in our favor.



After five years in school where he has earned his way.

(1) The Southern Christian Institute is located in the heart of the Black Belt, near to three great railroad systems. We have over twelve hundred acres of as good land as is found in this locality, on which is probably four hundred thousand feet of timber, whoch can be worked in mill and factory.

(2) Our white ministers of our southern churches are taking a keen interest in the work and are ready to stand shoulder to shoulder with the ministers of the north to give to this people the humility and purity of Christ. The leaders of the auxiliary work of the C. W. B. M. are giving the work their best thought and effort. The white people of our immediate community have gone out of their way in many instances to express their good will and appreciation of the work.

(3) Our Negro ministers and churches are coming into full fellowship in the work. It is true, we appealed to them for an educational collection each fall during the past five years, and at no time have they given over $600; but this is a seed-sowing time, and our Negro churches that have never done any sustained work of this kind can not be expected to throw themselves into the work with the confidence of experienced workers. Under the circumstances the progress has been most gratifying. Two years ago we invited them to come to our commencement and engage in a conference, which we called a Workers' Conference. Five delegates from four states responded. Last year over twenty-five came, and this year it promises fair to be an outpouring of our churches from many states.

It was C. C. Smith who called this a great training school, and in view of the things mentioned above, it may well be called that. Already we are looked to for trained workers. The Lum Graded School is almost manned by our young people. The Martinsville Christian Institute wrote to us for a Bible instructor, and one of our young men went. Last year Utica Institute employed one of our graduates. Recently the principal wrote of him, saying that he is acting as chaplain, teaching some of the sciences, acting as commandant, has taken a gang of hands to the saw-mill and sawed lumber and made seats for chapel hall, has laid the brick for a new forge, has acted as buying agent, and has edited the college paper; all done creditably (but not all at one time); and the principal adds, "We share our honor with the Southern Christian Institute, his alma mater, and we wish to say that the school that can turn out such men must be in the vanguard of civilization."

But if we are to meet the demand upon us, we shall have to enlarge greatly. Jamaica and Liberia are both laying the foundation of industrial schools modeled after the Southern Christian Institute, and they are calling for workers. A centennial fund is being raised to start a school in Texas, and they have repeatedly told us that they will look to us for workers. Our present outside aid is less than a large number of our largest churches expend on their local field. It is clear that we must either cease to attempt to lead the work that is to influence ten millions of people, or we must in some way try to provide adequate means to meet the tremendously increasing demands on us.

The work we do in the Southern Christian Institute is different from anything heretofore attempted by the church. From many of our public schools the Bible is excluded because of sectarian jealousy, and the pupils receive almost no moral training such as can be given through the authority of the word.

With us there is no restriction in the use of the Bible. We have two regular Bible classes, one studying the Old Testament and the other the New. At 10 o'clock each day all meet in Chapel Hall for a common Bible study. The first fifteen minutes are taken up in reciting verses from the lesson about to be studied. There is great interest in this, and it is hard to stop them when they get well started. The next fifteen minutes are taken up in discussing and explaining the lesson. For the fall term we take one of the Gospels; for the winter term, Acts; for the spring term, Proverbs. In this way the students get a good knowledge of the ministry of Christ and the inauguration of the work by the Apostles. The book of Proverbs is peculiarly adapted to the teaching of social duties. Its teachings on thrift and honesty in everyday dealing produce wonderful results.

In addition to these we have our regular church service, our Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., our Sunday-school and Y. P. S. C. E. and our Boys' and Girls' Clubs. Now in the midst of this influence we are carrying on our industrial work. Most of this is for the maintenance of the school. On the farm we raise our corn, cotton, sweet potatoes, etc.; in our garden we raise the vegetables needed for the table. And then the stock and poultry have to be looked after. New buildings have to be erected, and the old ones have to be kept in repair. The tools have to be repaired in the blacksmith shop, and pipes from engines and machinery and the water apparatus have to be repaired in the plumb shop, the gutters, etc., of the many buildings going to the tin shop. All the work of scattering abroad the influence is done in the printing office. The girls cook the victuals, can the fruit, make the bedding and the clothing needed by the school, keep the buildings neat and tidy, do the laundering, and whatever comes under their care. Here is a social settlement, a Christian colony, in which all the lessons of life come to them under the purest influence. How can it help producing men and women who can do the great work of lifting up this people? Had Paul had such a system of education to follow him into Europe, there would not have been a "Dark Age."

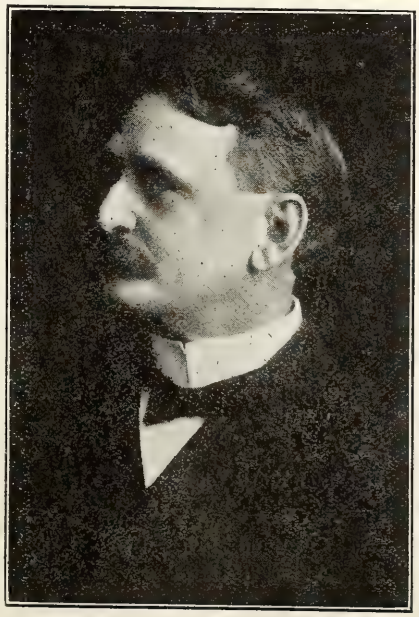
Pen Pictures of Business Men—III

ALBERT R. TEACHOUT



Among the business men of our brotherhood well known for their generous gifts is Albert R. Teachout, of Cleveland. Indeed, a glance over his mail some morning might convince one that he was entirely too well known. For several weeks while he was confined to his residence recovering from an attack of the grip his wife undertook to help him with his letters. "Really, we must send something here," said she as she read a beseeching appeal. "All right," replied her husband, "put down the amount you think we should give." And so on with the next and the next, till after a while Brother Teachout said he noticed the amounts suggested were getting smaller, and occasionally one would be passed over. Finally, when the pile was completed, she gave a sigh and said: "Dear me, I wish we had a gold mine!" It would take several gold mines to respond to all the calls that come. Mr. Teachout has not a gold mine, but has a successful business that has been built up by enterprise, honesty and persevering efforts. He is the vice-president and manager of the A. Teachout Co.; president of the Teachout Sash, Door and Glass Co., of Columbus, O.; president of the Teachout Realty Co., and director of a number of other business corporations. For five years after the establishment was opened in Cleveland there was not a penny of profit to show for all the investment and labor. Mr. and Mrs. Teachout look back upon these years of sacrifice and struggle, when the little ones were growing up around them, as the best of their lives. Besides the lessons learned in the school of adversity, Brother Teachout's success has been promoted by other helpful influences. The example of his noble father, with whom he has been constantly and intimately associated, not only in family but in business and church relations, the care of a mother whose supreme desire was that he should grow up to be a good and useful man; the wholesome atmosphere of Hiram College, where he received his education; his active participation in religious work, and last, but by no means least, the gracious influence of his wife, who has been to him all that can be included in the word "helpmeet." Brother Teachout would put down as the red letter day of his life 1873, when he won as his bride Miss Sarah A. Parmly, daughter of David Parmly, of Lake county, Ohio. Their home has been blessed with the rearing of three children: Katherine, wife of W. F. Rothenberger, of Chicago, who goes to Cleveland to succeed me; Albert R., Jr., of Utica, Ohio, and David W., a senior in Hiram College. There are two grandchildren, Ruth Rothenberger and Floyd S. Teachout. Mention of the family group does not seem complete without the name of Miss Kate Parmly, Mrs. Teachout's talented sister, who helps to dispense the bountiful hospitality of their home.

There may be more liberal givers among us than the Teachout family, but there are none who have greater joy in their giving. They have special pleasure in their living link, W. E. Gordon, a missionary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions at Mahoba, India. The receipt of a letter from Mr. Gordon telling of the progress of the work is an event in the home. Brother Teachout never allows his individual gifts to the missionary societies to interfere with his contributions through the church channels. His checks appear just as regularly as the days of the missionary calendar.

Brother Teachout does not believe, either, that a man's obligations to the Lord are discharged when he has made his gifts of money; that we can do by purse what the Master meant us to do in person; that we can "do by proxy the work of proximity." "Jesus did not send his love, he brought it." Sunday morning finds him bright and early at the Lord's house, where for many years as superintendent his executive talents have been useful in building up one of the best of our Bible schools. As an elder of the Franklin Circle Church, he is on hand to preside at the Lord's table. He relies on the prayer-meeting as the middle pier to keep braced up the bridge between Lord's days. He is not a silent worshiper, but knows the reward of that new beatitude, "Blessed is he that taketh hold of the cold end of the prayer-meeting."

If Brother Teachout has a hobby in religious work, it is that of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society, whose interests he has served for many years as a member of the board and treasurer of its trust funds. He is also a very loyal and influential member of the board of Hiram College.

Some one has summed up the duty of Christians with reference to the gospel in these words: "Go. Help go. Let go." Of these the hardest is to let go." Mr. and Mrs. Teachout have lately been called upon to prove their faithfulness in this test. Their second son, David, a young man of fine presence and engaging manners, who lately won first honors both in the Hiram College and state oratorical contests, has volunteered for the mission field. On one side there was the opportunity of a successful business career, the comforts of a palatial home and the culture of a great city; on the other, the Macedonian call. It was hard "to go"; it was harder "to let go." But Brother Teachout has said constantly that the Christian ministry is the noblest and best of callings. He has induced several young men to turn from business or other professions to the ministry. His favorite scripture is John 3:16: "He gave his son." When David sails for China he could not go with parents' consent more freely or fully given. After this, anything more that I might write concerning our brother would seem superfluous.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

A full generation is said to be thirty-three and a third years. One who has served so long may be said to have served his generation. Whether faithfully or unfaithfully done, this is the record of the Vermont Avenue pastorate. Perhaps I should stop keeping anniversaries. Some one may say: "The pastor is growing old. He is nearing the dead line. He is becoming reminiscent. Go to, let us Oslerize him." There is no "dead line" except as the man himself makes it.

For old and young there is a great divine purpose, and the supreme purpose of a church, or a Christian, is the advancement of the Kingdom and the winning of souls for the King. To carry forward the work of the Master which he has entrusted to his church, should be the one all-important concern with every one of his disciples. Some one fancies the Master, soon after his return to his Father's house, walking arm in arm with Gabriel, and Gabriel says: "Master, you died for the whole world down there, did you not?" "Yes." "You must have suffered much," looking into the great face with the marks still upon it. "Yes." "And do they all know about it, Master?" "Oh no, only a few in Palestine know about it so far." "Well, Master, what is your plan? What have you done about telling the world that you died for, that you have died for them?" "I asked Peter and James and John and Andrew, and some more of them, just to make it the business of their lives to tell others, and the others to tell others, and these others, others, and yet others, and still others, until the last man in the farthest circle has heard the story and felt the thrilling and enthralling power of it."

And Gabriel hesitates. He knows us down here; and answers: "Yes, but suppose Peter fails. Suppose after a while John simply fails to tell others. Suppose their descendants, their successors way off in the early part of the twentieth century get so busy about other things that they do not tell others? What then?" And the Master quits a moment, thinking of the suffering he has undergone, thinking of the loss of the man who has not been told, thinking of somebody's faithlessness; but answers at last, "Gabriel, I haven't made any other plans. I am counting on them."

Yes, counting on us; counting on every Church of Christ, on every follower of Christ, on you, on me; and if we fail, we make his death a failure. No other plan. Nelson's word at Trafalgar was: "England expects every man to do his duty!" Democrats and Republicans are in a great campaign for the control of the government of the nation, and every voter is expected to cast his vote. The church of Jesus Christ has 1,000,000,000 in heathen lands, and vast numbers in so-called Christian lands to win for Christ, and the Master expects every Christian to do his part. "He that winneth souls is wise," said the wisest of men. Or, as the New Version puts it, "He is wise that winneth souls." He must be a wise man. No fool's errand, this. It demands the best man with the best skill, finest tact, keenest subtilty, truest devotion, most untiring perseverance. "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men." How much that means? "Fishers of men!" A member of my flock—a strictly veracious disciple of Isaac Walton—spent seventeen years at Harper's Ferry, gave eight hours a day, Sundays excepted, to fishing, and I sat on a rock and told him to do it, and he caught three—three small bass and was proud of the achievement! Shame on us, fishers of men, that we have less patient industry.

"Fear not, Simon," said Jesus, "from henceforth thou shalt catch men," or as the Greek has it, "Thou shalt catch men alive." The contrast is between the fish as they lay glittering in dead heaps and men who should be caught not for death, but for life. The fish as a symbol of Christianity comes from this fact: The Greek for fish, "Icthus," made the initials Jesous Christos Theou Uios Soter, "Jesus Christ, Son of God, Savior." A boy takes hook and line and goes out for fish. He throws his line from the bridge. No fish. He sits on a log and throws. No fish. He stands in the sunlight and casts his line. No fish. He changes the bait and throws. No fish. He goes by the dam, stands in the shadow where the fish do not see him, and throws the line, and hardly has he dropped his hook before the cork is jerked under, and the fish come to him as fast as he can throw them above. In fishing, go where the fish are, offer them the right kind of bait, and then observe three rules—first, keep yourself out of sight; second, keep yourself farther out of sight; third, keep yourself still farther out of sight—rules as applicable in catching men as in catching fish. We are to win men. A telegram was sent back from England by a woman to her husband. She had left New York with all her children, was shipwrecked, and sent back the message, "Saved—alone!" Ah! that last word. May we never have to say it as we enter the city which hath foundations.

Some one wrote me a few days ago the question: "If you had the ear of the youth of the land two minutes, what message would you give them?" Think of the opportunity, and only two minutes! I answered: "If I had the ear of the youth of the land two minutes I would say something like this:

Fear God. There is a God and he reigns in heaven and upon earth. Men were made by him and are accountable to him. Desire him more than gold or pleasure; and desiring, seek him; and seeking, find him, and finding him you shall be satisfied.

Keep his commandments. Obedience is better than sacrifice, better than forms and ceremonies, better than prayers and fastings, better than professions and verbal protestations. What you say, what you do even, does not count, but what you are. Obedience is your life. Obedience lays such charge upon the whole man—body, soul, spirit, head, heart, hands, feet—as Mary, the mother of Jesus, upon the servants at the feast: "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it."

Be Christians. The best thing in the world is to be a Christian. Enthrone Christ in your hearts and lives. Imbibe his spirit, be transformed into his likeness, walk in his steps. Let not the love of money nor the love of the world control you, but the love of Christ. Believe on him. Confess him. Know him. Keep company with him. Serve him.

Make the world Christian. Building up the kingdom of Christ in all the

THE WAY OUT

From Weakness to Power by Food Route.

Getting the right start for the day's work often means the difference between doing things in wholesome comfort, or dragging along half dead all day.

There's more in the use of proper food than many people ever dream of—more's the pity.

"Three years ago I began working in a general store," writes a man, "and between frequent deliveries and more frequent customers, I was kept on my feet from morning till night.

"Indigestion had troubled me for some time, and in fact my slight breakfast was taken more from habit than appetite. At first this insufficient diet was not noticed much, but at work it made me weak and hungry long before noon.

"Yet a breakfast of rolls, fried foods and coffee meant headache, nausea and kindred discomforts. Either way I was losing weight and strength, when one day a friend suggested that I try a 'Grape-Nuts breakfast.'

"So I began with some stewed fruit, Grape-Nuts and cream, a soft-boiled egg, toast and a cup of Postum. By noon I was hungry, but with a healthy, normal appetite. The weak, languid feeling was not there.

"My head was clearer, nerves steadier than for months. To-day my stomach is strong, my appetite normal, my bodily power splendid and head always clear.

"There's a Reason."

world—let this be your first thought. Let the missionary spirit possess you. Let the uttermost man feel your influence. Love your city, love your land, but love, too, your race. Let your constant prayer be, "Lord, use me!" and be willing to be used of God in any way to promote the kingdom of the Lord of lords and King of kings.

Such a message may answer for young and old. No man is in danger of a dead line in his ministry who is moved by it. Churches that are dominated by these sentiments must go forward. The world must feel their force for righteousness. Our eight congregations here have thus worked together for one great aim. Over half a million dollars we have raised for the work of the gospel and more than five thousand souls have been gathered in during these years of our existence at the Capital. The Vermont Avenue Church itself has, during the generation of my service, contributed half this sum and added seventeen hundred to its membership. We thank God and take courage.

This thirtieth year in some respects has been our best. Seventy were added. Our Sunday-school interests were never so prosperous. Our Woman's Work and Christian Endeavor were never more efficient. Our missionary offerings were larger than in any year in our history. Our own missionary is sustained in the foreign field. Our history in the three decades is marked—the first, by the building of the Vermont Avenue church; the second, by the establishment of the Ninth Street Church; the third, by our era of expansion; this fourth should show the inauguration of a centennial church, the mightiest of all. The work at the Capital must go forward. We are but laying foundations. The great task is yet before us. The apostolic word to Washington is still that of Paul to the Church of God at Corinth: "O ye Corinthians, be ye enlarged!"

Why You Should Visit New Orleans

By W. M. Taylor

Because New Orleans is unlike any other city in the world, situated in the "Land of Sunshine," and flowers and mirth and song; in appearance, dress and mode of living, a world's metropolis in all colors—in one street the characteristic people and business of to-day, and in the next the styles and customs of two centuries ago.

Because her history is quaint and romantic—a moulded past under a verdant resonant present, as evidenced by the curious and antique fragments of royal ancestry found in the old French quarter, where a clatter of foreign tongues may be heard in the narrow streets, and the gay notes of the Spanish Fandango may still be heard mingling with the soul-stirring charms of the French Marseillaise, and the palatial residences and sky-scrapers which characterize present-day civilization with exceptional splendor and prosperity.

Because her climate is healthy and delightful. When the icy winds and blizzards hold sway in the North, wrapping their frigid cloaks over everything and everybody, the residents of New Orleans are basking in sunshine and enjoying a perfect out-door life under clear blue skies. It is called winter simply through courtesy to the season; for the greater part of what is known as the winter season is but sunshiny days in which is felt the tingle of a bracing atmosphere, especially lovely and attractive with the blue of the Italian skies overhead, the perfume of roses in the air, and the dazzling beauty and profusion of tropical bowers everywhere.

Because, in addition to her one hundred and ninety-five square miles of buildings, extending from the Mississippi River to Lake Pontchartrain, and from Southport to Chalmette, there are the outlying fields of sugar, cotton and rice; the orange, fig and banana groves and the ship-lined levee where vessels from all parts of the world, together with large white river steamers, and occasionally a battleship, lie peacefully on the waters of the Mississippi.

Because it does not matter much in what direction lies the taste of the visitor. Whether exemplified in seeking for old and forgotten lore, curious, antique and musty byways, evidences of a previous occupation, art, religion or science; the magnificent cemeteries, mausoleums and monuments of the dead, and the superstitions concerning the vaulted cathedral, St. Roch, and the wishing shrines; the sociological conditions as manifest in the Sicilian luggers laden with tropical fruits, the Indian shrimp girls and herb gatherers, the Arcadian hunters and Dago fishermen, the Voodoo negroes, the country Creoles and their dark-eyed belles: the French opera, Roman carnival, Spanish architecture or the delights of a purely epicurean nature, New Orleans, in its peculiar effects and institutions, is in a position to fully satisfy the demand, and is almost equal to a trip around the world.

Because October 9-15-08, is the time for the International Missionary Convention of the Church of Christ, and you can have the benefits of concessions made by the railroads of America, which will enable you to make the trip at half the usual cost at a time when the climate is perfect and the opportunities to enjoy the unique features of the city most profitably, and at the same time be associated with five thousand of your brethren in the fellowship, plans and hopes of evangelizing the whole world. And here you shall feel the heart-throb of the grandest body of Christ's disciples on earth and the pulse-beat of the missionary zeal of the whole world.

Because of the impress you shall make for the cause dearest our hearts upon one of the most important and most impressionable sections of our great nation, where Christ is not known as we know him, and the people are crying for the light of his Gospel.

Because it is your duty, privilege, and profit to come just at this crisis in the history of the Church of Christ in the Southland.

The French Market in New Orleans.

The French Market was at first a resort for the Indians, who brought for sale the dried sassafras leaves from which "gumbo file" is made. These Indians belonged to the powerful Choctaw tribe, which never took up arms against the United States, but were bound by the deepest ties to the early settlers of Louisiana, were always at the side of the colonists in the early troubles of the settlement, and when Jackson led the Americans against the British on that memorable day, January 8, 1815, they followed the fortunes of the Americans and merited a compliment from "Old Hickory" in his report to the government.

In 1723 the French first built the market on this spot, but it was destroyed by a hurricane, and the present market, built in 1813 at a cost of $30,000, stands on the exact spot where the first market was built. It is the most remarkable and characteristic place in New Orleans. Under its roof every language is spoken. It is divided into four divisions, the meat, the fish, the vegetable and the fruit market. The buyers and sellers are men and women of all races; there are the Gascow butchers, the Italian and Spanish fruit venders, the German and Italian vegetable women; there are the Moors, with their strings of beads and crosses fresh from the Holy Land; there are peddlers and tinners and small notion dealers; the "rabias Meu," with their little stores on wheels; there are Chinese, Hindu, Jew, Teuton, Malay, Spanish, French, Creole and English, all united in a ceaseless babel of tongues that is simply bewildering.

The highest praise that can be bestowed upon any article for sale in the market is to declare that it is Creole. Hence, one hears on every side the application "Creole chickens," "Creole eggs," "Creole vegetables," "Creole figs," "Creole oranges," etc. This term is used to distinguish the commercial produce of Louisiana from that brought in from other countries. The term "Creole" means "a native of Spanish America or the West Indies, descended from European ancestors." The Creoles are a noble, pure-blooded race, who are proud of their descent from the best families of France and Spain, who applied to themselves the term "Creole" to distinguish the "old families" of the state from the families of emigrants or of other nationalities. Marion Crawford said of them, after visiting New Orleans: "You will find in little old French houses, old-fashioned and tumbling in ruins, houses that must have been built in the last century, with their long hallways opening upon queer little courtyards, and all suggesting another age and civilization, a people the most charming and cultured I have ever met, with all the grace and dignity of manners and the equal in birth and bearing of the most distinguished in European centers.'' Such are the inhabitants in the district of the French Market, which is not far from the Atheneum Hall, where the sessions of our International Missionary Convention will be held October 9-15, and it will prove a most delightful diversion for you to rise early some morning during the convention and make the rounds for the greatest study in sociology it has been the privilege of any one to have outside of New Orleans.

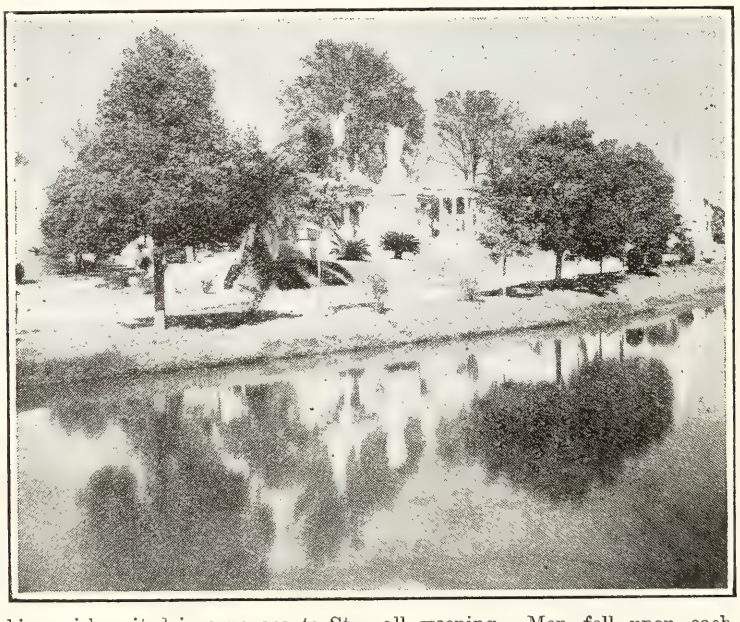
This is the one convention of your life that you can not afford to miss.

The Cemeteries of New Orleans.

Unique among the cemeteries of the United States are those of New Orleans. The custom here of burying above ground has brought to the assistance of Nature all the graces which money and art can combine to make fair and beautiful the resting places of the dead. The most beautiful of these is Metairie, a lovely spot, where to have loved ones sleeping seems to rob death of half its terrors; but the one of most interest from the standpoint of superstitions is ''St. Rochs Cemetery and Shrine.'' The old Gathis chapel of St. Roch is one of the most quaint and picturesque edifices in New Orleans. The chapel was erected in 1871 by a pious priest, ''Father Trevis,'' with his own hands, in fulfillment of a vow that if none of his parishioners should die during the epidemic of 1866, he would, stone by stone, build a chapel in thanksgiving to God.



He and his parish united in a novena to St. Roch, the patron of health. The city suffered to a great extent, but none of this congregation died. Then the old priest built this chapel and called the spot ''Campo Santo,'' or ''Holy Field.'' Soon from all parts of New Orleans pilgrims sought out the chapel, and it became a favorite shrine for the suffering and afflicted, until in time it acquired the prestige of the miracle-working shrines of Europe. Hundreds of tapers, the offerings of devout pilgrims, are always burning before the altar, and on all sides of the dim chapel are seen ''exvoteos,'' thank-offerings, placed there in gratitude for favors granted. The shrine is surmounted by a statue of St. Roch, and at his side is the representation of a good dog, which fed him miraculously when he lay afflicted with the plague and abandoned in the forests of Munich many centuries ago. Father Trevis, in 1871, converted the unused ground into a cemetery, and it is now one of the most picturesque burying places in New Orleans, and beneath the sanctuary, in a crypt built by his own hands, lie the remains of the founder of St. Roch.

The chapel is designed after the old mortuary chapels still extant in German and Hungarian countries. Each morning the bell hanging in the quaint belfry is tolled in accordance with Hungarian custom, and every Monday morning mass is offered in the chapel for the repose of the souls of those interred within the consecrated grounds.

The place, with its open air stations of the cross, its crowd of kneeling worshipers, its well authenticated legends of miracles, might well be the remnant of a medieval abbey instead of an American church.

It will pay you while attending the International Missionary Convention of the Churches of Christ, October 9-15, to visit this shrine. You will appreciate all the more a pure and undefiled religion, free from superstition, and will realize as never before your duty to a benighted people.

The Glory of the Church

the servant's place till Jesus set the example. Then the Upper Room was filled with the glory of humble service. It is this spirit that makes glorious the church. How, centuries ago, it glorified the little village of Assissi, where St. Francis lived! He was the son of a rich man who, when he became a Christian, renounced him. He was never a priest, never ordained, but a plain layman. He went out into the highways to do the work Jesus would have him do. He fed the poor and taught them. He built houses for the lepers and lived among them, calling them ''God's patients.'' He washed their sores. He nursed them and toiled for them.

John of Bologna went to hear him preach. He expected from so famous a man great oratory, but was surprised to hear a quiet, plain, colloquial address. But when it was done John was surprised to see the crowd all weeping. Men fell upon each other's necks and forgave past enmities; thousands knelt down to kiss the very hem of the frayed brown robe he wore as he went out. They said Christ is born again. He became the great reviver of the church and his life thrills ours to-day. He manifested the spirit of Jesus. In every community there is need of a Francis of Assissi. There are mourning ones to be comforted, discouraged ones to cheer and sin-sick to be reclaimed. From this church may the good news go forth that Christ has been born again here—born in the hearts and lives of those who are filled with his spirit.

III. This church will be glorious by the work of Christ carried on here.

What is that work? To the waiting disciples in the Upper Room after the resurrection he gave instructions concerning the work: ''Whose soever sins ye forgive they are forgiven; whose soever sins ye retain they are retained.''

The great work that Jesus would do through his followers is to set men free from their sins. To bring deliverance to the captives. To set at liberty those that are bound. His last prayer was, ''Father, forgive them.'' It was the ''greater work'' of which he spoke to his disciples. Christ wrought no greater miracle than the miracle of making the sin-blackened life white and clean. It is the miracle that is not confined to apostolic days. It is witnessed every day and in every church.

Horace Mann once said upon the dedication of a school building which had been built at great expense: ''If the life of only one boy is saved to the higher and better things by this building, it will be money well spent.'' When asked if that were not putting it rather extravagantly, he said: ''Not if it were my boy or yours.'' If this church should be the means of setting but one man free from sin, it will pay a thousand times, if that man be your husband or son or brother. But not one, but many, will here find life. Glorious as this church seems to-day, it will daily become more so. As the Oriental ship carries spices until every beam and timber becomes fragrant with the precious aroma, so in this church shall you, in the years to come, preach the truth, manifest the spirit and do the work of the Master till he shall fill this church to overflowing with his glory.

A KENTUCKY EXPERIENCE
Coffee and Tea Still at Work.

A Ky. lady had a very agreeable experience in leaving off coffee drinking, which she found harmful, and taking on Postum. She never loses an opportunity to tell others of her good fortune. She says:

''For over 20 years I suffered from nervous trouble. Four years ago I was down with nervous prostration and heart trouble. After several months of misery, my doctor, one of the best in the country, told me I must quit coffee and tea.

''What was I to do? I must have some warm beverage for my breakfast as I had never done without one in my life.

''I decided to try Postum, little thinking it would amount to anything. At first I did not like it, but when we boiled it 15 minutes, until it was dark and rich, it was delicious, and I soon began to feel better.

''After using Postum constantly three years I feel like a different person. I always had been a poor sleeper, but now sleep well and am in perfect health. And I give the credit to Postum.

''My entire family now use it in preference to any other beverage at meals. I am an enthusiastic friend of Postum and I know that what it has done for me it will do for others, so I never let a chance go by to recommend it to those who suffer from coffee drinking.''

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read ''The Road to Wellville,'' in pkgs. ''There's a Reason.''

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Our Budget

—Old Bethany!

—Our first college.

—A great part of the great life work of Alexander Campbell.

—It must be endowed and made a permanent institution.

—One dollar subscriptions are solicited from every member of the Christian churches.

—The cause of Bethany should have a presentation next Lord's day.

—New Orleans is making preparation for our international convention—October 9-15 is the date.

—In our next two issues we hope to publish the program and give much space to our work in the South.

—We very much regret that Brother Garrison, Editor-in-Chief of "The Christian-Evangelist," is unable to write his Easy Chair for this issue. Only once or twice before in a period of several years has this contribution failed to appear in "The Christian-Evangelist." It is a unique page in our current literature, and has thousands of readers who look forward to it weekly with the greatest of interest. It is the helpful part of "The Christian-Evangelist" more than any other part. Its writer was in great pain when he last dictated. The operation, which we announced last week as having taken place immediately on Brother Garrison's return to St. Louis, gave only temporary relief. A second operation proved necessary, and this was performed on Friday. While it seemed to reach the seat of the trouble, the patient has been a keen sufferer. It is not thought that there is any danger, but it may be some time before there will be relief from pain and an opportunity to recover strength. We know that thousands of Brother Garrison's friends will be interested in this personal statement, and will remember him in their prayers. Dr. Scott Parsons, the surgeon in charge of the case, being asked for a statement, kindly sends the following: "Dr. Garrison is suffering from a phlegmonous inflammation of the neck, which apparently had its origin in or near the parotid gland of the left side. The inflammation has spread to the lymphatic glands and tissues below the angle of the jaw. Friday, September 11, an operation was performed and a quantity of pus evacuated. His condition, though painful and protracted, is not necessarily of a serious nature."

—Charles E. McVay will assist I. H. Fuller in a meeting at Fremont, Neb., in October.

—L. E. Lakin, of Greenville, Miss., during a vacation meeting had 12 additions—five of them baptisms—at Blackwell chapel.

—Fred E. Hagin, who returns to his mission field in Tokyo, will keep the readers of "The Christian-Evangelist" informed about things in Japan.

—S. M. Connor, of Greenwood, Ind., expects to go to California in the winter. He will be available for meetings before going, for expenses and free will offerings.

—Wynn Stout reports to the president of the state board that Brother Manier, one of the old Mississippi preachers, occupied his pulpit at West Point on August 30.

—L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., will dedicate the new house of worship at Blackwell, Okla., September 20. Brethren from surrounding congregations are invited.

—The church at Washington, Ill., contributed $12.75 to the Church Extension offering, which was more than treble that of last year Ernest H. Reed is the minister.

—Spicer and Douthit are to hold a meeting for J. D. Greer and the church at Laddonia, Mo., beginning September 25. Of course, a great meeting is expected.

—Grant Lewis points out that since 1890 there have been granted to California churches thirty-two loans by the Church Extension board, aggregating nearly $45,500. He further points out that only 52 of California's 270 churches took the offering last year.

—The church at Rossville, Ill., has had a good year under the leadership of J. P. Givens, and the congregation is very hopeful as they prepare for a meeting to be led by J. V. Coombs in October.

—On September 13 R. G. Frank celebrated the fifth anniversary of the beginning of his pastorate at Liberty, Mo. Brother Frank has done a good work there, and is much beloved.

—John T. Stivers has just entered upon his work at Corona, Cal., a hard field, but where a victory is looked for. W. T. Adams has done fine work there, sacrificing as few men would do.

—Texas people expecting to go to the New Orleans convention should correspond with J. C. Mason, Box 280, Station A, Dallas, with a view of making up a Texas party and securing the best accommodations.

—The dedication of the Central Church of Christ, Findlay, Ohio, is to take place on Saturday and Sunday, September 19, 20, with F. M. Rains in charge. G. H. Sims is the minister, and an invitation is extended to brethren in the vicinity.

—Dr. W. R. Dale, of Sumner, Ill., who is superintendent of the temperance department of the Lawrence County Sunday-school Association, has reprinted from our current topics page, and is circulating as a tract, the article "Two Blades of Grass."

—Joseph Gaylor writes in complimentary terms of A. R. Wallace, of Ozark, Mo., who recently held a fine meeting at Nixa, reported last week. Brother Gaylor says that M. M. Mundell, of Sparta, can also be secured for a meeting.

—We have received announcement of the marriage of Norman H. Robertson, minister of our church at Colfax, Ill., to Mabel Currie, at Everton, Ont., and William E. Lattin, of Havana, N. D., to Margaret Dixon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paph Julian, of Madison, S. D.

—J. J. Cole, of Washington C. H., Ohio, takes the work at Clarksville, Tenn., beginning September 20. He will be succeeded by Grant Waller, of Galion, Ohio. If the brethren at Clarksville will respond to their opportunity, a great work can be done in this southern city.

—We are glad to learn that at Fruita, Colo., there are plans to build. A lot has been donated by one who, formerly a member of the Baptist church, united with our congregation, and a Drake man, we understand, is to take the work. This is the result of a visit of Charles G. Stout.

—L. H. Harbord has resigned at Vandalia and Macedonia, Mo., to take up the work of county evangelist in Audrain county. J. C. Whitt, of Rolling Prairie, Ind., preaches at Vandalia September 20, and at Macedonia on the following Lord's day. Brother Harbord will still live at Vandalia.

—The church at Osceola, Iowa, has just entertained the district convention. This is one of the best churches in southwest Iowa, while the work is in very good condition under O. M. Pennock. He and the leaders there feel a heavy responsibility, and realize that where much is given much will be required.

—S. J. Vance, of Carthage, Mo., is planning a return trip to the great Snake River country of Southern Idaho, with a view to securing a home under the Carey act when he is too old to evangelize. Brother Vance would like to have a Christian colony in that district. He has open dates for meetings, and can furnish a singer if desired.

—J. H. Hardin, state superintendent of Bible school work in Missouri, expects to conduct a rally at the Compton Heights Church, St. Louis, September 27. An effort is being made to enlist all the Bible schools of the city to have a part in this rally at the afternoon hour. "Every member in the Bible school" will be one of the slogans of the rally.

—Since John T. Brown took charge of the work at Johnson City, Tenn., there have been seven additions, all by statement or letter except one. The church has one of the best Bible schools in the neighborhood, numbering over 600, with a Bible school class of 288 enrolled. The Church Extension offering was $100, almost twice what was given last year.

—The September number of the "American Home Missionary" is a special New Orleans issue, and gives much information about our convention city and the meeting to be held there. "The Christian-Evangelist" expects to publish, next week, a number in the interests of our convention and the work in Louisiana. Let the preachers not fail to make ample announcement about the convention.

—David H. Shields informs us that there were some very profitable Sunday evening services held by the churches at Salina, Kan., in the Chautauqua auditorium in the park, during July and August. On September 6 Brother and Sister Walter Menges, of Rath, India, the church's missionaries, were present, remaining over for a reception on Tuesday. It was an occasion of great delight and pleasure.

—In this issue we print a brief notice of Peter Vogel, whose death was announced in our columns some weeks ago. He was one of the Lord's elect. Born in Pennsylvania, in his early life he was a Catholic, but later graduated from Eureka College and did good work for the Master and our cause. He was much beloved, and readers of "The Christian-Evangelist" may know something of his spirit when we say that he was a regular reader and strong admirer of this paper.

—The First Christian Church, of Beaumont, Texas, has, writes G. W. Seibert, arranged to send two of its young members, Edgar Wasson and Robert Welderman, who have volunteered to enter the ministry, to a college of their own selection, and they go to Kimberlin Heights, Tenn. The missionary field of the Beaumont church has widened, sustaining a living link missionary, and in connection with the church at Houston has W. O. Stevens and L. D. Parnell in the field.

—Since organizing a year ago, the church at Ordway, Colo., has been meeting in the public hall. During August enough money was raised to pay the balance due on lots, and a building is now being erected on one of the best locations in town. This will serve the needs of the congregation until it is able to put up a permanent structure. While the membership is small, it is large-hearted, and planning for larger things in the future. R. H. Newton has been preaching for the brethren since March, he living on a homestead near Haswell. He expects to locate again soon.

—A new work has been started in Everett, Mass., called the Union Christian church, with Adrian T. June as minister. There was a charter membership of 60, a Bible school of 62, and good Endeavor societies. Through the kindness of a friend the church has secured land at the corner of Vernal street and Pleasant avenue, erecting thereon a portable church with a good basement. The work has been self-supporting, and pledges have been made for missionary causes. The new work is located in a rapidly growing residential portion of the city, and has had additions in all departments since it was inaugurated. Brother June was formerly minister of the Hancock Street Church. We understand that the new organization stands for what are known as the beliefs of the Christian church.

—After four years of ministry for the church at Edinburg, Ind., T. H. Adams has resigned there to enter the evangelistic field. This pastorate, he says, has been the most happy and pleasant experience in all his ministerial career. The church is blessed with a good official board and the congregation, says Brother Adams, as a whole will be difficult to equal. His first meeting is at Milan, Mo., this month. Churches desiring his services can address him at 705 Conn street, Lawrence, Kan.

—T. L. Reed has been having a good time at Chapin, Ill. The church gave him a reception after he moved into the building which had been purchased and improved for a parsonage. Brother Reed went to the field in May, and the work has been succeeding. A contest with the Bible school at Versailles had been arranged prior to his going to Chapin, and the enrollment had increased from 85 to 144, though there was a falling off in August. A teacher training class is to be organized this month.

—Most of our colleges have either begun, or shortly will begin, their fall work. Eureka expects an exceptionally large number of ministerial students. Christian University, at Canton, in anticipation of a 50 per cent increase, has enlarged and renovated the college dormitory so as to be able to accommodate twice as many boarders as last year. The management was enabled to do this through the gift of $1,500 from a good sister in the town who has helped many times before.

—Edward Owers recently paid a visit to some points in Oklahoma. His congregation at Farmington, Mo., was organized before the Civil War, and while scattered then continued to exist and grow after the war. The value of the church house and parsonage is about $10,000, but there ought to be a new building to do the work that could be done in this field. A combined Bible school and church service is used there. Brother Owers, who hails from across the water, has been pastor at Farmington about three years.

—M. M. Smith recently established a new church at Stamps, in northeast Texas, whose district convention met at Long View, Aug. 31. Brother Smith also revived and brought into line and aggressive work the churches at Bethel and Center Grove, in Titus county. C. R. Cook is doing most excellent work in harmonizing and lining up for a forward movement some twelve or fourteen churches in Shelby and adjoining counties. As J. C. Mason, the state secretary says: This rural evangelization can not be overestimated. It is from these districts we will get pupils for our Christian schools and volunteers for the ministry and missionary work.

—From the bulletin of the First Christian Church, Bethany, Mo., where Andrew P. Johnson ministers, we take the following extract: "Times are hard, money is scarce, economy is a duty. Please stop my whisky? Oh, no; times are not hard enough for that. Please stop my tobacco and cigars? No, no; not these, but I must cut expenses. Please stop my jewels and plumes. No, not these, but ah! I have it now. Please stop my subscription to the church, and while I would like to see the heathen saved, I can not give anything to the cause of missions. Also please stop my magazines and the big daily papers? No, no; I could not get along without them, and especially the big Sunday edition, but please stop my religious paper, for—because I really must cut expenses." Is this you?

—Victor Dorris, of North Yakima, Wash., made a brief visit to the Editor last week. Brother Dorris was on his way from Wickliffe, Ky., where he had just closed a three weeks' meeting. There is no pastor there, but unusual interest was manifested and there were 32 additions, most of them grown men from the best people in the community. Brother Dorris was on his way to Tucson, Ariz., to assist J. Perry Conder in a meeting. But he really ought to take some rest. He has been at home for some time suffering from nervous prostration. He is a strong pastor-evangelist, and with returning health will do good work in that great northwest territory, whither he went a couple of years ago. Churches who can use his services should write him at North Yakima.

—We rejoice to know that M. M. Davis is able to be about again. A note from him informs us however, that he has resigned the pastorate of the Central Church, Dallas, Texas, and in accepting his resignation the church made him pastor emeritus. This is a deserved compliment. We have, for sometime, felt that Brother Davis would, perhaps, best serve our cause in Texas by becoming a bishop at large, and not be tied down to any one sphere of work. During the eighteen years of his ministry in Dallas, the present large building was erected at a cost of $65,500, which has all been paid for. From this mother church there has been a swarm six times, so that now there are seven congregations in the city and suburbs. Brother Davis has preached 2,412 sermons and has had 3,322 additions, about a third of these coming through the waters of baptism. During his ministry there he has written three books, "Queen Esther," "Elijah" and "First Principles."

—On another page we give some account of the work being done by the Southern Christian Institute. This is a work among the negroes that has the moral support of not only our own preachers in the South, but of all who are acquainted with it, irrespective of religious affiliations. Alva W. Taylor, of Eureka, was a recent visitor to the institute, and is enthusiastic about what it is accomplishing, and what it means for the negro and our country. He writes: "Many of us could profitably take a midwinter vacation at Edwards, Miss., and enjoy, for a few days, the hospitality of the old southern plantation, and go home with an enthusiasm for missionary work of the first importance that would multiply the offerings of our churches many fold for a work that is telling its story in the lives of such men as Jacob Kenoly and a host of others destined to be leaders among their colored brethren in the Southland, and let us hope like Kenoly in the Dark Continent." From Brother Taylor we learn that the whole plant is worth about $75,000, but was purchased for a fraction of that sum. President Lehman is pre-eminently a man for the head of such an institution. It is, no doubt, a great task to manage some 200 young people, who have come out from cabin homes where there was little control attempted. Brother Taylor heard the graduating orations, and says these would compare well with many delivered by college graduates. It may be possible for many of our brethren attending the New Orleans convention to stop off and visit the institution.

ALMOST A GENERATION IN WASHINGTON.

We, and the readers of "As Seen From the Dome," congratulate F. D. Power on the completion of another year's work in his long ministry at Washington, D. C. It was thirty-three years ago the first Sunday in September, we believe, that he preached his first sermon for the Vermont Avenue Christian Church. Among the crowd which filled every pew in the church this September were only half a dozen of the original membership. It is not by any means time for Brother Power to stop keeping anniversaries. While he has passed the dead line in accordance with the cry for youthful ministers it is not time to "Oslerize" him. He is one of our "livest" preachers. During the past year there have been seventy additions to the church. The congregation supports its own missionary in the foreign field, the Bible school has an attendance of 550, and the missionary offerings have been the largest in the history of the church. During Brother Power's present ministry the capital city has increased less than threefold, and the numbers of the Disciples of Christ more than elevenfold.

In the evening Brother Power took as his subject, "Sixty-three Years of Church History," reviewing the work of the churches of the Disciples of Christ from its inception down to the present day.

From the year 1813, when Alexander Campbell began his teachings, until 1855, there was no representation among the churches of the capital. In that year six persons met one night at the home of Dr. J. T. Barclay, in the southeast section of the city, and formed what is today the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, from which have also sprung eight missions and churches.

Dr. Barclay, who was afterward United States consul to Jerusalem, and a missionary, was the first pastor of the church, serving intermittently from 1844, when some meetings were held, although not as a church until 1856. Alexander Campbell visited the church in 1850 and 1856 and preached there, in the first meeting house, which was in an old engine house.

Among the more active workers in the church in those early days was Judge J. S. Black, United States attorney general and secretary of state under President Buchanan. His most active work was done from 1857 to 1861. Many humorous stories are told of an old colored driver of Judge Black, who had an aversion to having the judge and his wife worship in the old engine house, when every other cabinet member worshipped in the "swell Presbyterian church down the street."

From 1863 to 1869 the congregation worshiped in the city hall, gaining the boon through the Hon. Ward Lemon, then marshal of the district. Henry T. Anderson served as pastor in the year 1868, and was succeeded the next year by O. A. Bartholomew, whose term of service lasted for four years.

A little frame chapel, which had been used by another church, was purchased in 1871. It was located in M street, near Ninth street northwest, but was moved the same year to the present location in Vermont avenue. From 1873 to 1875 the church had no regular pastor. In 1875 Brother Power came to the congregation, and has served uninterruptedly ever since.

The present building was erected between 1882 and 1884, at a cost of about $63,000. President Chester A. Arthur was among those present at the exercises connected with laying the corner stone in 1882.

Probably the most noted man whose name was ever enrolled with the church's membership was President James A. Garfield, who, with his family, was a regular attendant and active worker of the church body for many years. He joined the congregation when he first came to the capital, as a member of Congress, and remained until his death.

As President he would permit of no extra attention being paid to him, saying:

"I am not there as the President of the United States, but as a disciple of Christ and worshiper in his house."

Eight other churches had their inception in the congregation of the Vermont Avenue Church. These bodies have received into their several rolls more than 1,700 members. They have contributed over $250,000 to Christian objects and gathered more than 5,000 souls.

To Illinois Preachers.

Most of the matter for the new year book of Illinois churches is in the hands of the publisher. We are now preparing the latest corrected list of Illinois preachers for publication. We wish to call the especial attention of all our preachers who have moved into Illinois in the last six months and urge them to drop us a card stating name and address, when they located in the state, and for what churches they preach. Also those who have changed their addresses within the state in the last six months are urged to write us their new addresses. This is important and must be attended to at once to insure a correct list. Do it now!

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Newton, Ia., Sept. 14.—Our community hard to stir, but Small and St. John stirring it in great shape; over twenty-five first week; fifteen hundred heard kind but powerful sermon on "Sin of Division and Only Remedy," last night.—W. H. Betts.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Fostoria, O., Sept. 13.—Hundreds could not get in to hear Herbert Yeuell last night. One hundred and fifty-six to date, 22 to-day; wonderful victory for this conservative city and comparatively unknown church. Two union meetings within a year utterly failed. Our audiences very safe and confessions every service. Yeuell's two men's and women's meetings greatest in history of Fostoria. Membership doubled. We are praising the Lord for this victory.—V. G. Hostetter.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Texarkana, Ark., September 13.—Meeting seven days old. twenty-eight added; greatest crowd to-night. Meeting last year gathered in the Sunday-school. Will have a victory.—Wilhite and Adams.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Winfield, Kan., September 14.—Meeting growing in interest; thirty-six to date; rink auditorium seating 1,500 filled; gleaned by recent meeting; Albert Nichols fine pastor to work with.—Fife and sons.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Wichita, Kan., September 14.—In first seven days of Scoville meetings with Central Church, 123 additions. Thirty-six to-day following week of labor day, state fair and Ringling's circus. To night two thousand at two simultaneous meetings in auditorium and Sunday-school basement. Many turned away; building tabernacle to accommodate 3,000 and first service there Wednesday night. —E. W. Allen.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Grand Island, Neb., September 14.—Meeting closed with 20 added at to-night's invitation, making 129 total. Bible school almost trebled; new converts pledge $500 to current expenses; pastor's salary raised; church rejoicing. Missouri Valley, Ia., next.—William J. Lockhart and Garmong.

Ministerial Exchange.

J. A. Holton, who has been minister to our church at Long View, Texas, is very heartily commended by that church as a faithful and earnest preacher of the gospel, and a man whose character is absolutely above reproach or criticism. He is open to take another pastorate.

One of our successful ministers wishes to spend the coming winter in the South—not for health, but for a change—and is open to engagement. Evangelizing preferred, but pastorate acceptable. Address Box 144, Abingdon, Ill.

The church at Sandoval, Ill., desires to secure the services of a capable minister for full time. They can pay $600 per year and furnish parsonage.—Robert Bellamy, clerk.

Miss Lida B. Seamands, singing evangelist, may be addressed 217 Lobban street, Warrensburg, Mo., for the fall and winter work. References given. Terms reasonable.

A member of the Christian Church, competent to teach vocal and instrumental music, can find a good location by writing to W. A. Crockett, Enterprise, Ore.

Moving Pictures in the Foreign Missionary Rallies.

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society is planning a great campaign of missionary rallies for this winter. Besides the usual features of these rallies, there will be added this year a stereopticon and moving picture exhibition of the work on the foreign field. This will make it possible to close the rallies with a great mass meeting at night. Some remarkable moving picture views from Africa, India, China and Japan have been secured and will be exhibited. They will bring the conditions in these lands and the victories of the gospel there before the people in a very striking way. The society would be glad to hear from preachers who desire these rallies. It will not be possible to accommodate all who make request, but in so far as possible this will be done.

The National Benevolent Association.

The National Benevolent Association has just received a fine two-flat house in St. Louis. This property was given for the enlargement of its work for aged and indigent Disciples. The Association is exceedingly anxious to sell this property, as it is in great need of money. The Jacksonville (Ill.) Home is full, with many worthy applicants waiting an opportunity to enter. The property is very attractive for a home or an investment. He who buys it will help himself, his brethren and the Lord.

Two friends of the Gospel of the Helping Hand have recently made contributions on the annuity plan. Mrs. Eliza Williams has given $200 and Mrs. Ann M. Cook $400. One of these good sisters is an old friend of the cause. She has the joy of having given for several years for the benefit of her less fortunate brothers and sisters. The other is just entering heartily into fellowship with Christ in this holy ministry.

Charles Reign Scoville will deliver the address for the Gospel of the Helping Hand at New Orleans. The National Benevolent Association will present an exceptionally stirring program at our national convention.

The association is just closing one of the most fruitful years in its history. It has been a hard year, however. While the Easter offering showed a very decided gain over last year, the offering for the entire year is less than last year. Its candle has burned at both ends. The business depression in the country reduced the income and increased the outgo by increasing the number needing aid. The new building in St. Louis, made necessary if the orphanage was to continue its great work, has greatly added to the association's burden. The income has been light during the summer. The association is the sole support of about 400 orphan children. It calls upon every friend of Christ to come into fellowship with him, as he seeks through his church to feed the hungry and clothe the naked.

Another Named Memorial Fund.

Brother John Bull and wife, Cimarron, Kan., have just given $5,000 to the American Christian Missionary Society. This is to be a pernament named memorial fund, and is to be known as the M. A. Bull fund, this being the name of Sister Bull. The principal is to be kept invested perpetually, and the accruing interest used for the support of a missionary in America, the first one probably working on the Atlantic seaboard.

This is a living monument. Through all the years, a herald of the cross is to be kept testifying for righteousness, temperance and judgment to come. He will point people to the old paths, the good way in which travelers find rest for their souls.

This is the eighteenth such fund placed at our disposal. There ought to be at least a hundred of them. What memorial so lasting or so worthy as this? Erect one for your parents, wife, daughter, son or husband. For particulars write,

The American Christian Missionary Society, Wm. J. Wright, Corresponding Secretary, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O.

The End in Sight.

The books of the American Christian Missionary Society close September 30. That is less than two weeks from the time you see this notice. Many of the greatest churches in our brotherhood have not sent an offering this year, among them being fully half of our living link churches.

Financial conditions throughout this year have made it particularly trying for the society. We started out to raise $50,000 more than last year, and at one time were nearly $20,000 ahead. That great increase has been steadily cut, however, until we are a thousand or two ahead. The prospects are that only by a great struggle can we go to New Orleans with as much as we reported in Norfolk.

We urge every church, society, Sunday-school and individual not having sent an offering to send one, the most liberal possible, before the closing of the books. Remember the date, Wednesday, September 30, 1908.

The American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O.

A Final Word.

This is our last word before the books of the Foreign Society close, September 30. It is important that every church and Sunday-school and Endeavor society and personal friend of the work send in their offerings before that date. This will be recognized at once.

We gladly report personal offerings pouring in from every quarter as never before. We ask all for one final rally.

So far, we have received more different gifts than in any former year. This indicates a wide and growing interest. It seems now that the churches, Sunday-schools and Endeavor societies, both in numbers of contributions and in total amounts, will surpass all previous records. There is a threatened loss, however, in annuities.

For the first ten days of September there has been a gain of $1,923 from the churches, $506 from the Sunday-schools and a total gain from all sources for ten days of $4.547.

It is gratifying to be able to report twenty new missionaries sent to the field, the greatest number in any one year in the history of the work. Most cheering news comes from every mission field.

Let all the friends of the work remember that the books must close promptly, September 30, for the reports to the New Orleans convention, October 12.

Please forward to F. M. Rains, Box 884, Cincinnati, O., who will promptly return a proper receipt.

Advertising a Meeting at Tappan, Ohio

Ferd M. Schultz, your Pastor-Evangelist, will begin a meeting with home forces in the Tappan First Church of Christ. You are cordially invited to participate, rendering such services as you feel capable of. Your hearty co-operation is earnestly desired. "Our plea for unity should be made to be felt in the meetings." United in Christ, we shall take a bold stand against the forces of unrighteousness. You will show your loyalty by being present at all the services. Seek those who do not know the Savior, and interest them in their own soul's salvation. Let us examine ourselves and be ready for a great ingathering. Read very carefully Psalm 119:57-60; also Psalm 51:10-13; let this be your prayer daily. May his will be done in our hearts, and thus advance his Kingdom in our midst. Very much depends upon you. The "Go ye" is as specific now, to you, as in the days of the Apostles. "I shall look for you."

FOREIGN MISSIONARIES IN CONFERENCE

The conference of missionaries of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society just held in Cincinnati, September 1-8, 1908, was the most successful meeting of the kind ever held by our people. There were thirty-one missionaries in attendance. Eighteen of them were missionaries home on furlough, having served one term or more on the foreign fields. Thirteen were new missionaries under appointment, most of whom will sail this month for the foreign field. Three days were spent together in this conference. It was a time of enthusiasm and great spiritual uplift. There were many addresses and open conferences indulged in by all. Nearly every phase of the great foreign work was considered. Almost all of our foreign fields were represented. The returned missionaries present were as follows: From India, M. D. Adams, Bilaspur; Mr. and Mrs. George W. Brown, of Jubbulpore. From China, Dr. James Butchart and wife, of Lu Cheo fu; Miss Emma Lyon, of Nankin; Mr. and Mrs. Herbert P. Shaw, of Shanghai; Dr. E. A. Layton and Miss Edna Dale, of Wuhu. From Japan, Dr. Nina S. Stevens, of Akita, and Miss Rose Armbruster, of Tokyo. From Africa, Dr. and Mrs. Royal J. Dye and Mrs. Ray Eldred. From the Philippines, Mr. and Mrs. Hermon P. Williams, of Vigan, and W. H. Hanna, of Laoag.

The newly appointed missionaries present were: W. B. Alexander, J. C. Archer and Harry Eicher, who go to India; C. F. McCall and wife and Miss May Hiatt, who go to Japan; Miss Eva Kaw and Miss Kate G. Miller, who go to China; Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Wilson, who go to Honolulu; Dr. Z. S. Loftis, who goes to Thibet; Miss Mamie Longan, who goes to the Philippines, and Miss Sylvia Siegfried, who goes to Cuba.

The joy and hopefulness of these missionaries is very inspiring. There are no happier people in all the world. Their fellowship together was like that of a big family. If a man has any inclination toward the blues he could try no more effective cure than association for a few days with these people from the far-flung battle line. They believe in their task most profoundly. Not a note of discouragement was sounded in the whole conference. From every missionary who had been to the field there came a message of ultimate, triumphant victory, from every new, untried worker came words of courageous hope. These people who have fought against the darkness of paganism believe profoundly that the "gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." They have tested it. They know that the best of heathen religions are totally inadequate to satisfy the needs of the human heart, and that Christ is the only hope of the world.

At the close of the three-day conference a farewell public reception was held at Central Church. It was indeed an inspiring occasion. As each missionary was introduced he or she gave a brief, ringing message to the audience. People were deeply moved.

We have been impressed with the superior quality of these men and women. They are people who could succeed anywhere in the homeland. They are cultured, wholesome, warm-hearted folks. Our very best young men and women are volunteering to go and the best are needed.

Aside from the messages of the missionaries at this conference, addresses were given as follows: "Have Faith in God," Prof. W. C. Morro, Lexington, Ky.; "The Missionary's Intellectual Life," President T. C. Howe, Butler College. "The Missionary's Inspiration," J. L. Hill, Cincinnati; "The Missionary's Care of His Health," Dr. P. T. Kilgour, Cincinnati; "The Relation of the Missionaries to the People," A. McLean; "The Distinctive Aim of the Missionary," F. M. Rains; "The Missionary and the Holy Spirit," Stephen J. Corey.

Before the Books Close.

Treasurer, do not steal! Of course, you would not for yourself. No, you would not even steal for your children or your church! What do you call it when money given for missions is used for the janitor's wages or the minister's salary or interest on the church debt?

Minister, do not halt! If you have shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God, your church has had fellowship in every good word and work. Look over the receipts and see that the assortment is complete. State Missions, Ministerial Relief, Education, Foreign Missions, National Benevolence, Home Missions and Church Extension. Look into the record of the Bible school, Christian Endeavor and C. W. B. M. When you are sure that all is well, come on down to New Orleans and help to rightly inaugurate the greatest year of all!

Christian, do not murder! "Destroy not with thy meat him for whom Christ died!" We are near the end of the year for all organized agencies through which the churches of Christ are advancing his Kingdom. Devote an evening to examining your personal record since last September. You have completed the circle of the year and God's grace has not failed at any point. But are there not some entries that you wish made to your credit before the books close? Compare your outlay for food with your payments to your local church. Put side by side your expenditures for clothing and your gifts to benevolence. Bracket together your rent and your offerings to your college. How do missions compare with pleasure in the year's outlay? Or has the extension of God's kingdom become your chief delight? Have you forgotten the disabled preacher who forgot himself for you? Square up like a man and then you'll feel able to come down to New Orleans! W. R. Warren.

THE ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION

The fifty-eighth missionary convention of the Churches of Christ in Illinois is now history. Such a convention, with good reports, great addresses and wise counsel, fittingly closes a year's service and opens wider the gates for larger things in the future.

The meetings were held in the Y. M. C. A. rooms, La Salle street, Chicago, August 31 to September 4. About 350 from outside the city attended, with fair local attendance. So far as opportunity afforded the acquaintance between the people of Chicago and their visitors was most delightful and will strengthen the union of our churches more fully. The hospitality was most cordial and highly appreciated. Many of the delegates were escorted from five to fifteen miles to the hospitable homes of the brethren.

The C. W. B. M.

sessions came first, as usual. Mr. Pearce said in his address, that when he was a boy and a barn was to be raised, the men gathered in, ropes and spikes were put under the beams and some one cried, "He, O, he," and the beam went up, but now when a great lift in the kingdom of God is required, the cry is, "She, O, She," and the work moves up. These women are a mighty people. The brethren ought to wake up when they see that these women raised last year $6,270 more for their work than the brethren raised for state work. There is no competition, no jealousy and must never be, nor are the women giving too much, nor enough, but, brethren, we must bring up our state work to larger things.

The first session was held on Monday evening, with three other sessions Tuesday. The memorial service in honor of Mrs. Helen E. Moses, former national president, was most impressive and inspiring for larger things for the Master. It is proposed to raise a memorial fund of $50,000 with which to enlarge the work to which Mrs. Moses gave the best of her life. Cards were circulated for pledges and the ladies and auxiliaries are asked to generously add to this fund as each may have in her heart to do, but not to detract from the regular, special and centennial giving.

Mrs. A. R. Atwater, national vice-president, was present and delivered two great addresses, besides adding much in counsel with the state board and workers. Miss Anna L. Barbre, superintendent of Bible schools in Christian county, gave an address on "Young Ladies' Mission Circles," that was one of the very best addresses of the entire convention. Miss Lula E. Miner, of Bone Gap, was hindered by sickness from filling her place on the program, much to the disappointment of the convention, for she has a fine reputation as a public speaker. Besides, it was very desirable that the ladies have opportunity to meet her, as she has been engaged to devote three months to the work of missions among the auxiliaries of Illinois. Her service will include November and December, during which time she will be in great demand for C. W. B. M. day addresses. Those desiring her services, write Miss Lura V. Thompson, Carthage, Ill. Her former work has been chiefly with the W. C. T. U.

The reports were in advance of any previous year and were enthusiastically received by the convention. Miss Annie E. Davidson, the state president, did much personal work in the field. Miss Lura V. Thompson, secretary and organizer, was very busy during the year. About 30 auxiliaries each organized another auxiliary. The eight district secretaries are growing in efficiency and did much to advance the work.

The Champaign auxiliary is a living link, supporting a missionary. One hundred and fifty auxiliaries observed C. W. B. M. Day. There are now in the state 207 auxiliaries with 5,365 members, a gain during the year of 738. There were 134 life members secured. Contribution to the National treasury was $1,466.54, to state treasury, $3,005.57; total, $17,669.11, a gain over last year of $1,518.52. There was pledged to the Centennial fund $10,985, a good part of which is paid. It is expected to raise $15,000 by our Centennial. Twenty-nine churches were on the roll of honor.

The same officers were re-elected for another year, except that Miss Dora Guthrie, of Vermont, was selected to superintend the Young People's work, instead of Miss C. B. Griffin, resigned.

The board recommends that each member continue to give $1 a year extra for special work; that each auxiliary strive for a place on the roll of honor; that the list of subscribers to the "Tidings" and "Mission Leaves" be increased; that pledges be increased if possible to the Centennial fund, and that the organizing campaign be continued with increased vigor.

The Christian Business Men's Association, of Chicago, arranged a banquet that was attended by about 175 men. Besides an elaborate menu there were addresses given by State Secretary J. Fred Jones, Prof. Graham Taylor, S. E. Fisher and J. W. Thomas. The flow of soul lasted until a late hour and all seemed pleased and profited by the plan. It is hoped that this is the beginning of much greater activity among our men, and that some such a meeting be held every year.

The State Society.

The Illinois Christian Missionary Society, of course, was the central figure of interest, and held a splendid convention.

The president, H. L. Willett, in the opening address, took for his theme, "Duties and Dangers of the Hour." After emphasizing the welcome of the convention to Chicago and expressing his appreciation of the unsought honor of his place in the convention, he spoke briefly of visiting five of the eight district conventions, delivering addresses. In these he emphasized our Centennial aims, the efforts necessary to raise up more preachers and the need of larger liberality in support of missions and education. He discussed the motives of the reformation and the lines along which it moved, involving largely the questions of Christian union, modern theology and the restoration of the apostolic creed, ordinances and life, the faith, spirit and service. Two of the dangers mentioned were our evangelism becoming too emotional and the possibility of our losing our devotion to the word of God and its study.

W. F. Shaw, of Chicago, gave a compact, thorough discussion of the "City Church and its Problems." He had taken pains to gather from many experienced men their views of the problems in its various phases. S. S. Lappin handled, in his usual felicitous way, "The Country Church and its Possibilities." He considered the possibilities of evangelism, Bible study, cultivating Christian nature, holding public meetings and the larger support of the great enterprises of the church. I failed to hear the address of William Thompson, much to my regret, as he is comparatively a new man among us. J. I. Gunn gave an address of great power and enthusiasm on "Facing the Facts." It ought to stir a loyal people to greater zeal and devotion to a most holy cause on which so much depends.

It is no disparagement to any of the speakers to say that the great address of faith, of the convention, was delivered by W. W. Sniff on "The Glorious Gospel." After speaking of the great problems of suffering and sin he said the gospel is God's way of saving men: 1. It is glorious because of the "Facts" upon which it rests. He mentioned three facts, (1) Christ himself is the greatest fact in the world (2) His teaching (3), his miracles. (There was no uncertain sound on miracles in his address.) 2. Generous because of its power to win men. 3. Because of its reformative power. 4. Because of its simplicity. He referred particularly to the terms of salvation which he exemplified. 5. The simplicity of Christian living. 6. The glorious consummation, individual, national, eternal. When he closed there burst from the audience the song, "All hail the power of Jesus' name."

Our state conventions are always generous in hearing representatives from our general enterprises. These were well represented and their great addresses were much enjoyed and appreciated by the convention. W. R. Warren gave the Centennial address. H. A. Denton presented the American Home Missionary work, G. W. Muckley Church Extension, and Dr. R. J. Dye spoke for Foreign Missions.

The reports were encouraging and showed a year of faithful work and the service of faithful workers. Thirty-five men were employed part or all of the time, 264 churches were visited, 4,068 days' service rendered, 30 meetings were held, 2,006 sermons were delivered, 627 persons were brought to Christ, 293 were otherwise added to the church; total added, 920. Three churches were organized, 14 churches were aided with appropriations and 30 by meetings. Eight district conventions were held and three county rallies. The secretary dedicated seven churches, during which he raised $7,615. The total money raised for state and district missionary work was $11,298.84. There seem to be in the state 771 churches, with 107,785 members; 669 Sunday-schools, with 71,105 members; 311 Endeavor Societies, with 8,922 members. The treasurer's report showed total in students' aid fund, $6,854.53. The centennial aims are (1) $50,000 in the permanent mission fund, (2) 25 living links, (3) an evangelist in every district. It was decided to cease soliciting state funds from the Endeavor societies.

Resolutions to the following effect were passed: 1. Of appreciation of Chicago's hospitality, of the effort of the business men in arranging for the banquet; thnks to the Plmer House for office room, and courtesies, to the Y. M. C. A. for the use of their splendid building, to W. E. M. Hackleman for his splendid service in leading the music, to the Williams Organ Company for the use of their organ and two pianos, and to the daily press for its reports. 2. That the aims of the society be pressed with vigor. 3. That Bible school training work receive our hearty support and that our society provide a seal to be attached to all diplomas of graduates. 4. That Eureka College should have hearty support and co-operation in securing students and money for its great work. 5. That continued warfare be waged upon the liquor traffic until its extermination. 6. That the observance of other than the regular days for special offerings and pleas be discouraged.

The obituary committee reported the death of five of our preachers during the year, Gilbert A. Gish, J. N. Brown, N. G. Brown, W. F. Black and J. A. Williams. Following the song, "Beautiful Isle," R. F. Thrapp led in prayer in behalf of the bereaved. G. W. Pearl, of California, a former state secretary, was introduced and cheerfully greeted, and brought greetings to the convention.

The following officers were elected: J. H. Gilliland, president; W. F. Shaw, vice-president; L. O. Lehman and Rochester Irwin, secretaries; J. P. Darst, trustee of the permanent fund; O. W. Lawrence, F. W. Burnham and Stephen E. Fisher, members of the state board.

The next convention goes to Eureka.

The educational section was presided over by Mrs. N. B. Crawford, the founder of the Illinois Christian Educational Association. Her message was a delightful, optimistic presentation of the work of Christian education and of the I. C. E. A. She presented claims also that the churches owe to the enlargement and increased usefulness of the college by patronage and money. She insisted that all might help to realize the Centennial aims of the association, which are to increase the membership in the association to 5,000, the student body to 400, the endowment to $250,000. She introduced Miss Cora Carithers, the new field secretary of the association, and trusted that her visits among the people would be most cordially welcomed by all the preachers and churches. H. H. Peters reported eight months' work and spoke very hopefully of the future interests of the college. He, too, ought to be often sent for to help promote college interests in the churches, and to help arrange for bequests, annuities and gifts to the college. The treasurer reported that the association had raised altogether during the year $4,391.47. It is desirable to have a local secretary in every church.

Mrs. A. T. Ross, the excellent matron of ladies' work, was introduced and spoke briefly about the care of the young ladies in the college.

President R. E. Hieronymus gave a most comprehensive address on "Christian Culture, its Means and End." No one could listen to the address without feeling the inspiration to fill our children with that education which involves a knowledge and spirit of the Great Teacher. Want of space forbids even an outline of his address.

Bible School.

The Bible school section included two most forceful addresses. The first was by W. B. Clemmer, on "A Message of Service," that is worthy to be printed in tract form and widely distributed. It puts service in the forefront of all our progress. The other address was by W. C. Pearce on "Every School in Line." He is national superintendent of adult Bible school work in America and a speaker of rare power and very wide experience. He laid emphasis especially upon teacher training work, which is now engaging so worthily such a great army of workers. He said the Bible was its own vindicator; preach and teach it faithfully and it will do its work. He laid the responsibility of teaching upon the church. Jesus spent more time teaching his apostles than in preaching to the multitude. Every school ought by all means to have a "teacher training class." It was a great address. He reintroduced Clarence L. De Pew as superintendent of the work in Illinois, who is thoroughly alive and most active in his field.

Brother DePew reported that Illinois had passed all other states in the training work, with 350 classes, in which are enrolled 11,000, and that we have already graduated more students than all other churches put together. His motto is, "A Training Class in Every School." He is pushing also the "Organized adult Bible class movement," with fine success. New interest, on a higher plain than ever before, is taking possession of our Bible schools. Every school ought to co-operate with Brother DePew as he seeks to lead us to larger things.

I was unable to remain to hear the three closing addresses by F. W. Emerson, W. T. Moore and Dr. Dye, but their work we may be assured was well done.

Now to the work of another year, the crowning year of the first century of the great restoration movement. May the Lord so guide and his people so follow that it will be the greatest year in our history.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Georgia.

I began a meeting at Girard, Burke county, Sunday night, August 9, and closed Sunday night, September 6. It was the first meeting ever held there by our people. The audiences were large, enthusiastic and attentive. Closed with the largest audience ever seen in the town. We had two hindrances, one from above, the other from below. The first was the two weeks' rains, which caused the flood in Augusta, not far away; the second was prejudice manifested by some sectarians. Pioneer work on our part will always tell the depth of the sincerity of sectarian religion. When the pure gospel comes to town the cry of "Great is Diana of the Ephesians" is raised by those who fear that their goddess will be despised and her magnificence destroyed. But the best way to overcome such opposition is to preach the truth in love and be sweet. "Recompense to no man evil for evil." As a result of this plan at Girard, the opposition was crippled, good seed sown in a large, friendly field, and a church organized composed of nineteen good men and women. J. J. Buxton, W. B. Daniell, J. J. Oglesbee and Charles Oglesbee are the elders and deacons. Corinth church, six miles away, gave invaluable assistance to our meeting, and will be a mother to the new congregation. Miss Nettie Odom and Sister Alice Buxton, both Methodists, presided at the organ and received our appreciation and thanks. Chas. Church, 10 Church street, Atlanta, led the singing, and did it well and pleased the people. He is open for engagements. Try him. Our preachers in Georgia are all busy, and good meetings are being held.

Kentucky Notes.

Another year in our Kentucky state work has closed. The reports for August are about all in—126 added and much other good done. This completes the record of a good year's work. Our men in the field have done well. Much has been done to advance the interests of the Master's cause. Our books show a credit of $865.81 for the month of August.

We need $2,000 before September 21.—If a list of the churches should be given that have not paid their apportionment it would be a source of amazement to many. While our receipts are a little in advance of this time last year our load is much heavier. Many churches that have thus far failed to help us bear the burden must do so at the eleventh hour. I am assured that very many of them will. We have now a larger number of contributing churches than we had altogether last year.

Hundreds of letters are sent out today.—These letters announce that money sent to me here by September 15 will appear in the list of printed receipts to be distributed at Hopkinsville. Money should not be sent to me here later than September 18. After that direct to Hopkinsville. We trust that these final letters will stir up many of the churches to attend to this matter now.

Special train to Hopkinsville September 21. The Louisville and Nashville railroad will run a special train to Hopkinsville on the above date. One car will start from Paris, Ky., at 7:28 a. m., and run through Lexington, leaving there at 8:15 a. m., arriving at Louisville at 11:45 a. m. At 12:30 the special train will leave Tenth and Broadway station, reaching Hopkinsville in time for evening service. This is to be a solid vestibule train. We can have an idea of how the Louisville and Nashville will take care of us going to New Orleans by this train they are furnishing us.

Maysville people get to Paris for that special car—Winchester, Mt. Sterling, Nicholasville, Danville, Georgetown, Mt. Sterling, Cynthiana, Carlisle, and people of many other towns can reach Lexington in time for the departure of the regular Louisville and Nashville train from Lexington to Louisville, to which the special car will be attached. The Short Line, Bloomfield and other branches have trains reaching Louisville in time for the departure of the special.

We urge all who are going to Hopkinsville to use this train. Let us go at the beginning and stay until the end.

Send your name now. If you have not done so, you ought not to wait another minute to send your name to Harry D. Smith, Hopkinsville. If you are to be the guest of the church there you owe it to them to inform them of such intention.

Railroad rate one fare plus 25 cents. Remember to buy tickets for the round trip at the above rate. All roads give this rate this year. No certificate. Just buy your ticket for the round trip.

A great meeting. The only thing that can mar the greatness of this meeting will be the failure of our people from Eastern and Central Kentucky to go in large numbers. We ought to have a large representation there. This is to be a meeting of great historic interest and we urge our people to make strong efforts to be there. H. W. Elliott,

Sulphur, Ky. Secretary.

Ohio.

The Franklin Circle Church, of Cleveland, has called W. F. Rothenberger, of Chicago, to succeed E. B. Bagby. Ohio Disciples heartily approve of this action on the part of the Circle Church. Brother Rothenberger is an Ohio man and comes back to his native soil. We welcome him again, and especially to our Cleveland fellowship.——Roy Brown, of Bellefontaine, will hold a meeting at Tallapoosa, Ga., beginning the middle of September. Brother Brown recently baptized a minister who had been working for fifteen years with another religious body. He will now give his time to preaching the gospel in the new light that has come to him.——Kile Brooks has resigned at Massillon to accept a call to Clarksburgh, Tenn. He will go to his new field about the first of October. This leaves Massillon pastorless again.—Fred A. Nichols has offered his resignation at Alliance and will remain in Oklahoma.——Frank Custar, of Lima, has accepted a call from the church at Belle Centre to succeed A. E. Beckler.——S. C. Pierce, of Hebron, is greatly distressed because of what seems to be a necessary move to a different climate on account of the health of Mrs. Pierce. But the physicians all advise this move very soon. He has a very delightful field at Hebron and York streets, and regrets very deeply to leave, and the people also very greatly regret to have him leave.——J. C. Reynolds, of W. Va., has come to Ohio and taken the work at Lynchburg and Fairview. We extend the Buckeye welcome and wish for him great success. C. A. Freer.

Pike's Convention.

The annual convention of the Pike county Churches of Christ was held at Chambersburg, Ill., August 19, 20. These meetings are looked forward to from time to time with pleasure, but this one proved to be unusually interesting, and much good was derived therefrom. C. L. DePew, state superintendent of the Bible school department, gave an interesting account of the progress of the teacher training movement in the state. H. N. Peters, field secretary of Eureka College, delivered a splendid address on "College or Educational Interests." Eureka College has many warm friends in Pike county, who are very much pleased over the prospects for a successful year's work the coming year.

A Progressive Village Church.

Triplett is a little village of 600 inhabitants in Chariton county, Missouri. The Christian church there has been organized twenty years. Only one other church is there, the Southern Methodist. W. D. McCulley, of Cameron, Mo., preaches one-half time there. He has been pastor two and one-half years. The church has had remarkable growth during his ministry. The first meeting he conducted himself, resulting in 56 additions. He started a second meeting last January. His voice broke down after a week and he sent for me. I was with him four days, adding 20 persons. He preached a few days longer, closing the meeting with 58 additions. On July 30 I began a tent meeting for him. It lasted just 25 days and resulted in 59 additions to the church. The church has reached out into the country and has enlisted the best families for miles around. There were 44 baptisms in the recent revival, 20 heads of families, only seven persons 15 years old and under. One man over 72 years old was baptized.

Plans are on foot looking to the erection of a $10,000 building. Material will be put on the ground this fall, and building commenced next spring. The membership is 300. The Bible school enrolls 200, has organized classes and teacher training department. The church gave $200 to missions through all departments last year. A number of German Lutherans have united with this church. This is one of the best churches I ever saw. The meeting was a delightful vacation to me.

Two additions at Vine Street, Nashville, by confession. P. Y. Pendleton, our new minister, is starting off with fine prospects for a good work.——Dr. Z. F. Lofftis was ordained by the church as our living link on August 23, before a large audience. He sailed for China September 15 from San Francisco. This is our first year to try and support a missionary on any field and the membership is becoming very enthusiastic about the matter.——J. T. McKissick, of the Seventeenth Street Church, has just returned from holding meetings in Texas, with good results. The new church building has the brick work about completed.——Dr. Lin Cave was one of the speakers recently at the Mount Eagle Chautauqua His daughter, Miss Pauline Cave, has been on a trip to Europe for sixty days. The work at Dr. Cave's church Woodlawn, moves along nicely.——The state convention of the Churches of Christ will this year meet with the church at Rockwood, Tenn.. and a large attendance is expected. The C. W. B. M. will have charge the first day, and the business men of the church have a place on the program; the convention will be held October 5, 6, 7, 8. W. G. Mershon.

New York Notes.

J. L. Darsie's article in "The Christian-Evangelist" should awaken us to our opportunities in the East for greater things. Bro. H. Norton has resigned his pastorate here with the Baptist church and will begin work among these "Russian" disciples. It was through the faith of these humble people that Brother Norton became interested in the faith of the Disciples of Christ and went to Brother Lichtenberger for tracts and literature that he might know more of this body of people, who accept only the Bible as their rule of faith and Christ as their Savior.——Sterling Place, Brooklyn, is preparing for "Church Extension day" with the opening of our fall work. Herbert Martin, our minister, has been traveling through Europe, and he return to fill the pulpit on September 12. J. R. Jolly, associate minister, is planning great things for the Bible school and Christian Endeavor society, and all branches of our work are in most hopeful condition.——We hope to have Jonas P. Liljenstein to open a mission among the 30,000 Swedish and Norwegian people of Brooklyn. Brother Liljenstein preached the gospel for seven years in Sweden and five years in Norway and Sweden under the direction of our Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and it is his belief that the best work among his people can be done in America, as the younger men and women are constantly coming to this country. There are three churches in Brooklyn among the Norwegian people which number over three hundred members each. L. S. Zider.

At Van Alstyne and Plano, Tex.

It was my privilege, as an evangelist, to spend the hottest season of the year at Plano and Van Alstyne, Texas, and assist in two splendid meetings with two splendid ministers and churches. A great company took their stand for Christ, most of whom were men and young men, and most of the number by baptism. The crowds were very large at each place, and the interest grew with every service and closed with great audiences and with the finest feeling.

At Plano, where a number of the very best people of the city took their stand for Christ, the meetings were held in the large and beautiful church where E. H. Holmes ministers. At Van Alstyne, the meetings were held in front of the church under the trees and long stretches of electric lights. Only two nights did the storm affect us. One Sunday "Christian Union" and "The Name" were the themes, and over 1,200 persons were present. The finest of order prevailed in the outdoor meeting, with doctrinal themes. Forty-five took their stand for Christ in the Van Alstyne meeting, several of them from the other bodies, and the cause generally received a great uplift and inspiration.

Permit me to mention the ministers of these churches as the most delightful yokefellows to labor with an evangelist, and men who are able ministers of the New Testament and greatly beloved by the churches they serve. One seldom sees ministers of stronger personality in Christian work or more universally influential than G. F. Bradford, of Van Alstyne, and E. H. Holmes, of Plano. L. D. Sprague most ably directed the music.

Notes from Arkansas Traveler.

Frank Thompson has just completed his first year at the First Church in Fayetteville. During this time there have been added to the church 253. Improvements on the church have been made to the extent of $5,000, and a fine pipe organ installed at a cost of $2,500.——Brother Thompson is a church builder in more ways than one. We congratulate him, and also the great church for which he ministers. They seem to be equally yoked together. Fayetteville is the seat of the State University. Given the newly equipped church and Frank Thompson, and we may expect interesting reports from the "Athens of the Ozarks."——T. L. Young has resigned his work at Eureka Springs, and, we understand, gone to California. This is an important point, and should be filled at once by some strong preacher.——R. A. Staley is having good success at Harrison. H. A. McCarty and daughter have recently closed a successful meeting there with 35 accessions. That was a good meeting. Brother McCarty has resigned the pastorate of the Third Street Church, Little Rock, and entered the evangelistic field. He should be kept busy in Arkansas.——Arkansas offers a splendid opportunity to preachers who will work. The writer has preached in a great many states, but nowhere has he found a more promising field, or a more responsive people. There are a great many people who know nothing of this great field here in the southwest. We have some of the best churches in all the land, and they are ministered to by some of as grand preachers as ever lived. Things are moving in the right direction down here, brethren. Those of you who have heretofore been a little "shaky" about this state come down and go to work. You will find that we not only know how to play the fiddle, but that we have both sides of our house covered.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Bentonville, Sept. 7.—One added at regular services. The fall campaign is on.—J. W. Ellis.

Prescott, Sept. 8—We have had 40 additions thus far. There were 14 confessions yesterday—all adults save one girl. Attendance 1,000. Excellent singing by chorus and Sunbeam choir. Brother Highsmith, the minister, is a fine worker and loved by all. The gospel preached in love is winning in this conservative Southern town of 3,500 people.—Percy G. Cross, evangelist.

California.

Corona, Sept. 4.—I begin my fall campaign work here. There was one confession the first night. The interest has increased. W. T. Adams worked hard in the building of a new church. He was only with me for several days, having accepted the position of state evangelist for Washington. He made much sacrifice here.—John T. Stivers, evangelist.

Salinas, Sept. 9.—After six weeks of rest in the wonderful Yosemite Valley, where I did some preaching in the Union Chapel, I am settled with our church in Salinas, having begun my work August 23. Here I find a growing and enterprising city of 5,000, and the center of a very productive country. Last Lord's day we welcomed into our fellowship a young man, and at night the regular temperance meeting was held in our church, participated in by seven churches and their ministers. I gave an address on "The Slain of Intemperance." With a united and appreciative church membership the future of the work here is bright.—J. E. Bell, minister.

Indiana.

Hammond, Sept. 7.—Three added—two by confession and one from the Baptist church.—C. J. Sharp, minister.

Greenwood, Sept. 1.—At my last appointment at Clayton there were eight additions. I will be available for meetings this fall and early winter as I go to Central California.—S. M. Connet.

Indianapolis, Sept. 9.—We closed a two-weeks' meeting at William's Creek with L. E. Murray as evangelist. There were nine additions—five confessions and four by statement. Prior to this I assisted Aubrey Moore in a short meeting at Providence, where there were two confessions. There was good attendance and interest in both meetings.—Charles O. Lee.

New Albany, Sept. 4.—I closed a two-weeks' meeting for the church at Mound Hill, Ky., there being 36 additions—31 baptisms and five by letter. This is a country church two miles from Carrollton, and last year had a meeting with 35 additions. On the first night only had we less than a full house. Most of the time so many came that we could not seat them, and frequently the men were in the majority. Those baptized were 17 men and 14 women. Mound Hill is one of the best country churches I have known. R. C. Foster, one of our Central Church boys, is the minister and has accomplished a remarkable work for this, as well as for other churches for which he preaches. He enters upon his fourth year in the Bible College and University, and for his age and experience is the finest preacher and most earnest Christian worker I have known. Everything moves well at the Central Church. S. M. Martin is to be with us about the middle of November, and we expect the greatest year's work in our history. We will have 600 in our Sunday-school by Christmas.—B. F. Cato.

Illinois.

New Douglas, Sept. 5.—In a two-weeks' meeting at Ham's Prairie, Mo., there were 27 additions—17 by confession and 10 by letter and otherwise. I. N. Jett preached in his usual forceful manner, while I had charge of the singing.—J. Errett Olive.

Flannagan, Sept. 12.—What promises to be a splendid meeting has opened here. I am preaching and Charles McVay leads the music. He is loved for his life and work. R. E. Thomas is the pastor, and one of the best in the state. The church is prospering. We have had accessions. I have been able to hold seven meetings and lecture beside my work in the Legislature. This has been profitable since I helped secure some good legislation.—J. R. Golden, Gibson City.

Kansas.

Moline, Sept. 7.—I began here yesterday and there was one addition at the first service.—O. J. Law.

Potter, Sept. 7.—O. L. Adams, living link evangelist of Kansas, and his singer, W. L. Hayes, have closed a four-weeks' meeting, winning a great victory at this place. It was a difficult field, worldliness and sectarianism abounding. Brother Adams preached the primitive gospel, is a fine personal worker, and the immediate results of the meeting were 25 added to the church—four by statement, two reclaimed and 19 by baptism. Four of the latter came from the Catholics. The church is greatly strengthened.—Allie M. Sprong.

Potter, Sept. 11.—We closed a thirty-days' meeting with 19 baptisms—four of whom had been Catholics—four by statement and two reclaimed. The church hopes for a forward movement in all things. The church extension apportionment, $20.40, was raised on Lord's day. W. L. Hays, of Kansas City, was my helper. Toronto next and then the state convention.—O. L. Adams.

Moran, Sept. 11.—I was delighted with my trip to Texas. I received a call from the church at New Boston, county seat of Bowie county, and visited them with a view to locating as minister. I found some earnest and enthusiastic members. They are not strong in numbers or finance, but will try to raise $400 for half-time preaching. C. A. Wheeler, the county superintendent of instruction, is a member, as is also the principal of the city schools. There is a good church building. DeKalb and other points will co-operate in employing a minister. I am considering the field.—J. P. Haner.

Kentucky.

Latonia, Sept. 8.—Six added since the last report.—H. C. Runyan.

Benton, Sept. 12.—In our twelve-days' meeting there were 33 additions. The house was crowded. There is a fine feeling, and the prospects for the future are excellent. J. D. Lindsay, the minister, has been called for another year at increased salary.—Charles W. Barnes, evangelist.

Louisiana.

Lake Charles, Sept. 7.—There was one addition by statement at the morning service. We had the largest school we have had in several years. The church is enthusiastic about the national convention.—Otis Hawkins.

Massachusetts.

Everett, Sept. 6.—One confession—seven since March, at the Union Christian Church.—A. T. June, minister.

Missouri.

Martinsville, Sept. 7.—A week of revival is being followed with an evangelistic meeting. There were two additions yesterday. The house was crowded. Miss Pearl Critchfield, of Murray, Ia., is assisting ably with the music.—G. C. Stearns.

Osceola, Aug. 9.—The interest is becoming great. One confession last night. An attendance of 295 at the girls' meeting conducted by Mrs. Williamson. F. M. Jalageas is the minister. Those wishing our services in 1909 should write at once.—Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Williamson.

Higdon, Sept. 7.—We had two additions at Cooter on the fourth Sunday in August, and one here yesterday.—I. B. Dobson.

Fleming, Sept. 8.—Our meeting is a week old. We have no church. The people were prejudiced against us, but we are making progress. After several services the largest building is filled and many are turned away. Two additions to date.—F. E. Butterfield and wife, evangelists.

Huntsville, Sept. 12.—I returned from Jerico Springs, where I held a meeting for E. W. Yocum. Some men not in the habit of attending church were attracted, and some of them yielded to the gospel. Others who have attended church from time to time, but could not be moved, also gave themselves to the Lord, as well as some young men and women. There is now a membership of over 200, and under that princely Yocum I am sure others will be led to Christ. Through the kindness of my people here I was enabled to hold this meeting, they letting me go and paying my salary. The Huntsville church is full of such good deeds. I hope the other churches in old Missouri will do as they do, and thus share in the joy that follows such grand meetings.—C. W. Worden.

Denver, Sept. 9.—I am in a meeting here with Sellers Spainhower as singer. It is a small inland town—200 population. There have been nine confessions. I baptized seven in the river Lord's day. Churches desiring meeting dates with two earnest young men who can make things go, can address the church here. E. M. Henton and U. O. Eslinger are elders.—A. N. Cooper, Grant City.

Queen City, Sept. 14.—During the summer we had a great meeting with Joel Brown, evangelist. Sixty-four were added—sixty-three of them grown people.—P. M. Lind.

Nebraska.

Fremont, Sept. 5.—A good worker from the First Church at Omaha united with us yesterday. Our revival will begin October 1. I will preach and Charles E. McVay will conduct the singing.—I. H. Fuller.

Unadilla, Sept. 7.—Several months ago we planned for a tent meeting in August, Dr. Thompson being secured as evangelist. After preaching a series of sermons upon the Life of Christ the invitations and exhortations began. Fifty-eight people came out for Christ—39 being baptized, 15 uniting by letter or statement, and four being reclaimed. Brother Thompson hewed to the line and is unique in the presentation of old truths. As he is a comparatively new man among us we bespeak for him the confidence and respect of the people.—M. G. E. Bennett, minister.

Murray, Sept. 7.—We had two baptisms last night. I have entered upon my second year's work with this people. We have enlarged and repaired the building, making a much better Bible school workshop.—Roy G. Lucas.

New Mexico.

East Las Vegas, Aug. 31.—During August there have been 10 added to the church here. We have more than doubled the attendance of the Bible school. Yesterday we organized a Bible school class for men, with 11 charter members, and from this we hope great things. We are trying to "do things" out here. It is needed badly enough.—Meade Ervin Dutt, minister, A. C. M. S.

Oklahoma.

Ames, Sept. 4.—A meeting conducted by Prof. E. Lyon and Miss Mattie Wofford was closed by Brother Lyon being suddenly called away. The meeting lasted 12 days and there were 12 additions. It was a universal regret that he could not continue. These are able workers.—Otto Shirley.

Pond Creek, Sept. 3.—The meeting at Ames lasted twelve days and there were 12 additions, with four more pledged to come next Sunday. I being called away suddenly. The purpose of the meeting was primarily a revival of the church itself, and this was certainly accomplished. Those added were all grown people, with one exception. The Bible school had already been gleaned, and the village and country well worked. Miss Mattie Wofford, who lead the singing, is consecrated and a great personal worker. Brother Shirley, the pastor, is an untiring worker. At the regular services at Pond Creek Lord's day evening three young men made the confession, and one lady came from another body.—O. L. Lyon.

Enid, Sept. 5.—I have been with F. A. Wellman at the Mt. Carmel Church in Carroll county, Mo. There were 15 added—10 of them by baptism. We organized a teacher training class of fifty five. It is a country church with extraordinary talent in its membership of 90. It bids fair to become a strong church, and able to support a minister full time. I am preaching at Hunter, Okla., while attending Oklahoma Christian University. We have a teacher training class and a splendid band of loyal Disciples.—C. C. Taylor.

Chattanooga, Sept. 7.—The work continues to prosper. Mr. Van Deusen, pastor, is attracting large audiences by a series of sermons on the second coming of Christ. There were eight additions yesterday—three by confession and five by statement, making ten within the month. People come twelve miles to attend our meetings. The teacher training class grows and an Endeavor society has been organized. I have just returned from visiting in Enid, Waukomis and Anadarko, and will be ready to locate as pastor or assist in some good church by January 1.—Laura B. Van Deusen.

Okmulgee, Sept. 10.—We began here on September 6. It is one of the rapidly growing towns of this state, and is commercialized to the limit, which makes a difficult field. The Methodist pastor and I mutually decided to start meetings simultaneously. We did, but he became discouraged and quit last night because his members refused to attend. Not more than 60 per cent of ours are attending this first week. We hope to overcome much of the indifference, and create a general interest. Harry and I can be engaged for November if application be made soon.—Ben F. Hill and son.

Pennsylvania.

Waynesburg, Sept. 10.—I spent my vacation in supplying the morning services at East End, Pittsburg. During the evenings of the week and on Sunday evenings, I preached at Lone Pine, this being my second meeting with the church there. There were 40 added—all by baptism. I. N. Fry will preach for this church the coming year. The work at Waynesburg moves along hopefully.—F. A. Bright, minister.

Texas.

Browndell, Sept. 8.—I preached at Silslee Lord's day and there were two confessions.—J. N. Gibson.

Marshall, Sept. 7.—The meeting conducted by Shelburne and Knight increases in interest. There have been forty additions to date.—T. F. Weaver.

Virginia.

North Yakima, Aug. 31.—There were nine confessions yesterday, five by confession. This makes 502 since I came here four years ago. The work on the building progresses rapidly, and we hope to occupy it before January 1.—Morton L. Rose.

Washington.

Seattle, Sept. 3.—Three added to the Queen Anne Church since last report—two by confession and one by letter.—J. S. Greenwell, minister.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

EVILS WHICH MUST BE DRIVEN OUT OF THE COUNTRY.

Topic, September 23.—Num. 33:50-56.

There are some things that must be driven out or they will drive us out. It was so in the history of Israel. It is so in the affairs of other peoples. Israel was commanded to drive out the Canaanites, under penalty of themselves being despoiled and driven out of the land. They failed to obey the voice of God, which was the voice of wisdom. It was for their own safety. It was for the furtherance of the cause of righteousness and good government in the world. Their failure brought calamity upon them as a nation in more ways than one. They were corrupted by the idolatry of the heathen worship. Their children were given in marriage, either willingly or unwillingly with the Philistines, and thus their whole national life suffered. Internal strife prevailed and long and wasting wars were waged, in which much of the property of the people was destroyed and their cities laid in ruins. And all this because they refused to drive out the Canaanites from before them.

O yes, I am aware of what infidels have said, in their scoffing superiority. Nevertheless the subsequent history of Israel proved conclusively the folly of permitting the corrupt inhabitants of the land to remain to corrupt their youth and degrade their worship by the introduction of heathen rites. Perhaps it was inevitable but it certainly was unavoidable as long as the remnants of the Canaanitish tribes remained among them. Governments have been slow, as individuals, to learn the folly of permitting recognized evils to continue in the midst of our civilized communities. The great liquor power has been permitted, against the protest of good men, and the beseechings of devoted women, to grow up and entrench itself in the intricate workings of our internal revenue system. It is said that Abraham Lincoln refused repeatedly to sign the bill, as a war measure, which placed a revenue tax on all liquors manufactured in the United States; not because he was in sympathy with the traffic, but because he was farsighted enough to see that the liquor interests would thus become recognized and interwoven in the affairs of government in such ways as to make the problem a thousand times more difficult to manage. He was finally, against his solemn protest, prevailed upon to sign the bill as a war measure, for the purpose of securing money to prosecute the war, which threatened the life of the nation. The results he anticipated have followed, aggravated by the greed of individuals and great corporations and the subserviency of the great political parties. So our problem to-day is almost as grave as confronted Lincoln in the dark period of the rebellion.

It is cheering, however, to mark the progress in the southland as in the northland for the entire prohibition of the traffic. But the fight will be a long and bitter one. And we are suffering and will long continue to suffer, as Israel of old, for our compromise methods in trying to control the business by any sort of tax, high or low, for any purposes whatever. There is truth in the asservation of many of the old-timers, tersely and homely put: "As long as it's made it will be drunk." And it hardly need be added that as long as it is drunk it will make drunkards. We must drive it out. And no half-way measures will ever do it. "Down with the saloon"—or it will down us.

The Scripture Lesson.

"And the men rose up from thence and looked toward Sodom." Gen. 18:16. From the 16th to the 22d verse the writers tells of the departure of the men who had visited Abraham. God talks with himself as to whether he is to reveal to Abraham his plans to destroy Sodom. The decision to tell him is made, and the reason therefor was the righteousness of Abraham. So Abraham is informed of the approaching catastrophe, and the men turn and begin the journey to Sodom.

"And Abraham stood yet before the Lord" (v. 23). Then follows one of the most touching accounts of the Old Testament history. Abraham pleads for Sodom. His plea is based upon the few righteous who may dwell therein. "Save the city for their sakes," was his cry. He begins at fifty righteous people, and then forty-five. Then he decreases the number to forty, thirty, twenty, and, last of all, ten. It was the plea of a great and good man. So to-day the righteous in the city cry to us. We should save it for their sake. And all the unwashed cry to us, and we, as Christians, want the city saved for their sakes, too.

(The paragraphs beginning with "The Disproportionate Growth of the Modern City" were taken from Dr. Strong's Home Mission text book, "The Challenge of the City.")

The Disproportionate Growth of the Modern City.

Its growth in population and wealth, during the past century, was phenomenal, and quite out of proportion to that of the country at large.

Let New York illustrate the city's increasing rate of growth in recent times: Founded in 1614, it took New York 175 years to gain 33,000 inhabitants. During the next period of fifty years it gained 280,000; during the next thirty years it gained 630,000, and during the next twenty-one years, which period closed in 1890, before the creation of Greater New York, it gained 859,000. The gain during the last short period was twenty-six times as large as during the first long period, and the rate of gain 208 times as great. During the last ten years, since it became Greater New York, the increase of population has been equal to the gain of the twenty years preceding.

The City Sways the Scepter of Wealth.

In 1850 more than half our wealth was rural; in 1890 more than three-quarters of it was urban. During these forty years rural wealth increased fourfold, while urban wealth multiplied sixteenfold. In this commercial age the influence of wealth penetrates all classes, and is becoming more and more dominant. Wealth is increasing much more rapidly than the population, and is being concentrated in the city.

The City Sways the Scepter of the Press.

In this country public opinion is only less mighty than omnipotence. It creates and amends constitutions; it makes laws, and determines whether or not they shall be enforced; it shapes national policies, domestic and foreign; and the press which educates and sways public opinion is located in the city.

Beyond a peradventure the city is to determine the future of civilization.

Bad Government.

The problems of government increase with the increase in population. As cities become more populous, relations whose harmony must be preserved increase in number and complexity. A mistake is farther reaching; it has longer leverage; and as efficient government grows more essential it becomes increasingly difficult. To administer the affairs of a village of 1,000 inhabitants is a simple matter, requiring only ordinary intelligence; the government of a city of 100,000 is much more complicated; while that of a city of 1,000,000 or 5,000,000 demands expert knowledge, ability and character of the very highest order.

Low Intelligence.

When President Roosevelt was police commissioner of the city, applicants for appointment on the police force were subjected to civil service examination. In answer to the question, Name five of the six New England states? one man replied: "England, Oirland, Scotland, Whales and Cork." Asked to tell what they knew about Abraham Lincoln, about twenty said he was president of the Southern Confederacy. About forty thought he was a great general in the Union army. One was sure that he was "a great general who won the battle of Bunker Hill." Many thought he was assassinated by Guiteau; one said the deed was done by Garfield and another by Ballington Booth! This would be very funny if it were not very serious.

Need of Incorruptible Officials.

It is in the city that our relations are closest and most complicated. It is there that the maladjustments of society create the sorest friction. It is in the city, therefore, that the well-developed social conscience is most needed. It is chiefly in the city that the enormous powers of organization and of centralized wealth are wielded; and it is there that these powers must feel the wholesome restraint of righteous laws and of an enlightened popular conscience. It is in the city that the unprecedented increase of wealth affords unprecedented opportunities for self-gratification; and, without a corresponding increase of self-control, we shall become enervated and demoralized in the lap of luxury.

Crowded Tenements.

According to the report of the New York State Tenement House Commission, 2,372,000 persons, or two-thirds of the city's population, were then living in New York's 82,652 tenement houses. This is a larger population than can be found in any one of thirty-six of our great states.

Every one of these tenement dwellers is living in an environment more or less unfavorable to a normal life. In these tenement houses have been found 350,000 dark interior rooms. These rooms depend for light and ventilation on connecting outer rooms or on air-shafts. The so-called "air-shaft" is really a well of stagnant, foul air, about 28 inches wide, 50 or 60 feet long, and extending from the ground to the top of the building, often 60 or 70 feet or more. "The tenants often use the air-shaft as a receptacle for garbage and all sorts of refuse, and indescribable filth thrown out of the windows, and this mass of filth is often allowed to remain, rotting at the bottom of the shaft for weeks without being cleaned out." So vile are the resulting odors that many of the 50 or 60 windows opening into the shaft must often be closed, and sometimes they are permanently nailed up.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

State Work in Our Illinois Bible Schools.

I am just finishing my first year in the field, and feel that we are able to make a gratifying report as to the condition of our Illinois schools. The past year has witnessed a splendid work actually done in a large number of them. The work has been most enjoyable, and I have everywhere been received most cordially by the workers, a large majority of whom are greatly interested in their work. The friendships formed have been most delightful, and I wish to express my appreciation of the many favors shown and the hearty support I have received from all.

This work has never developed so rapidly, nor been received with such universal favor, nor have such far-reaching results ever been accomplished by our schools in the same length of time, as have been brought to pass in the last year. This is partly because the Bible school itself occupies a more favorable position than ever before in the estimation of the world, of the Church and of its friends, and partly because we are studying the plans, purposes and methods of Bible school work, and are applying the results of this to the work in the individual schools. An important factor in this development has been the prominence given to Bible school work by "The Christian-Evangelist" and "Christian Standard," and in the several periodicals issued by our publishing houses.

TRAINING CLASSES.

In Teacher Training classes we have accomplished the most during the past year. We have passed all other states in this important work. We now have 350 classes with an enrollment of over 11,000. The work was started too late for many of the classes to finish by the close of our missionary year, but we have already graduated, this year, more than six times as many as all the other churches of the state put together. Our classes are making splendid grades. A number of them have surpassed any grades heretofore made by any classes in any course in Illinois, while the class taught by J. H. Gilliland, in the Second Church at Bloomington, is the largest one ever graduated in our state—68. The class in the Central Church at Decatur, taught by O. W. Lawrence, is the largest of its kind ever organized, and has attracted more than national attention. It enrolls over 800 members, many of them coming from the other churches of the city. The exhibition of his methods of conducting the class, as given by Brother Lawrence at Bethany Park, proved to all that such a class can be taught, and the work be made interesting and thorough. Many classes have been unable to finish the course, but have taken the first and second examinations, and will finish during the fall. Some classes have adjourned for the summer, and will resume in September, but a large number have continued right along, and frequent calls for the examination questions have been made this summer. As the large majority of these classes will finish during the coming year, we are looking forward to the most remarkable list of graduates at the convention of the Illinois Sunday-School Association next May, in Springfield, ever reported at a convention. Our motto for this year is: "A Training Class in Every School," and to this end we ask the co-operation of every school among our people.

ADULT BIBLE CLASSES.

The organized Adult Bible Class has also received a great deal of attention the past year, and many of our schools are doing a splendid work in this line, among the most conspicuous being the Lowrey class at Gibson City, the Trenary class at Salem, and the Fisher class at Champaign. Many other classes have been organized and to-day we have the largest number of adults attending our Bible schools ever reported in our history.

We expect, in the coming year, to keep the adult Bible class work before our schools more vigorously than ever, and to encourage all classes to affiliate with the International organization. Mr. George W. Miller, of Paris, Ill., is our own state secretary. Marion Stevenson and Herbert Moninger promise the full and hearty support of "The Christian-Evangelist" and "Christian Standard" in the Adult Bible class work, so we expect the coming year to be one of great achievements, and Illinois will be at the front. Our motto is: "10,000 men and 10 000 women in 1,000 organized classes in Illinois."

MISSIONS.

The success of our state work, as well as the success of the individual school, depends largely upon the interest taken in the missionary enterprises of the church. In foreign missions our schools are doing a good work, as last year 448 schools contributed $8 562.78, and for the current year 428 school have contributed $7,096.52. By the close of the missionary year this report will be some better. In home missions we have not been doing so well, as only 63 schools had fellowship in this work the past year, the amount being $810.94.

At a conference of state workers, held at Bethany Park, the subject of missions was carefully discussed, with a view to uniform action. It was decided to call such schools as have part in foreign missions, home missions and state work, "Honor Schools," and to endeavor to have the list as large as possible. It was decided to push the Boys' and Girls' Rally Day for Home Missions in our several states, aiming to very largely increase the number of contributing schools. A joint letter was addressed to the American Christian Missionary Society, asking that states supporting a State Bible School Superintendent be given one-half the gross receipts from their own state schools. To test this plan, the request was granted for this year, on condition that the state organizations do all in their power to encourage the observance of the day by their schools. We expect to more than double the number of schools participating in Illinois, the coming year.

FINANCES.

Our financial report for the past year was a good one, as while the greater work attempted and achieved made the expenses of conducting the office and field work, postage, printing, etc., heavier than ever before, the schools rallied to the work, the money needed was forthcoming, and we had more money in the treasury at the convention this year than we had a year ago. A list of contributing schools, with the amount of their offerings, has been printed, and will be mailed to anyone on request.

For the current year our prospects are the best, as in just three weeks from the time our first letters were sent to the schools asking for their pledges, over 80 have responded with more than $550. We take this as a rousing endorsement of our work, and start this year much more enthusiastically on account of it.

Believing that the year before us will be most glorious in its achievements; that Illinois will do its part in reaching our centennial aims, and praying the Father's richest blessings upon our society, our churches, our Bible schools and all our workers, I am,

Yours in his name,

Clarence L. DePew

State Bible School Superintendent, Illinois Christian Missionary Society. Jacksonville, Ill.

Kansas War Cry.

A double war cry is before us, and both will carry us to victory if we heed: "The Whole Church in the Bible School and as Many More" and "A Trained Teacher in Every Class." Kansas heartily seconds all movements for the betterment of the Bible school, believing that the church of the future will be bettered as we better the conditions in the Bible school of to-day.

During the previous year the efforts of the workers in the Sunflower State were largely devoted to a campaign for the training of teachers and workers for service in the school and church, trusting that they, having received new vision, would work for the larger numbers to be influenced. Three hundred and one classes studying some one of the accepted teacher training courses are now in operation or have completed the work; 10,000 people have in some way been touched by the inspiration, though not all will carry the work to completion. But 10,000 people have seen a new vision of the "Open Book" and the relation of the Bible school to the spread of the Kingdom. After a season of enforced rest, on account of the agricultural labors of the population of the state, we have letters from classes far and near, telling us of the renewed enthusiasm of the fall months and the determination to "stick to it" till the work be carried to completion. Others who have graduated are planning the organization of clesses to study the Advanced Standard Course. We want more of these. The first standard course was but a beginning. Let us not weary in well-doing.

This winter we shall stress the organization of Adult Bible classes upon the international standard, which has been so clearly and definitely presented in these columns. When we remember that in 1900 there were just twelve organized classes in this country, and that now there are some five thousand, we see what Mr. Marion Lawrance meant when he said, "The growth of the movement is simply marvelous." The workers of Kansas agree with Prof. H. M. Hamill when he says: "Don't you know that the Adult Bible class stands for the greatest movement that has come into the Sunday-school in twenty-five years?" This movement, successfully carried out, will bring into the Bible school as nothing has ever done the membership of the church, and at last get the men and women of the church where they should have been years ago, identified with that service of the church for the study of God's Word.

There are a number of classes in Kansas doing work along the lines of the Adult Bible class. Not all are organized according to the International standard. To these especially we shall have a message. There is the Howard C. Rash class at Abilene; the class of Brother Shields for young men, at Salina; Brother Harding's class at Belleville, for young men; Brother Hawkins' class of men at Hartford; Brother Cole's "Live Coals," at Abilene, as well as several others we can not name in detail, such as, Osborne 3, La Crosse, a class for men, Chanute 2, Columbus 1, Yates Center 2, Jewell 1, Scott City 1, Altamont 1, Central, Kansas City, 2, El Dorado 1, Courtland 1, Larned 1.

It would be a great thing for the work if every one of the Bible classes in our Kansas churches would get busy, organize according to the international standard, send for a Certificate of Recognition, and enable us to report at Pittsburg, 1909, at least one organized Adult Bible class in every Christian Bible school. Indeed, this is our slogan for the coming year, "An A. B. C. in every C. B. S." With this in mind, we issue the following:

CALL FOR VOLUNTEERS.
All Bible Classes throughout the State are hereby invited to Join in One United Effort to ORGANIZE FOR ONE GRAND FORWARD MOVEMENT.
MEN AND WOMEN WANTED!
(16 years and up)
To join the mightiest movement within recent years in the S. S.
LET US THROW A "SENIOR FORTIFICATION" ABOUT OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

May we insist that every organized Adult Bible class measuring up to the International standard report to this office at once? And, also, that these secure the Certificate of Recognition at once from Mr. J. H. Engle, Abilene, Kansas? Its cost is 25 cents. Only such classes as have the certificate of Recognition will be counted by us as Adult Bible classes.

To the large number of Bible classes not yet organized, we send an urgent invitation to take steps at once looking toward such an organization. It will help you and help the church. Please report all progress to this office. Any information or help desired can be secured from State Supt. Bible Schools, Topeka, Kan.

Nebraska Bible School Interests.

The last two weeks of August were spent at Bethany, Neb., in attendance upon the State Ministerial Association and the State Convention. My part of the program was to give lectures and addresses on the Bible and on Bible school work. Only those who have spent a season at Bethany with the good people of Nebraska can appreciate the privilege I enjoyed in becoming acquainted with the brethren of this coming empire of the West.

The past two years the Bible school interests of Nebraska have been under the supervision of I. A. Downey, of Lincoln. Brother Downey is the expert normal instructor of the state Department of Public Instruction. It has meant much for a man of his skill and eminence to be officially interested in the Bible school work. He presided at the Bible school sessions of the convention and superintended the model Bible school on the last Lord's day. The pressure of his public duties compelled him to relinquish the care of the Bible schools for the coming year. G. W. Darner, of Overton, is his successor. Brother Darner is a successful business man and an enthusiastic Bible school superintendent, and will be a strong advocate of the work.

Nebraska is to have a Bible school evangelist, who will give his whole time to the work. Missouri, Kansas and Iowa will please take notice. Three good men made this new future possible by guaranteeing the salary. The liberality of the Nebraska Bible schools will respond liberally to the faith of these men, no doubt. A committee is seeking the man and have him in mind.

Cotner University is situated at Bethany, and is a factor to be reckoned with in the Bible school work of Nebraska. Chancellor Aylesworth has been with the university for fourteen years, days full of trial and uncertainty and of marvelous self-denial and faith, not only on the part of Chancellor Aylesworth, but on the part of the faculty as well. All lovers of our colleges will be happy to know that the university is in its most prosperous days and with its brightest future before it. Its friends give loving and beautiful credit to Chancellor Aylesworth, while not forgetting his faithful helpers. No man could have the fuller love and confidence of the community, and especially of the student body, than the chancellor. His personality is a benediction and an inspiration.

Chancellor Aylesworth knows what the university should be in relation to the Bible school interests of the state. He has in mind to encourage young men and women to prepare themselves for specialists in this great work. As soon as it can be done courses of study in Bible school work will be given. This will mean much for our great West. I am in receipt of a cordial invitation to visit the university early in December next for two weeks of lectures on Bible school problems.

The last Lord's day of the Nebraska state convention brought out a great gathering from the churches of Lincoln, Bethany and Havelock. The model Bible school, under the supervision of I. A. Downey, was a fine feature. There were 645 present, and the offering was over $60. A profitable feature of these annual union convention Bible schools is the birthday offering. Every one present is given an opportunity to make his birthday offering. The amount received is given to the State Missionary Society for an evangelistic meeting in some needy church.

The Campaign in Missouri.

Now that J. H. Bryan and myself are both in the harness, the campaign may be said to be in full blast. We hope to waken every worker in the state, for the best year's work in our history.

REMEMBER OUR AIMS.

1. "All the church and as many more in the Bible-school." Have you started an effort to do this? Others are doing it. If they can do it, you can.

2. "A trained teacher for every class." 10,000 in training classes by October 1. If we do this, your school must fall into line now!

3. "Every adult class an organized class for growth and service." Organization of classes means a knowledge of the Book, and the service which the Book requires. Send for the Recognition Certificate. The aim is 1,000 organized Adult Bible Classes by October 1. Send to this office for information.

BIBLE STUDY DAY, SEPTEMBER 27TH.

This has been agreed upon as the Sunday for rallies, sermons and addresses; for organizing and enlisting the whole church. Have the superintendents their plans for that day? Have the preachers their sermon for the day "on the stocks"? Make it a big day. Send for literature.

NEWS OF THE CAMPAIGN.

Never were there so mny calls for help. We could use half a dozen men if we had them. District and county conventions are the storm centers just now. We are getting to all of them we possibly can.

An adult class has been organized at Shelbyville and the certificate and twenty-five buttons ordered. Just like R. B. Havener.

Adult classes have been organized recently at Diamond, Forest Avenue (Kansas City), Middle Grove, Rich Hill, and others are on the way.

Here is the record teacher training class in the country: "Bogard, Mo., Sept. 8.—Will you kindly furnish me with the number of pupils in the largest teacher training class in Missouri. I mean country class; city, town or village barred."

"At Mt. Carmel church, Carroll county, we have a class of nearly sixty, organized three weeks. We are going after the record. Yours in awful earnest, F. A. Wellman.

Where is the country church in Missouri that will take a dare like the above? If they can, you can.

On September 27, Compton Heights, St. Louis, is to have a rally for the campaign, and the State Superintendent is to be present and make an address.

Atlanta is forming a training class. Make it a big one, please! Granby will have a training class in full operation by October 1.

If your training class has taken a vacation, start it up again not later than October 1. Take preliminary steps before that time comes, so as to start promptly.

CHILDREN'S DAY FOR HOME MISSIONS.

Now that our Missouri schools are settling down for the autumn work, do not let Children's Day for Home Missions be forgotten. On November 22 our Missouri schools ought all to send a liberal offering to W. J. Wright, Cor. Sec'y, Cincinnati, O., for the support of our American Christian Missionary Society. In order to make full preparation for this great event, send at once for supplies for the day, to the above address. The fields are agape; the doors are wide open; the needs are very great; the harvest is sure and ripe! We ought to have the widest observance of Children's Day for Home Missions in Missouri that the state has ever seen.

OUR TREASURY.

The first quarter of this fiscal year is now gone and we are well into the second. Many of our schools have paid nothing on their pledges. We need the money very much. If your school has not sent anything this year, see to it at once. We are devising more liberal things than ever before, and this calls for more liberal support. Do not fail us. Send all money to J. H. Hardin, 311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Teacher Training.

When you organize your class in the first course, you will be glad if you use the "Teacher Training Hand Book." It received the unanimous endorsement of the International Committee on Education. Price, 25 cents a copy in quantities, not prepaid.

September 27. Rally.

By arrangement among our Bible school men, September 27 is to be a high day in all our Bible schools. Discerning preachers will avail themselves of the opportunity of preaching a sermon on the place of the Bible school in the church. The schools will rally their forces for the fall and winter campaign.

The Advanced Course.

"Studies of the Books of the Bible" is now ready. This is the only book needed for the first year's work in the Advanced Course. It contains fifty lessons, and offers a whole year's work in Bible study. It presents a study of every book in the Bible. Price, cloth bound, 50 cents in quantities, not prepaid.

A Century Teacher Training Class.

Wednesday night, September 9, we ran over to Kansas City and gave an address on teacher training to a large audience at the Independence Boulevard Christian Church. One hundred enrolled for the first course, and it is probable that the number will soon be two hundred. J. W. Monser is the teacher, and this fact guarantees a great class and a great opportunity. "The Teacher Training Handbook" is the text book used.

People's Forum

The Country Church.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I am glad that "The Christian-Evangelist" is making an effort to revive the country church. The decline of the country church is a sad thing to contemplate, but the fact remains that it is declining. I can see three reasons for such decline.

1. There is a strong desire on the part of young men entering the ministry to live in a city and preach for a big church. It matters not in what kind of a field a young man begins his ministry, his hope is to work his way to the city. Many have the idea that the man who preaches for the city church is of necessity superior in ability and culture to the man who preaches in the country. This is a mistake. It is possible for a man to be in a large city and the city be unconscious of his presence. The city needs attention, but the country needs it more. Our preachers come mainly from the country churches, and from the poorer sections of the country, and it might be added they come from the poorer class of people. Let the country church die and ministerial supply will be cut off.

2. Another reason for this continual weakening of the church in the country is the tendency of the people to move to town. I have known men who owned good farms and were free from debt to let their farms out to other men, move to town, live in a rented house and work by the day for a mining company, just for the sake of living in town. Why should this be? In this day of telephones, rural mail routes and daily papers, it is almost as convenient to live in the country as in the city, and much less expensive. This unwise drifting to the towns works much harm to the country church.

3. There is still another cause. This cause can be seen in the kind of work done by some of our evangelists. I recently conducted a meeting with a country church in Central Kentucky, about six or seven miles from the county seat. While there I was told that an evangelist of wide reputation and great power had held a very successful revival meeting in the county seat a year or two before. There was a large congregation in the town. During the meeting the evangelist weakened several neighboring churches by persuading a number of persons who really lived in the country to transfer their membership to the large church in town. The published report, sent in by telegram, told how greatly the church was strengthened, but failed to tell how many churches had been weakened.

Now, what is the remedy?

1. Let our young men who are preparing for the ministry be impressed with the needs of the country people, and the opportunities offered by the country as a field of labor. It should also be impressed upon them that the same degree of talent, preparation and consecration is required to succeed in the country as in the city. It must be remembered that all of our great and godly men are not preaching for city churches.

2. If a man lives midway between a country church and the town and holds his membership in the country church, let him remain in that relationship undisturbed. Let no one urge him to transfer his membership to the city. That would be unjust to the country church.

CALVIN.

A sad loss has fallen upon Frank N. Calvin and his family, and upon the Compton Heights Church, St. Louis, Mo., in the death of Sister Calvin. An able and untiring worker, she is called away in the midst of her usefulness. While not of robust health the past year or two, her illness was of very short duration. After returning from a happy and restful vacation some complication of heart trouble set in. But during the eight days of sickness there seemed no reason for great anxiety until about midnight of Sunday, September 6. At that hour a sudden and rapid sinking ensued and at 3 a. m. she passed away, and the fair September sunrise looked down upon the stricken and sorrowing home. Julia A. Bovee was married to Frank N. Calvin at Belleview, Ill. Three children survive her: two daughters, Artie and Enola, the former married to Dr. Arthur Clay, of Hoopeston, Ill.; and one son, Frank N., Jr. Sister Calvin has always been a devoted and most efficient worker in church and Sunday-school. During the four or five years of Brother Calvin's successful and fruitful pastorate at Compton Heights Mrs. Calvin inaugurated and was for a long time president of the Women's Union, an organization which has been a great force in this large and active congregation. She was president also of the junior department in the Sunday-school and superintendent of the supplemental department, besides taking part in other activities. She will indeed be greatly missed. Few can fairly appreciate, none can fully estimate, the inestimable value of a true pastor's wife. When added to the training of the family, moulding the character of the children by Christian training and influence, the faithful and hardworking mother devotes time and energy to the blessing of society by the building up of church and Sunday-school, she surely reaches the highest ideal of Christian womanhood. Competent in various fields, Sister Calvin made the work with the children her specially chosen sphere. In how many childish hearts has she inscribed the name of the Great Children's Friend! How many little feet has she encouraged to turn towards the pathway of the Christian faith! None can measure the influence of such a life as hers. It is worth living, it is worth enduring, it is worth sacrificing, to have had so earnest a part in the great work of uplifting the world. The funeral services, attended by a large number of sorrowing friends, were held in Compton Heights Church Wednesday afternoon, September 9. The writer spoke on the consoling phrase of the apostle in 1 Thess. 4:18: "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." And beneath a mass of floral tributes and the summer sunshine and the fragrant air, the lifeless form, so long active in the Master's service, but sleeping now, was laid to rest in the faith of him who said, "I am the resurrection and the life." VOGEL.

Peter Vogel, of Somerset, Pa., went to his reward Saturday, July 25, 1908. Brother Vogel was born near Butler, Pa., September 4, 1844. His early education was in German schools, when he was being fitted for the priesthood in the Catholic church. In his seventeenth year he accepted the Protestant faith, uniting with the Christian church. Soon after this he entered Eurah College, where he graduated with first honors in 1866. Upon graduation he entered the ministry. Brother Vogel has been prominent in the church as a preacher of power and a writer of ability for many years, not only contributing to papers and magazines, but also to the permanent literature of the church. Some of his books have been published, some are yet in manuscript; one, "The Pater Noster," breathes of devotion and spiritual exhaltation.

In October, 1866, Brother Vogel was married to Mary M. Dinsmore, of New Castle, Pa. To this union were born eight children—three of these, Ella King, Virginia V., Maud Petrina and the wife survive him. For quite a while Brother Vogel had been in failing health. Under the advice of specialists in Pittsburg he went on a sea voyage. In Oxford, England, he consulted the famous Dr. William Osler, and was for a month under his care in his private hospital. Brother Vogel's life was beautiful. His relations to his family were ideal. He possessed a fair quality of mind and heart. He numbered friends both without and within the church. The world is better that he lived in it and will miss him that he has gone from it.

It Takes Courage.

To speak the truth when, by a little prevarication, you can get some great advantage.

To live according to your convictions.

To be what you are, and not pretend to be what you are not.

To live honestly within your means, and not dishonestly upon the means of others.

When mortified and embarrassed by humiliating disaster, to seek in the wreck or ruin the elements of future conquest.

To refuse to knuckle and bend the knee to the wealthy, even though poor.

To refuse to make a living in a questionable vocation.

To refuse to do a thing which you think is wrong, because it is customary and done in trade.

To be talked about and yet remain silent when a word would justify you in the eyes of others, but which you can not speak without injury to another.

To face slander and lies, and to carry yourself with cheerfulness, grace and dignity for years before the lie can be corrected.

To stand firmly erect while others are bowing and fawning for praise and power.

To remain in honest poverty while others grow rich by questionable methods.

To say "No" squarely when those around you say "Yes."

To do your duty in silence, obscurity and poverty, while others about you prosper through neglecting or violating sacred obligations.

Not to bend the knee to popular prejudice. —Success Magazine.

A loud religious profession, unsustained by a consistent godly life, deceives nobody but the one who makes it.

What is your life? It is even a vapor. What is it harnessed to? Steam is a vapor, but it moves the world.

To inherit without personal endeavor is apt to be too easy for the development of character. Muscle grows by toil.

Twelve Personal Ideals.

As Set Forth in the Sermon on the Mount.

To make the world more Christlike by the influence which radiates from my daily life. (Matt. 5:13-16.)

To keep my temper under perfect control. (Matt. 5:21-26.)

To keep my imagination clean. (Matt. 5:27-32.)

To overcome the evil done to me, not with more evil but with good. (Matt. 5:38-42.)

To be the brother of every man, friend, stranger, competitor, or enemy. (Matt. 5: 43-48; 7:12.)

To pray to God as I would speak to my father. (Matt. 6:7-15.)

To put more thought on my character than on my bank account or my finery. (Matt. 6:19-21.)

To leave the aimless and the evil past and take Christ for my leader and his plan of campaign for my purpose. (Matt. 6:22-24.)

To look for God the Father in every event of Nature or human life, and so trust always and worry never. (Matt. 6:25-34.)

To let the evil in others remind me of my own weakness and so to sympathize and help rather than find fault. (Matt. 7:1-5.)

To believe enough in prayer to use it, just as I have faith enough to come home for my meals. (Matt. 7:7-11.)

To do all these things, not talk about them or dream about them, according to my best endeavor, by the personal help of Christ. (Matt. 7:15-27.)—E. L. Heermance, in "Congregationalist and Christian World."

"How's your husband now?"

"Poor man, he is laid up at home with the rheumatism. All he is able to do now is to mind the baby, split the kindling, answer the door-bell, and run errands to the grocery store!"

Economy as a Fad.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., was talking to a member of the famous Bible class about economy.

"But economy, like everything else, may be carried to extremes—may be made a mere fad of," said Mr. Rockefeller.

"There is a farmer out near Cleveland who makes a fad of economy. Every time he drives into town he carries a hen with him tied to the seat of his buggy.

"A friend rode with him one day and found out the use of the hen. When, at noon, the farmer lunched under a tree he gave his mare a feed from a nosebag. The hen, set on the ground, ate all that the horse spilled from the bag, and thus there was no waste."—Washington Star.

Hard on the Boys.

In the old days of New England a boy was looked upon as a troublesome creature, who must be kept down at all costs. There were a good many laws which concerned him on the old statute books, and some of them are here quoted:

"If a boy shall sing or whistle on the Lord's day, it is a fine of ten cents.

"If a boy shall throw a stone and break a window, it is a fine of nine cents.

"If a boy shall chase a girl, it is a fine of six cents.

"If a boy shall go to sleep in church, it is a fine of three cents, and the warden may cane him.

"If a boy shall throw stones at a neighbor's dog, it is a fine of five cents, and his father shall whip him.

"If a boy laugh in public school, his teacher may take his coat off and administer thirteen hard blows.

"If a boy steals apples or other fruit, his parents must pay twice the value thereof, and he may be sent to the common jail for two days."

Poor little Puritan boy! No wonder he grew up so stiff and straight-laced, with never a jest or a smile!—Selected.

The Dreamer.

The dreamer dreamed and the busy world
Passed by with a mocking smile,
As it went in search of the world's rewards,
But the dreamer dreamed the while.

He saw the world, as the world should be,
When longer years had run,
And the world but paused in its work to ask;
"Pray, what has the dreamer done?"

Yet ever the dreamer dreamed his dream,
Until, in some wondrous way—
As the water springing in depths of earth,
Finds passage to upper day—

The dreamer's dream found the man of power—
'Tis strange how men's lives are knit—
Who knew not the dreamer, but took his dream
And transformed the world with it.

The world bows down to the man of power—
Forgotten the dreamer dies,
Yet the dream he dreamed is the secret force
That has forged man's destinies.

The Hopeful View.

There is a great difference in the way different people endure their sorrow. Some look only down—down into the grave, down into their own breaking hearts, down at the emptiness, the ruin, and the darkness about them. These find no comfort. Others, with grief no less keen, with loss no less sore, look up into the face of God and see love there; look into heaven where their loved ones are; look at the blessed stars of hope which shine above them, and are comforted. Whittier, in "Snow-Bound," sets the two aspects of sorrow side by side:

"Alas for the man who never sees
The stars shine through his cypress trees!
Who, hopeless, lays his dead away,
Nor looks to see the breaking day
Across the mournful marbles play!

"Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That life is ever lord of death,
And love can never lose its own."

—J. R. Miller, D. D.

Don't Smoke.

"I am not much of a mathematician," said the cigarette, "but I can add to a youth's nervous troubles, I can subtract from his physical energy, I can multiply his aches and pains, I can divide his mental powers, I can take interest from his work, and discount his chances for success."—New York Observer.

"Keeps" for the Children.

These "keep texts" are all in the Bible. Find them and learn them, and so make them yours.

"Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

"Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile."

"Keep thee far from a false matter."

"He that keepeth his mouth, keepeth his life."

"Take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently."

"Little children, keep yourselves from idols."

"My son, keep thy Father's commandments."

"My son, keep sound wisdom and discretion."—Exchange.

Happiness and Marriage.

Bishop Sheepshanks, of London, declares the great causes of domestic unhappiness are selfishness and temper. Men are more selfish than women. Man puts his great, sturdy arms akimbo and declares that he is the one person to be considered in the home. The bishop denounced nagging, but said that when there was a tiff the man ought to initiate a reconciliation.

Men ought to regard as important and remember the anniversaries of their wedding days and their wives' birthdays, and give them presents, not forgetting a good, loving kiss.

Middle-aged women often complained that their husbands kissed their children but would not kiss them. Women longed for a demonstration of affection. Most trouble would be avoided if men would remember this.

A GIVER AND HER GIFT

By Mary Barrett Howard

"He's awfully old, 'most 20," said Mary Elizabeth impressively. "He's a sophomore at Yale and he's going to stop at the Ingraham's on his way back to college. He'll be here for Nellie's birthday party, and I wish—how I do wish that I had a silk to wear that night—a thick, shiny silk like Nellie's!"

"Dearest," Mrs. Carr remonstrated, "a silk frock for a girl of your age!"

"I'm 'most 16, mamma," Mary Elizabeth, who had just passed her fifteenth birthday, returned with dignity. "Nellie isn't but eleven months older. Hers is pink, and Miss Shero is making it with kilt plaitings and a trail. It must be perfectly lovely," she went on in a tone with vain longings, "to have your clothes made just as you want them and to have your father bring you pink silks when he goes to New York."

"Nellie Ingraham, poor child," said Mrs. Carr tenderly, "has no mother to decide what is or is not suitable for a young girl to wear. Dr. Ingraham is devoted to his motherless little daughter, but no man ever understands—"

"What?" asked Mr. Carr, looking up from the enveloping folds of his morning paper.

"Oh, papa, Nellie Ingraham's got a new pink silk for her birthday party, and I want a blue one dreadfully, but mamma says I'm too young," Mary Elizabeth explained dismally.

"I can't for the life of me see, Frances," Mr. Carr expostulated in immediate corroboration of his wife's opinion of his sex, "why a girl shouldn't have a silk gown while she's still young enough to 'want one dreadfully' instead of making her wait until she's too old to care."

"How can you be so absurd, George?" protested Mrs. Carr. "As if a woman were ever too old to enjoy a good silk gown! I intend that Mary shall have one when she is 18, but you would not wish to make a young lady of her yet, I hope?"

In this simple country town in the far-away eighteen-eighties a girl was not formally presented to society, but when she had arrived at what was considered a proper age she was endowed by her nearest of kin with a silk gown to be henceforth worn as the sign and insignia of her young ladyhood at the "tea-parties" which were in those days a favorite form of social dissipation.

"Oh, mamma, do let me have it now," Mary Elizabeth implored, coming to kneel on a hassock at her mother's feet. "It will make me so happy."

"But there's no time, dearest," cried Mrs. Carr, quite desperate at sight of the tears that were gathering in the uplifted, beseeching brown eyes. "Who ever heard of buying and getting a silk gown in less than two weeks!"

The purchase of a silk gown in those primitive days was regarded even by well-to-do people as a solemn thing, requiring many weighty family consultations and much comparing and testing of the relative merits of silk patterns obtained from the city shops.

"Why don't you go into town yourself, Frances?" proposed Mr. Carr. "It would save time."

"George! the very idea!" exclaimed his wife. "I don't consider myself a judge of silk, and I wouldn't think of making such a purchase without consulting your mother and Aunt Melissa and Aunt Clarissa and Aunt Wealthea and Cousin Maria Dresser, who is such an excellent—"

"Heavens!" Mr. Carr interposed laughingly. "If that's the case you'd better set about it at once, or the chances are that Mary Elizabeth won't get her silk gown before she is a grandmother."

But Mrs. Carr proceeded, without noticing this frivolous remark:

"And even if we could get the silk here in time, you know perfectly well, George, that Miss Shero has to be engaged for months before one wants her—and you've encouraged Mary Elizabeth and got her all wrought up for nothing," she concluded reproachfully.

"Why, I do believe, Frances, that I can give Mary Elizabeth just what she wants!" cried an eager voice from the corner, where a little old woman with a thin, sweet face had sat quietly knitting during this discussion. "Come with me, Aunt Melissa, deary, and see what's in her trunk."

Mary Elizabeth eagerly followed her grandaunt from the room, but the look that Mrs. Carr cast on their vanishing figures as they ascended the broad staircase was full of misgiving.

"What in the world?" she murmured. "Don't you think, George that I'd better go, too?"

"I didn't hear you invited," replied Mr. Carr calmly. "Let them alone, Frances—Aunt Melissa looked tickled to death, and if she wants to give Mary Elizabeth a silk gown I wouldn't interfere if I were you."

"But she can't possibly have anything that Mary Elizabeth would want!" said Mrs. Carr in distress. "That child grows fussier about her clothes every day she lives, and I'm so afraid she will say something to hurt Aunt Melissa's feelings!"

"Oh, no, she won't; I wouldn't worry, Frances," said Mr. Carr, again becoming immersed in the pages of the "Tribune."

Mrs. Carr sighed impatiently at the familiar admonition. How could she help "worrying" at the thought of the scene that might be taking place at that very moment in the chambers above, where a poor old woman was displaying to critical, scornful young eyes some pitiful remnant of former grandeur. For Aunt Melissa, once abundantly supplied with this world's goods, had spent her substance so lavishly, so uncalculatingly, not only in the service of those she loved, but also on all destitute creatures that crossed her path, that now she had come to 70 years she was wholly dependent on the bounty of others.

One of her contemporaries, a woman whose cold gray eyes had never moistened at sight of another's misfortunes, whose purse-strings had never loosened to relieve another's needs, and whose placid, unwrinkled face and sumptuous apparel testified to the worldly wisdom of that creed which has for its sole commandment, "Thou shalt look out for Number 1," frequently remarked that she had no sympathy whatever for Melissa Walworth.

"If she had listened to my advice," Mrs. Prout was wont to say severely, "she would have put that unfortunate husband of hers in an asylum instead of keeping him at home with expensve nurses to care for him all those years; she would have left that wild son of hers to his own destruction instead of squandering her fortune trying to reclaim him, and she would not have kept open house for every poor man and stray dog that came to her door."

The judgment of the warm-hearted Carrs was more lenient, and it was through Mr. Carr's generosity that the dear old woman had been able to remain in her old home in the distant New England village, where, "life's fitful fever ended," husband and son slept peacefully in the grassgrown churchyard. Twice each year Aunt Melissa paid her nephew and his family a long visit, and always she received from them not the careless hospitality which is too often the portion of the poor relation, but the sunniest guest room, the seat of honor at the table and the warmest nook in the chimney corner.

But even these kindly people did not guess the grief of this poor little Lady Bountiful when she had learned that henceforth she must be a receiver rather than a giver of gifts, and in the present instance Mrs. Carr's only concern was the fear that Mary Elizabeth's refusal of the proffered silk gown might be lacking in consideration.

When at last the old, bent woman and the slim, erect young girl re-entered the room where the Carrs were sitting, Mrs. Carr gave them one swift, apprehensive glance; but Aunt Melissa's wrinkled face was illumined with the joy a generous heart feels when it has bestowed upon another a welcome gift, and Mary Elizabeth announced gaily:

"Aunt Melissa and I have a secret, mamma. She is to be my fairy godmother, and the night of Nellie's party I shall burst upon you and papa in all my splendor, as Cinderella did when she went to the ball."

"Yes, Frances," chimed in Aunt Melissa, all a-quiver with eagerness. "Mary Elizabeth was delighted, and I am sure I can make the needful alterations—I was deemed a good needlewoman in my day. I don't think you ever saw that silk of mine—it was—"

"Hush! hush! Aunt Melissa," broke in Mary Elizabeth, holding up a warning finger. "You know it is to be a secret."

"But, dearest, I can't possibly consent to such a thing," Mrs. Carr demurred. "I'm sure that Aunt Melissa will see that it is impossible."

"Yes, Frances, I suppose you would not want to trust me," Aunt Melissa said sadly. "It was Mary Elizabeth's idea, and I thought I would be so happy if I could dress her for the party all myself."

Mary Elizabeth put her arm over the bent shoulders.

"You shall, Aunt Melissa," she declared. "O papa, do please tell mamma that Aunt Melissa may give me her silk gown, and that she is not to see it until the night of the party."

"Why not, Frances? Do let the child have her way; she can't be young but once," Mr. Carr responded promptly.

"You'd say that, George, if Mary Elizabeth wanted to go up in a balloon," sighed his wife resignedly. "And I still think that a silk gown on a girl of Mary Elizabeth's age is absurd."

Nothing more was said at that time, but Mrs. Carr approached the subject with Mary Elizabeth in private more than once during the days that followed, finding her, however, quite impervious to either coaxing or argument.

"Girls are such a trial, George," she lamented after one of these scenes. "I've just been trying to convince Mary Elizabeth that her new white embroidered muslin would be much prettier for her to wear to Nellie's party than Aunt Melissa's silk, but she won't listen to me. She is evidently determined to impress that young man from Chicago with the idea that she is a full-fledged young lady."

"Great Scott, Frances!" exclaimed Mr. Carr impatiently, "I thought that question was settled."

"But I can't endure the thought that our only child should grow up vain and willful," mourned the mother. "Of course, Mary Elizabeth has been a trifle spoiled and not exactly tractible or easily managed, but—"

"Oh, Mary Elizabeth's all right," chuckled her father, to whom Mary Elizabeth's childish escapades had been an unfailing source of delight. "But, Frances, you 'hen with one chicken,' do try to resign yourself to the fact that the time is fast coming when she will escape altogether from your sheltering wing in spite of your anxious cluckings."

But little Mrs. Carr's temperament precluded all possibility of her acceptance of her husband's easy-going philosophy, and the "anxious cluckings" continued intermittently until three days before the date set for the great event, when she was suddenly summoned to the bedside of a friend who was lying dangerously ill in a neighboring town.

The crisis happily over, Mrs. Carr hurried home unannounced, hoping to arrive in time to see her little daughter arrayed for the party, and if necessary, to insist on a change of costume should Aunt Melissa's silk gown prove hopelessly unbecoming or inappropriate for such an occasion. But the only person to greet her as she entered the house was Aunt Melissa, who was sitting placidly knitting before a cheerful wood fire.

"O Frances, I'm so sorry you didn't get here sooner!" she said regretfully. "Mary Elizabeth hasn't been gone more than five minutes. The child looked lovely! I don't think you ever saw that puce colored lute-string of mine, for I haven't worn it for a great many years. I came out bride in it the Sunday after I was married, and though I do say it, that silk is a sight handsomer than those they have nowadays; it is no exaggeration to say that it is stiff enough to stand alone."

Mrs. Carr groaned inaudibly, and the hours dragged with leaden feet as she sat there wondering if her petted child, for the first time in her short life, was experiencing the poignant mortification which is the portion of a girl who is conscious that she has made herself a target for ridicule by her unsuitable attire.

At length the sound of voices and laughter heralded the return of the pleasure-seekers, and Mrs. Carr gave a little gasp of dismay as Mary Elizabeth, after greeting the unexpected apparition of her mother with a tempestuous hug, threw off the long cloak that enveloped her and whirled gaily about for inspection.

Such a quaint, old-fashioned figure as the child was in that brownish-purple silk, thick and stiff enough in truth to "stand alone"; its only trimming a prim little collar and cuffs of Brussels lace. Aunt Melissa had made no attempt to modernize it, but had merely altered it to fit the lines of the slim, girlish figure; and the dim old eyes that now proudly watched her saw in her a prototype of her former self—that happy bride of the long ago.

"Mary Elizabeth's prettier than I was in my best days; but John used to say my hair was like sunshine and my eyes like forget-me-nots," Aunt Melissa murmured, half to herself. "Somehow seeing that dress worn once more brings the old happiness right back to me. What do you think of her, Frances? Don't you call that puce color real becoming to her, and isn't the silk handsome and rich-looking?"

"Y—es—oh, yes!" stammered Mrs. Carr, restraining by a violent effort the emotions that were racking her.

But Mary Elizabeth was not deceived, and with a half-hysterical giggle she said hastily:

"Well, I've had a perfectly lovely time, but I'm so tired that I can't stay up to talk it over. Good night, dear Aunt Melissa," she continued, bending down to press her fresh young lips to the wrinkled cheek. "I'll tell you all about the party to-morrow, and thank you a thousand times for giving me the gown in which you 'came out bride.' I shall keep it among my greatest treasures as long as I live."

"Why, deary," beamed Aunt Melissa, "it's made me happier than I've been for years to be able once more to give something to somebody that she really wanted."

Mrs. Carr, on her way to her own room later, was unable to refrain from softly opening Mary Elizabeth's door to see if she were still awake. The girl was lying in her little white bed with the moonlight streaming through the muslin curtains on the bright hair scattered on the pillow and into the dark splendor of her wide brown eyes.

"I only wanted to ask you, dearest," her mother began apologetically, "if you really had a pleasant time or—or if you didn't feel a trifle unhappy and out of place in poor Aunt Melissa's 'puce colored silk'?"

"It was rather bad just at first," Mary Elizabeth confessed, "for the girls all stared and giggled and whispered about me when I took off my cloak in the dressing room; but when we went downstairs the boys didn't seem to notice, and after a while the girls, too, seemed to forget about my queer gown, and were just as nice to me as ever."

"And—and the young collegian?" asked Mrs. Carr tearfully. A tiny dimple showed at the corner of Mary Elizabeth's mouth.

"He was the nicest of all," she responded frankly.

"I'm so glad!" Mrs. Carr exclaimed with a breath of relief.

"So am I," agreed Mary Elizabeth. "You see, now, that I had to keep it a secret, mamma, for I knew you would never consent to my wearing such a gown. But, oh, mamma, if you had seen Aunt Melissa's face when she opened her shabby little hair trunk and held her treasured silk out to me! She looked so eager and yet so afraid I wouldn't like it that I'd have worn that awful puce colored lustering if—if it had been the poisoned shirt of Nessus!'' Mary Elizabeth, who had recently begun the study of mythology, concluded earnestly.

Even as she spoke an old woman was kneeling with reverently folded hands at her evening devotions. She was praying only as the pure in heart can pray; for such only, when life's evening shadows close around them, can approach the throne of the Most High with the same simple confidence in his sympathy that they felt when, as little children, they gathered about their mothers' knees to breathe their thanks for his watchful care and love.''

''O dear Lord,'' Aunt Melissa said, ''I thank thee for putting into my mind the thought of bringing my puce colored lutestring with me on this visit. And I thank thee also for causing Mary Elizabeth to appreciate what a handsome silk it is. For thou dost know that sometimes girls are finicky, and when I took it out of my trunk and showed it to her, I was afraid, just for an instant, that she—didn't.''

Over-tired Men.

Can any evening be bright and alive with clever talk and refreshing sound of song and merry laughter, when the master of the house comes in an hour late, worn to the last limit of nerve endurance and has to bear the consequences? He can not take time to look at the thoughtful preparation of the pretty room; he has no leisure to note the careful toilette made for him, and fails to see that his wife has worn her favorite gown. He knows that a delicate repast is already overcooked and has to forego a refreshing change of dress, which would have shaken off the dust of the town. The tidbits on which thought and money have been expended for his pleasure are tasteless and uninviting; he has to wrench his thoughts with affectionate effort from the trying involvement of that new responsibility taken at the last moment in his office, and he can only talk by fits and starts. Dinner over he throws himself on the nearest sofa and falls asleep from sheer exhaustion. The dullness of long evenings seems accounted for!

Just to have allowed himself one brief hour—even half an hour—more of freedom would have changed the whole aspect of his return and made him master of a refreshing, relieving side to his overburdened life, that would act like a barrier against a disabled brain and ''nervous prostration,'' those two valiant enemies of over-tired men.

An atmosphere of discontent has developed throughout the whole home during the extended hour in which the hard-pressed man, whose energies are its support, has striven to secure large treasure for its enrichment. In the kitchen a spirit of ''don't care'' seizes the cook and maid: ''What is the use of trying to have anything nice? Mr. —— is never on time.'' The children have had to be undressed without the jolly meeting for which the curls have been smoothed and the ribbons been tied as daintily as if to charm a lover's eyes. A weary, dull hour of expectation has made the waiting wife dispirited for herself and anxious for her best beloved. It comes to be a very serious question, when all is weighed in the domestic scales: ''Is the play worth the candle?''

Extra ococasions call for unwonted effort and every life has its emergencies, which no woman of common sense will ignore. It is not of these rare and unavoidable times that we are thinking. The germ not only of dull rural evenings, but of many dull and listless lives, is the habitual disregard of the necessarily fixed hours of every family. The yielding of the stress of any and every daily arising demand, until all allied business connections know that if a representative ''can catch Mr. Blank before he starts for home,'' he will talk with him.

A great, or even a vigorous small business never finishes off its ragged edges, the close of a day's work never sets aside all the interests involved in its transactions. Given a practically real closing time, these late comers, these detaining demands, could, at least nine times out of ten, be passed over to the early hours of a new day and the endless gain is quite beyond our reckoning.

These hurried and irregular escapes from a pursuit which, after all, stops as soon as the pursuers know the man is out of reach, are the groundwork of much suburban lack of sociability, and in the city households of the real workingman prevent the old-time familiar interchange of hospitality and friendly visiting. It becomes an added labor to dress for dinner, a great effort to talk and be interested in matters of general import; it makes it a labor to be a host and a fatigue to be a guest.

One hour's freedom before dinner would make half the young men in any prosperous neighborhood glad to welcome their neighbors, and incline them to enjoy an evening of either literary or musical intercourse.—Home Thoughts.

Home.

A babe upon its mother's breast,
A fledging in its cozy nest,
A human soul in God at rest,
Is each at home.

The storm drives fast without the door,
The great tree rocks, wild thunders roar
Around the soul surge sorrows sore:
Within is home.

Hidden the dress, but found the gold;
And life's sad secrets left untold,
Wrapped in love's mantle manifold:
'Tis thus at home.

That babe, that bird, that soul am I;
The tempests roll, and sob, and die:
The Christ of Calvary is nigh,
The cross my home!

—Kate Harwood.

While Rutherford B. Hayes was a college student, he went out walking one day with two of his chums and met an old farmer coming along the road. The future president addressed him in this manner:

''Good morning, Father Isaac!''

Then his two friends spoke to the old tiller of the soil, one calling him Father Abraham and the other Father Jacob.

''Gentlemen, you are mistaken,'' said the old man solemnly. ''I am neither Abraham, Isaac nor Jacob, but Saul, the son of Kish, who was sent out to find his father's asses, and, lo, he has found them.''—Judge.

A Life Sold Cheap.

In a heavy snowstorm at sea recently the American liner ''St. Paul'' rammed the British cruiser ''Gladiator'' amidships and sank her. As the collision occurred only a short distance from land, some of the men on the ill-fated ship swam to shore. One man safely reached the beach, and then remembering that he had left his money on the ship, swam back to get the $150 or $200. He never reached the beach alive again. How cheaply some are ready to sell their lives! ''For a cap and bells our lives we pay.'' Many a one has been safe having passed securely through some terrible disaster, only to lose his life when the mad desire for gold has seized him. Well has the poet said:

''Gold! gold! In all ages the curse of mankind;
Thy fetters are forged for the soul and the mind.
The limbs may be free as the wings of a bird,
And the mind be the slave of a look and a word.
To gain thee man barters eternity's crown.
Yields honor, affection, and lasting renown.''

Gold has wrought more murders in this world than most of us dream of. When the wail of the unfortunates shall come up at last, the cry of many will be, ''I was ruined by gold.'' It was gold that ruined Judas, and Judas has many followers in all ages. The lust of gold succeeds the lust of conquest.—New York Observer.

Italy's Rest Law.

One of Italy's latest laws decrees a weekly day of rest. The measure directs that all industrial and commercial concerns throughout the kingdom must grant to their employes a weekly rest of not less than twenty-four consecutive hours. The general sense of the law is that Sunday shall be the rest day, but if not that day, then another must be set aside as its equivalent. The railways and public utilities are excepted.

Torturing Animals To Assist Science

Is A Cruel Method to Follow, But It Has Saved Many Human Lives.

Prof. Pawlow, of Russia, was engaged for many years in experimental work, trying to learn the workings of digestion, especially the digestive glands.

He, with able assistants, operated upon dogs, cats, guinea pigs and other animals.

His methods were seemingly painful, but he gave to science a work which won the Nobel prize and made for him an undying fame.

Science penetrated the secrets of nature. Prof. Pawlow saw animals digest food. He analyzed juices from every part of the digestive canal and stomach, under all conditions of digestion. He spent years of ceaseless study amid the howling and dying beasts, but he won, and science to-day looks upon him as a great man.

''To do a great right do a little wrong'' Shakespeare said, and Prof. Pawlow obeyed this trite saying.

Stuart's Dyspepsia tablets are prepared by the most scientific process. They are produced by modern appliances, and meet the demand of 20th century chemistry.

They give man the means to correct his infirmities of stomach and digestive organs.

They enrich the blood, give nature the juices and fluids she lacks, stop the formation of noxious gases and the fermentation of food. They neutralize powerful acids and alkalies, which irritate and devour the stomach. They prevent and relieve bowel and intestinal trouble and soothe the nerves.

They should be used after every meal whether one has dyspepsia and stomach trouble, or the stomach be naturally healthy. By their use one may eat at all hours and whatever one desires, and they help the system digest or throw off such food. They are thoroughly meritorious, as their tremendous sale and popularity illustrate.

Every drug store has them for sale. Price 50c per package. If you would like to test their merits free, send us your name and address and we will send you a trial package by mail without cost. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

So far reported, we had received $43.27 on our missionary shower. Let us now continue the story:

Miriam Harriet Mauerham, Kirkham Ranch, Glendora, Cal.: "We are glad to learn, on our return from the Long Beach convention, that Drusie's 'showers of blessing' have not abated. Grandma says we must send for each one of our pets. Grandpa's fine span of black horses, called 'Black Beauties,' come first. They are said to be the finest looking horses around here, and have uncommon 'horse sense.' Grandma has a fine striped gopher cat named Stripie, with three kittens just like their mother. They keep rats and mice away from the house, and gophers away from the orange and lemon trees. Grandma brought Stripie up here to the ranch on the electric car, when they moved from Los Angles. I have a fine cat named Spottie, part Maltese, with white spots. He catches mice and lizards, and is gentle and industrious. Mamma has a fine coal-black cat, and a beautiful Maltese, but both are too lazy to hunt for anything. My papa bought me a beautiful Scotch Collie. I have a baby brother, four months old, which is dearer than all. I am four years-and-a-half, and grandma says I can join the Advance Society, when I can read. She has made me a life member of the C. W. B. M. My grandpa takes all the religious papers, but grandma reads 'The Christian-Evangelist' first, for we want to know how the Av. is progressing, and how the folks of the Easy Chair are getting along at beautiful Pentwater. Grandma thinks you must have a good mother. Grandpa says your father is the kind of salt that doesn't lose its savor." (And not a word about Felix! But inclosed is a much appreciated picture of Grace and Miriam Mauerham, one holding Blackie, the other Spottie, and the orange and lemon trees looking on; also $1.)

Fannie Warnock, St. Augustine, Ill.: "After I sent my part of Drusie's shower, I received these three dimes from friends to whom I had written about it. One comes from sunny Tennessee, one from the far north—South Dakota, so maybe this will bring another state into line. I inclose stamps, and please send me the Arkansas State capitol on a post card." (Sorry to say, none are on sale here. What shall I do with the stamps?) "Why don't you get Felix's picture in colors, on a post card. Think you could almost make your fortune, he is so popular." (Would I view Felix in such a commercial light?) "You ought to get him on an electric fan to keep him cool; then he wouldn't bother the ice box." (We'll fix him; we're going to quit taking ice.)

S. M. Weir, Harper, Kan.: "I have never written to the Av. S. editor. I am much interested in Drusie, in far-off China. We have been needing a shower very much, and now that we have had two good ones, I feel like passing a good thing along, so here are two dimes for Drusie. I hope there will be such a downpour, you will have to seek better shelter than a tree. God bless the missionaries."

Sophia May Olsen, West Sunny Side Farm, Ivanhoe, Minn.: "I sent $1 to Drusie about three months ago." (It was duly acknowledged in the paper.) "I would like to ask some questions regarding the Av. S.: Does a Scripture verse, listened to and memorized, count the same as one read? Would also ask if I am to send a complete report as I have it in my Av. S. book, or if a brief report is all that is required?" (Hearing a Bible verse is not so good as reading it yourself; but if you memorize it, that beats reading. Every verse you memorize ought to count two just read. A brief report is all that is required. Of course, if you are trying for an Av. S. prize, you'd better send a full report. But do as you please about that.)

Mrs. F. A. Potts, Wauseon, Ohio: "$1 for Drusie's shower from me and my little niece, Ruth Johnson. This is a little late, but I know it will be acceptable."

Mrs. J. L. Greenlee, Bertrand, Neb: "$1 for Drusie's shower. God bless Drusie and the Advance Society."

Belle F. Romweber, East Akron, Ohio: "Yesterday I visited an invalid who has been helpless about thirteen years, but her life is so beautiful that she is a blessing to all who know her. She inquired about Drusie and I told her about the shower. She gave me 10 cents to send. How many Av. S. members will send a message of good cheer to her?—Mrs. Eliza Funk, R. D. 21, East Akron, O., care of Henry Funk. Our little girl has saved 10 cents, which I will enclose with her letter. Am sending $2, and am still hoping and praying for the success of this good undertaking."

What's the Use?

What's the use of growing up?
You can't paddle with your toes
In a puddle! You can't yell
When you're feeling extra well;
Why every schoolboy knows
A "grown-up" can't let loose!
I don't want to be no older,
What's the use?

What's the use of growing up?
When I'm big, I don't suppose
That exploring would be right
In a neighbor's field at night.
I don't like to get my clothes
Over watermelon juice!
I don't want to be no older,
What's the use?

What's the use of growing up?
You could never ride the cow!
Then the rabbits and the pig
Will not like you when you're big!
I am comfortablest now;
Perhaps I am a little goose;
I don't want to be no older,
What's the use?

What's the use of growing up?
When you're growed, every day
You just have to be one thing!
I'm a pirate, then a king,
Then a cowboy—I can play
That I'm anything I choose!
I don't want to be no older,
What's the use?

—Exchange.

Here is Margaret's letter: "I am sending 10 cents for Drusie's shower. How is Felix? Don't let Felix take the letter this time. You know I wrote to you before. I hope the shower is not over yet. Felix must be a funny cat if it would take that letter." (When this letter came Felix just whined and yowled and twitched his tail to get it, but I just told him, no, sir; I was going to publish Margaret Romweber's letter, and he could go and catch a mouse if he was so hungry.)

Mrs. M. D. Sturges, North Platte, Neb.: "$1 for Drusie's shower. Am sending this for Gerald Dever, as he is too busy making hay to do so for himself. May God abundantly bless all who are interested in this work. Numbers 6:24-26."

Denver: "Enclosed please find twenty drops from two old people in Colorado. May they do some little good."

Union City, Ind.: "It is very dry in Indiana—that accounts for the lateness of this drop. However, I believe it is always drizzling in Arkansas."

From Spokane, Wash., Edith Slightam sends best wishes to the Av. S. and Felix; also a card showing the people picking strawberries near Spokane. The picture shows that every one has his box brimful of very red berries, so I don't see where they are to put any more. They must all have begun at the same second.

Fenton A. Allen, Los Angeles, Cal.: "$1 apiece from Mrs. Allen and myself, and 10 cents each from our little ones, Ethel and Joseph, for Drusie's shower."

Mrs. T. E. Heggins, Phillips, Wis.: "25 cents for Drusie; it will help some, though it is late. May God's choicest blessings be on the Av. S. work, Drusie and Orphan Charlie. The people here are not religious, but we have a very interesting union Sunday-school."

Flossie Davis, Des Moines, Iowa: "I enclose my fourteenth Av. S. report. I hope that shower will turn to a regular cloudburst. And so Felix got lonesome while you were in Missouri? My kittie died a week or two ago, and I miss him when I go home in the evenings. I wonder if Nora Taylor still reads 'The Evangelist'? We haven't heard from her for such a long time."

Mrs. Belle F. Burdette, Clarksville, Tex.: "I inclose the widow's mite for Drusie. May she be permitted to do much in that far-away land. I have known you since your advent in 'The Christian-Evangelist,' and read everything you've written—even about Felix. The Av. S. is accomplishing much good. The young mind needs to form habits of study and to be drawn to thoughts of supporting the orphan and missionary. We came here a number of years ago from St. Louis. I was once a teacher at Christian College, Columbia, Mo. I am so glad you came down to Sherman and helped Brother Carr with his 'Memorial.' Do not judge Texas by that party at Blooming Grove, who showed his ignorance of good literature by his uncalled-for remarks concerning 'A Week with the Woodneys.' Here's hoping that you may have another story in the paper soon." (If that "party" isn't completely crushed by this time, I should like to hear from him again.)

Mrs. Carrie Irons, Inavale, Neb.: "Enclosed find $5 for Drusie. I hope the shower may last till it has rained hundreds of dollars, for surely she is deserving if any one ever was."

Warren, Ohio: "Dear Brother—I may call you this, may I not, since we are children of our Father? Your page does me more good than all the other pages of the 'Evangelist' combined." (My, I am sorry for those other pages!) "Drusie Malott has put my feeble faith to shame many times, and I would like to help a little with her work in China. I enclose $1, and thank God there are faith-full people in the world to help us overcome the effect of the ones who seem to have none."

Robert Bair D. Fry, Yukon, Okla.: "Here is 20 cents for Drusie from my brother Harry and me. I am glad Aunt Lizzie Richardson suggested this shower. I have a kitten that I am going to call Felix."

Earl R. Brown, Danville, Ill.: "I send my ninth quarterly report, and with it $1 from me and a dime from Dorothy for Drusie. Dorothy also sends her fifteenth quarterly report. On August 12 I was working for my uncle on the farm, and was so busy I didn't get to the shower. All I had time for was work, eat and sleep—but better late than never."

Myrtle Brown, Danville: "I am not sending my report this time. I forgot to read my Bible verse about the middle of the tenth week, but the next Saturday I began again, and am now on my sixth week." (Good! The one who never fails till he quits is no more certain of victory than the one who, having failed, starts in again.)

Colorado Springs: "I enclose $1 for Drusie's shower, though rather late. We are here for my husband's health, and as we have neither chick nor child, cat nor dog, Felix will have no cause for jealousy. Colorado greetings to Felix, and don't rub his fur the wrong way. This is not for publication." ('Spec' I'd better stop, then.)

Drusie R. Malott, Hi Yang Hsien, Honan, China: "I have already told you that we are very crowded in the rented place that is our home. The men's meetings are held daily in the front chapel and the women's in the middle chapel. You see they meet separately, because, before they accept Christianity, they haven't our custom of being together. This usually leaves no place for my girls, so we meet wherever we can. Often they sit on the ground outdoors, around my chair. But they are quite happy for all that. We have a guest room. This is necessary in the eyes of the Chinese. We do not like to have the natives to come into our private rooms very much, on account of the danger of contagious diseases. And, besides that, they are likely to bring [Drusie here names some very small creatures, indeed, including fleas, etc.], for they come from such dirty, unsanitary, crowded rooms. No doubt there are exceptions among the higher class, but you would not find the homes of the well-to-do comfortable. We have three little rooms for our five helpers, and two little rooms for kitchen and dining room. When one has a Chinese cook he doesn't relish the idea of taking his meals in the kitchen. Our cook, however, is about as clean as the average, and is number one at preparing delicious dishes from ordinary material. Our own rooms extend across the compound, dividing the front and back yards. Mrs. Nowack has divided hers with a curtain, thus obtaining a little privacy, but curious people often stand at the door and look in. You ask, 'Why do you have glass doors, then?' Because Chinese houses have so few windows, usually just one in the front side of the room, and paper pasted over a lattice framework at that. So we need more light, and make the glass door at our own expense. My own little room has no window, but a glass door gives light enough by day. My room is about 6x19½. A screen divides it. In front is my desk-bookcase-drawer, made by a Chinese carpenter, a table, two chairs. In the back are my cot, washstand and trunk, all made by Chinese carpenters, as I brought nothing when I came to China but a little clothing. This leaves only enough space in the rear to turn around in—I mean it literally—but in the front there is room enough for two to sit comfortably. But, praise the Lord, I have great faith that it will be 'better farther on,' for the Lord who sent me the means to come to China is able and willing to provide the real needs that are for our good and the betterment of his cause."

Our next page of Av. S. letters will be a Missouri page. In it will be found no letters except from our friends in Missouri. The issue following that will be our Kansas, Illinois and Oklahoma page. In our Missouri page (October 1) we will tell the latest news about our orphan Charlie.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

An Auto Law.

The American Automobile Association has notified its 20,000 members that very drastic legislation will be enacted unless speeding is stopped. The intent is good, but the effect of such a notice will not be much. Legislation that will insure adequate punishment is the only thing that will prevent the fast driving of automobiles by certain reckless individuals. They will take the risk of being caught where a mere fine is the punishment. Besides, legislation is needed to prevent the nuisance of the automobile, independent of its danger.

Centennial of Religious Journalism.

The first religious newspaper was published in America at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, in September, 1808. We take it for granted, at any rate, that this claim of "The Herald of Gospel Liberty" is a just one. Five years later, or in 1813, was published the "Christian Observer"; in 1816, the "Boston Recorder"; in 1819, the "Watchman"; in 1823, the "New York Observer"; in 1826, the "Christian Advocate." These are the oldest of the religious papers. Some others under more than one name may go back to these early days, but it seems reasonably clear that "The Herald of Gospel Liberty," which is still published, though now at Dayton, Ohio, under the original title, may claim to be the oldest in the country. Believing that the advent of the religious newspaper a hundred years ago is an event of sufficient importance to justify some celebration, the proprietors of this journal arranged a celebration in the city of Portsmouth last week. We are sorry that circumstances prevented our attendance, but we cordially congratulate our contemporary and the religious press in general on this fact. What the religious press has been and is to the country does not always merit the recognition that it deserves. The religious press has been a large factor in all the achievement and advancement of the age. We are ready to admit that it has, at times, been more interested in ecclesiasticism and factional bickerings than in the dissemination of a catholic and biblical Christianity. But for the most part, this has been due to the fact that the churches which it served have been imbued with the same spirit. Never was the right kind of a religious press more needed than to-day. At hardly any period of the century, save during the Civil War, perhaps, has it had more to contend with than at the time of its Centennial celebration. An ally of the Church, it must ever have the Church as its ally.

New Zealand and Labor.

The New Zealand government has presented to the Parliament a drastic labor arbitration bill. Its essential features are: Special penalties are provided for in respect to strikes in the manufacture of gas and electricity; in the supply of water, bread, milk; in transportation and other industries that closely affect the public health or safety. Workers in these industries, who strike without due notice fixed by law, are made liable to $50 fines or imprisonment for a term of three months. Like penalties are imposed on those who aid or abet a strike in these special industries. Another section of the bill provides that any union convicted of inciting or even aiding or abetting a strike by its members shall have its registration suspended and lose the privileges carried by registration. In regard to the enforcement of current awards, a union which commits a breach of an award is subject to a penalty of $500. Individual workers may also be fined for a breach, and the fine may be deducted from the worker's wages. New Zealand is a kind of a testing crucible of political theories. Much has been learned from her experiments and it will be interesting to see how this law, if enacted, will work for the public welfare.

Hughes and the Horsemen.

Governor Hughes has been nominated by the Republicans again as their candidate for the position he now occupies. This was done after every effort had been made by conscienceless politicians to put him on the shelf. The moral strength of the governor is what worried them. His fight on the race track evils was the pivotal point of the contest. An effort is said to have been made to induce President Roosevelt to take part against the governor. But if he did take any part it was for him. One thing is sure. The horsemen followed the very best course to increase the number of Governor Hughes' supporters. He attended the Saratoga fair by invitation, and his presence on the grounds led to a "strike" by horse owners, who would not allow their animals to go on the track until after the governor had gone. Such petty spite defeated itself. The majority of the men of this country, we are sure, have a greater interest in its manhood than its horseflesh, however valuable that may be in its way.

The Infidel and His Statue.

Chester Bedell had not the spirit of Sir Isaac Newton, the first man who enabled all men to think of the universe as a unity. Bedell caused to be erected several years ago a great bronze statue representing himself as having hurled the Bible to the earth and crushed the book with his foot. In one hand is the inscription "Universal mental liberty." This free thinker has just died. He had no vision of God. His quarrel with the Church was through embitterment with relatives who were members of the Church. He had none of the modesty of the great scientist who spoke as follows a short time before his death: "I do not know what I may appear to the world, but to myself I seem to have been only a boy playing on the seashore and diverting myself in now and then finding a smoother pebble or a prettier shell than ordinary, while the great ocean of truth lay all before me." Bedell's body is under his piece of bronze, but every minute since it was put there to the hosts of the believers in Christ of the centuries there have been added new recruits who, unfolding their faith, have round it growing to Christian virtues.

Every Seventh Man.

Denmark is, in many respects, one of the most advanced countries of the world. There is no such country for the newspaper man. There the publisher does not have to be worried about making collections. The government not only delivers the newspaper to the subscriber, but takes the subscriber's money and pays the publisher. Another stride forward has just been made by the government causing a warning to be posted in all railway stations declaring that alcohol is a stupefying poison, and pointing out that every seventh man in Denmark dies of strong drink. The Danish physicians have formed a total abstinence society, and are very active in a campaign against alcohol.

Secretary Wilson, after an extended tour in the West, says: "The re-foresting of the watersheds is now the most important problem." While it will take a long time to grow timber for use, young forests started on the watersheds, he says, will soon furnish protection to the mountain streams. Individual planting will not answer, and he has found that at an elevation of 5,000 feet in the Deadwood forest reserve broadcast seeding on the spring snows is a success.

Editorial

To Pittsburg Via New Orleans.

The best route to the Centennial celebration at Pittsburg in October, 1909, is by the way of New Orleans October, 1908. The greater the New Orleans convention is the greater is likely to be the Pittsburg celebration. The reason for this is very evident. Our Centennial celebration is not the mere getting together in large numbers at Pittsburg, but it is the accomplishment of certain great aims and tasks which we have set for ourselves as a worthy celebration of the historic event. These aims and tasks require for their successful accomplishment this intervening convention where the leaders of our hosts, and as many of the hosts themselves as we can get together, may meet and take counsel together and gather inspiration for these unfinished tasks. Therefore, one of the most important immediate duties we can render to our Centennial is to attend the New Orleans convention, taking with us all our enthusiasm for the Cause we are to celebrate, and with hearts full of gratitude to God who has led us and blessed us.

Incidentally, we observe that we owe it not only to our Centennial aims, but to the people of the South, to make the New Orleans convention worthy, both in attendance and in the character of its proceedings, of the Cause and people it represents. They have been a much misunderstood people, these brethren of the South. They have labored long under misapprehension, and sometimes, we regret to say, under a very mean sort of sectarian opposition. No doubt they are looking forward to the coming of this convention as an illustration of the strength, intelligence and dignity of the great body with which they are connected. We owe it to these loyal-hearted disciples, who, through evil report and through good report, have stood by their colors, to make this convention measure up to their expectations, and to accomplish by means of it some of the things which they had in mind in soliciting it.

It is a prodigy of courage, enterprise and faith that has led our brethren in New Orleans to invite this convention and to be its host. Such faith and courage as have been displayed by Brother Taylor and his colaborers in that city deserve reward.

Then, New Orleans is worth visiting on its own account. It is one of the great historic cities of this country, and offers some quaint and rare attractions to visitors from the North. The trip there and return, with the continuous fellowship which our "Christian-Evangelist" Special will make possible, will, in itself, be a means both of grace and education.

It is not difficult to picture the kind of convention we would all like to see at New Orleans. It should be as largely attended as the conditions would justify, and it should be representative. It should be a convention intent on the King's business. It should be marked, too, by that enthusiasm and unanimity which are characteristic of a people who believe in their Cause, and its ultimate triumph, and who find their source of oneness in Christ. It should be marked by that sense of moral gravity befitting a religious movement approaching its Centennial. As coming events cast their shadows before, it can not but be true that the New Orleans convention will feel something of the magnitude of our coming Centennial and the duties and sacrifices which it imposes. The convention should be characterized by a deep religious spirit, and by the earnestness of its prayers. It is a time to remember that it is not by our might nor power that the great tasks we have outlined are to be accomplished, but by the Spirit of God working in us and through us for his glory and for human good. Such a convention at New Orleans would exert an untold power in behalf of the success of our Centennial and of the Cause which it celebrates.

The Prayer of Silence.

Mr. Froude, in his life of Thomas Carlyle, relates an incident which is worth repeating. It is well known that Mr. Carlyle was not a Christian, at least by profession. Nevertheless, he was a man of deep convictions and manifested much devoutness of spirit. A young Scotchman, who was a great admirer and student of Carlyle and was much influenced by his teaching, became skeptical, especially as to the efficacy of prayer. He finally wrote to Carlyle as follows:

"There are repeated expressions in your works which convince me that in some form or other you believe in prayer, and the fact that the wisest men, Luther, Knox, Cromwell, and that greater Man whose servants they were, were preeminently men of prayer, is at variance with the thought which still forces itself upon me, that to attempt to change the will of Him who is best and wisest (and what is prayer, if it is not that?) is in the last degree absurd. The only right prayer, it seems to me, is 'Thy will be done;' and that is a needless one, for God's will shall assuredly be done at any rate."

Mr. Carlyle did not attempt to solve the difficulty from an intellectual point of view, for he knew full well that no one could do that; but he expressed his own conscious need of divine help, and his faith in prayer as the means by which to secure this help, and then continued: "Words of prayer, in this epoch, I know hardly any, but the act of prayer in great moments, I believe to be still possible; and that one should gratefully accept such moments, and count them blest, when they come, if come they do—which latter is a most rigorous preliminary question with us in all cases. "Can I pray in this moment" (much as I may wish to do so)? "If not, then No! I can at least stand silent, inquiring, and not blasphemously lie in this Presence!"

"On the whole, silence is the one safe form of prayer known to me in this poor sordid era, though there are ejaculatory words, too, which occasionally rise on one, with a felt propriety and veracity, words very welcome in such case! Prayer is the aspiration of our poor, struggling, heavy-laden soul towards its eternal Father; and, with or without words, ought not to become impossible, nor, I persuade myself, need it ever. Loyal sons and subjects can approach the king's throne who have no 'request' to make there, except that they may continue loyal. Can not they?"

In reply to Mr. Carlyle we would say emphatically, yes. Undoubtedly they can approach the throne of grace and they can do so by putting their petition in words. Nevertheless, there is something in silence that lends itself to great spiritual altitude. In one of the Psalms God speaks to us in the following suggestive language: "Be still, and know that I am God." It would seem from this request that silence is an essential condition to that experimental knowledge of God which comes only from close communion with him. We are too much in the busy struggle of commerce; too much under the influence of ostentatious parade, to have close fellowship with the infinite, the spiritual, the supreme value of life. The suggestion, therefore, of silent prayer, is undoubtedly of very considerable importance. Jesus himself was accustomed to go apart from his disciples, and spend much time in prayer where no one could hear but his divine Father. We may certainly put our petitions in words; we ought to do this where the occasion requires it; and even in our closets we may speak audibly to our heavenly Father; but, after all, there is a power in the charmed circle of silence, which in this busy, noisy, turbulent age, may contribute much to our spiritual comfort and advancement. Evidently reverential silence and speechless awe have their place in true devotion, and this is especially so in the present age. If there is anything that marks our Christian civilization emphatically, it is perhaps the want of reverence and the disposition to make our religious exercises too much a matter of parade and a noisy demonstration rather than in "quietness and confidence," wherein lies our real strength.

In the interest we feel in what may be denominated objective Christianity, we are in constant danger of degenerating the spiritual life. While it is perfectly true that we are to be finally judged by what we do rather than by what we think and feel, it is equally true that what we think and feel are important forerunners of what we do. Of course it is possible to perform certain religious deeds without any real preparation of the heart for these deeds, but no one ought to expect the best results in building up the Christian life, without the preparation of the heart for every religious act. Prayer is too frequently estimated by the words that are used rather than by the spirit which inspires these words. We sometimes hear people speak of eloquent prayers, and they mean by this language prayers that are delivered to the throne of grace with the eloquence with which a Fourth of July oration might be delivered. It is not necessary to place a premium on illiteracy in prayer any more than illiteracy in other things, but mere words must always be regarded as a poor substitute for prayer. It is possible to make a speech to God, to be eloquent in phraseology and impressive to an audience, while in reality the man has not prayed at all. Speech may be necessary to the fullest expression of prayer, but speech is not prayer even when addressed to the throne of grace. It is one thing to say prayers, to repeat platitudes to God; it is another thing altogether to pray. The Pharisees made long prayers, but the poor publican smote his breast and actually prayed, although he used very few words. To know how to pray is one of the things that every Christian has to learn, and consequently Jesus taught his disciples a lesson on this important subject. The point, however, which we wish to make is that every Christian should live constantly in the atmosphere of prayer, and this constant living need not be expressed in words. It ought to be the very spiritual breath which every Christian breathes, and should, therefore, illustrate the lines of Montgomery:

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire
Unuttered or expressed;
The motion of a hidden fire
That trembles in the breast."

Notes and Comments

"What contribution have your people, known as the Disciples of Christ, made to the theology of the day?" asks a critical correspondent. To make the answer very brief, it may all be summed up in this: The exaltation of Jesus Christ above all creeds and confessions of faith as the supreme authority in religion, and as the center of the Christian system. His centrality, no less his supremacy, has been a controlling factor in our religious thinking. As we know God only through Christ, so we know religion, in its essential nature and in its ordinances and appointments, only as it is taught by Christ and those whom he commissioned and qualified to teach it to the world. Faith in him, therefore, as the divine Son of God, and not opinions and deductions in theology and ecclesiology, is the faith of the gospel. Whoso has this faith and is obedient thereto, is a Christian, and is not to be disturbed in his fellowship for any opinions and theories which he may hold in loyalty to this faith. This is our chief contribution to twentieth century theology and to the problem of Christian union.

It would be impossible to exaggerate the value of the contribution above mentioned. If within the first century of our existence we can learn to appreciate it ourselves, and to act consistently with it, we shall have laid the foundation for enduring progress in the knowledge of God and of his will, and for that liberty which is essential to the highest development of the individual soul. It is easier, however, to catch the vision of a great truth than it is to be loyal to it in all the experiences of life. Christendom needs nothing so much to-day as a new and fresh sense of obligation to be perfectly loyal to Jesus Christ, both in his teaching and in his spirit, so that we may work with him and under him for the realization of his divine ideals in the world.

One of the ideals of Jesus was a united church. Loyalty to him requires that we, also, pray and labor to bring about this consummation. And yet how we are hampered and hindered in the work by our denominational loyalties, and by our limited range of sympathies and of the knowledge of God's will! How difficult it is to divest ourselves of all preconceived opinions and predilections, and be willing to follow where Christ leads! And yet can we be truly Christian and do anything less than that? Let us say it again: We can never have Christian union as Christ prayed for it until we are all more closely united with him, and more completely sanctified by the truth, to the doing of his will in the world.

The Disciples of Christ have modified the religious thinking of their time by the great emphasis which they have placed on the Word of God as the inspired and all-sufficient rule of faith and practice. Many open-minded men in various denominations have gladly acknowledged the service we have rendered to the common cause of Christianity by our advocacy of the Word, and of the vital relation to the needed religious reformation of our times. The better we become acquainted with its sublime facts and truths, becoming saturated with its spirit, and come under the control of its great principles, the better shall we be fitted to plead for New Testament Christianity and the doing of God's will on earth as it is done in heaven.

The emphasis which we have laid upon the New Testament way of salvation has modified the practice of every Protestant religious body, and has helped to banish a large amount of ignorance and superstition concerning God's method of dealing with the soul. Evangelism has received a mighty impetus from the contribution which the Disciples have made to the New Testament way of salvation. In many respects, therefore, have we contributed to the religious thought and practice of our day. But our work is unfinished. We need to gird ourselves anew and draw closer to him whom we acknowledge alone as Master, and catch more of his spirit that we may complete our unfinished work.

It may be a startling thought to many people that the disciples were not orthodox. But orthodoxy differing according to the viewpoint the early disciples of our Lord, could they criticise modern Christianity, would almost certainly find the most of it failing. Dr. Gladden, in his "The Church and Modern Life," says: "There is good reason to believe that none of the twelve apostles held, during the life of the Lord, opinions which would be regarded as orthodox concerning his person." And further that the apostles "would have found it difficult probably to assent to the Nicene creed or the Athanasian creed." After centuries of controversy growing out of the great doctrinal questions which have disturbed the church, it is difficult for us to realize that many of these things had no part in the thought of the early Christians. While these men may not have been orthodox from the viewpoint of either of the creeds mentioned, they believed, to quote Dr. Gladden again, "in Jesus as Lord and King, and they believed every word of his magna charta found in the Sermon on the Mount; they were ready to do what they could to establish that kingdom in this world." This writer suggests that at this point the faith of the church of to-day is lacking. "It believes the Nicene creed, but it does not believe the Sermon on the Mount. It does not accept the practical rule of life which Jesus laid down." One of our contemporaries says that if this be true, and it seems to be unpleasantly true, it is better to be unorthodox with those disciples of old than to be orthodox with the church of to-day.

One of our exchanges has a wise comment on "The Danger in Politics." In most any part of the brotherhood, it says, there may be found two men who agree on more than forty points. They both believe in God, in Jesus Christ and in the Holy Spirit. They believe that the Bible is an inspired book; they believe in miracles; they have the same view regarding the gospel ordinances. In fact, so far as their religion is concerned they are a unit, and walk together in perfect harmony. But one has made up his mind to vote for Taft, while the other thinks he should vote for Bryan. They happen to get to talking on this point of difference, and finding that they do not see alike, begin to pull apart. For some reason forty points of agreement will not hold them together. The one little political wedge causes division and estrangement. The suggestion is a valuable one, and can be applied to many relationships. Even in religious matters there is a great deal more separation than the facts of the case warrant. The old Adam in man, or the everlasting ego, crowds aside the striving after the unity in the bond of peace towards which all ought to aim.

Current Religious Thought

"Most of our churches have now put upon their calendar 'Rally Day.' The demonstrations made by pastors and Sunday-school superintendents are designed to wake up nominal church members and indifferent pupils to their religious duties. The day serves to differentiate those who have taken 'a nap' from those affected with "the sleeping sickness." Taking rest in sleep is a normal method of recuperation, but the sleeping sickness is as fatal as the bubonic plague. There certainly is grave reason to fear that those who sleep right through the rallying calls and hallelujah music of Rally Day are the victims of a morbific tendency rather than the beneficiaries of a normal rest.' —Interior.

About American preaching to-day, "The World's Work" has this to say:

"During a year when we are expressing ourselves oftenest in political phraseology, it is easy to forget the power that straight, vigorous preaching has. The American public was reared on it from the beginning. For generation after generation the preacher was the great man in our life; and, if the pulpit seems to-day to have fewer commanding men than it once had, it has more men of a fair degree of power, and the masses are as much swayed by the exhorter, perhaps, as the masses ever were. It makes little practical difference whether he preach from a pulpit or from the White House or from the prairies of Nebraska; for preaching is preaching, and the masses, even if they seem careless of the pulpit, are yet mightily swayed by vigorous moral exhortation."

Mr. H. G. Wells, in the New York "Independent," writes of the continuance of his love for and fellowship with his friends who have died. He would always think of them as they were when he knew them, "gone out of the world and become immortal memories in me." But he has a scorn of efforts to make men believe that their friends come back through other men and women, to prattle inane sentences which they would have been ashamed to utter when alive. He says:

"I miss such a one as Bob Stevenson, that luminous, extravagant talker, that eager, fantastic mind. I miss him whenever I write. It is less pleasure now to write a story, since he will never read it, much less give me a word of praise for it. And I miss York Powell's friendly laughter and generous welcome. They make a warmth that has gone, those men. . . . I have a real hatred for those dreary fools and knaves who would have me suppose that Henley, that crippled Titan, may conceivably be tapping at the under side of a mahogany table or scratching stifled incoherence into a locked slate! Henley tapping!—for the professional services of Sludge! If he found himself among the circumstances of a spiritualistic seance he would, I know, instantly smash the table with that big fist of his. And as the splinters flew, surely York Powell, out of the dead past from which he shines on me, would laugh that hearty laugh of his back into the world again."

"A member of the Epworth League who had gone from a very genuinely sociable church to another church in another city, recently wrote home: 'There is a woman who shakes hands with us religiously every Sunday, but it is such hard work for her! She seems to be glad when it is over, and I wish she would not bother.' There is more than a jocose strain to the sentence in regard to this 'painful cordiality,' as some one has called it. Shaking hands mechanically and perfunctorily, simply because one is put on the handshaking committee, and delegated to the 'duty' of 'welcoming strangers,' will leave little impression of a 'glad-to-see-you' kind on the recipient. And usually the put-on-to-order smile can be easily detected from the natural and spontaneous one. Shake hands, by all means, but let the heart somehow show itself a bit!"—Western Christian Advocate.

"It will be too late after death. Flowers mean nothing to a corpse. Tombstone compliments never inspire the dead. 'An ounce of taffy is worth a pound of epitaphy." Post-mortem eulogies quicken no jaded spirits. Decorated dust is grotesque. Four C's we are to avoid—criticize, condemn, crucify, and then canonize. Speak to the ear while it can hear. Make living hearts beat faster with your kind word. Show gratitude while the benefactor lives."—W. C. Bitting.

"When the Pan-American Congress met in London, one question up for the expounders was 'The Relations Between the Church and the Press.' This put a match under 'The Guardian,' the great thunderer of the Anglican Church. The periodical proceeded to unburden its soul of a few grievances. It is all well-flavored reading. It proceeds to complain that no one who really understood the question had been called upon in the debate.

"'Had they been,' says 'The Guardian,' 'they would have dwelt less on that duty of the Press toward the Church of which we hear so much, and a good deal more on the duty of the Church towards the Press, of which we hear so little. We do not hesitate to say that that duty has hitherto either been misunderstood altogether or flagrantly neglected. It must be understood that when we use the word "Church" in this connection, we indicate those persons and organizations that are in the habit of going to the Press, and especially the Church press, for assistance and publicity. The view which these ladies and gentlemen take of the relations between the two is precisely on all fours with Mr. Kipling's overture version of the relations between the British public and the private soldier in time of war and in time of peace.

"'It's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' 'Tommy, fall be'ind';
But it's 'Please to walk in front sir,' when there's trouble in the wind.'"

When Church people or Church organizations want to obtain anything from the Church press (and that is by every post), their communications are "frequent and free"; when the Church press desires any courtesy in return, it is far too often treated with neglect, and occasionally, we are sorry to say, with something worse than neglect.'

"The editor of 'The Guardian' complains with some bitterness that those whose business it is to do so will not help in producing the news. The editor can not get this news except, as it were, at the point of the bayonet. Often it has to go to the daily papers for news which should have been hurried to it, and then take the report on faith.

"'Above all,' says 'The Guardian,' 'it is important for them to understand that a newspaper which exists to record news can not be made a receptacle for all manner of out-of-date matter. "The Guardian" is a weekly newspaper, not a quarterly review or even a monthly magazine, and we steadfastly refuse to print items of intelligence, however interesting in themselves, which do not reach us until they are stale.'"—Central Christian Advocate.

The "Christian Advocate" has taken pains to look up the religious affiliations of the Presidents of the United States. In many cases the church relations were merely nominal. With Episcopalians and other pedo-baptist churches it may mean no more than infant baptism and confirmation at the age of twelve or thirteen. Washington was a member of the Church of England, which after the Revolution became the Episcopal Church. John Adams was a Unitarian. It was before the division of the Congregational Church in New England, but the church with which John Adams was connected was Unitarian in belief; and Adams avowed his Unitarianism vigorously, as did his son, John Quincy Adams. Some Unitarian churches in New England are to-day called Congregational. Thomas Jefferson was a "Free Thinker." Many persons believed him to be an Atheist, but, while he did not accept the Bible as a divine revelation, there is enough of his writings to show that he believed in a God. Madison was an Episcopalian. John Quincy Adams was a Unitarian. Andrew Jackson was a Presbyterian. Van Buren was nominally connected with the Dutch Reformed Church. William Henry Harrison was an Episcopalian. Tyler was also an Episcopalian. James K. Polk was of Presbyterian ancestry, but later became connected with the Methodist Church South. Zachary Taylor was an Episcopalian. James Buchanan was nominally, at least, a Presbyterian. Abraham Lincoln was not a member of any church. Andrew Johnson's wife was a Methodist, but he was not a member of any church, though preferring the Presbyterian. Grant's ancestors were Methodists, and he followed Dr. Newman, in Washington, and was baptized (sprinkled) by him on what was practically his deathbed. Rutherford B. Hayes was not a member of any church. His wife was a Methodist, and he served as trustee, and was one of the supporters of his wife's church. Garfield was a Disciple, and preached occasionally. Chester A. Arthur was an Episcopalian, though the son of a Baptist minister. Cleveland was the son of a Presbyterian minister. After his election to the presidency, we believe, he placed his name on the roll of a Presbyterian church in Washington. Benjamin Harrison was an active member of the Presbyterian church. McKinley was a Methodist. Roosevelt is a member of the Reformed Church.

Editor's Easy Chair.

It is a new experience in the life of an active, busy man to be confined for weeks to the narrow limits of his bedchamber and watch the slow procession of the days and nights, with their familiar phenomena, as they come and go. Even under such limitations "He maketh the outgoings of the morning and of the evening to rejoice." How anxiously the sufferer waits for the morning, after the long night of pain! He notes the earliest streaks of the morning light, and watches with interest until the sunlight is shining upon the trees, and the noise of the great city waking from its slumbers has taken the place of the stillness of the night. To-day the calendar tells us the length of the day and night is equal. To the sick man, however, this is not true. The nights seem interminable as the slow, painful hours drag themselves along, and he longs for the signs of the coming day. "Watchman, what of the night?" is a cry that has come from many an anxious heart, not only from the couch of pain, but from hearts troubled with forebodings about the kingdom of God. Does not this question spring from the heart of many a thoughtful man or woman among us to-day as he studies the meaning of much that is going on, and tries to look into the future? But this is too large a field, and we turn from it now, though our heart is full of things we should like to say, and must say later, God giving us health and strength. Our prayer for those identified with the cause we love best is that God may give them vision to know themselves, their time and their opportunity.

We are entering upon the fourth week of this painful affliction. It has been a sore disappointment, frustrating many of our plans. But, after all, how full it has been of divine goodnesses and human kindnesses! Every day God has shown his mercy, and every hour has been crammed with human kindness and loving ministry. No words can describe the debt a man owes to her who, with sleepless vigilance, ministers to his every need and refuses to grow weary while her loving hand may serve. And friends far and near have shown their kindness in every possible way. So pain has had an antidote, and we count it not an unmixed calamity that has befallen us. But as to the future, our physician refuses to prognosticate. He did confide to us yesterday that we might as well put away all thought of attending the New Orleans convention. He said this as if he were unaware of the fact that he was cutting right across our cherished hopes and plans. But no doubt he is right. The loss to the convention will be inconsiderable, but to us it will be irreparable. We might as well say, therefore, that all October appointments are hereby cancelled. "Shall we receive good from the Lord, and not evil?" asked one of God's suffering servants of old. Our blessings have been so much greater than we have deserved that we have no complaint to lodge against the goodness of God. To His blessed name be praise and dominion forever!

A MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A word of greeting to the Disciples of Christ with reference to our national convention to be held in New Orleans, October 9 to 15 inclusive.

Nearly every Disciple of Christ in America has desired at some time in life to visit the quaint, curious, ancient, modern, beautiful and interesting city of New Orleans, and has been waiting for just such an occasion as one of our international missionary conventions to satisfy that desire.

This is the most delightful season in which to visit the great state of Louisiana, for just as the hosts are gathering from the four quarters of the earth, in great convocation, the cotton fields will be fleecy with the snow-white staple, the pecan trees will be dropping their meaty nuts, the orange blossoms will have matured into golden, juicy fruit, and the cane fields will be giving up their sweetness to be converted into sugar.

At this season the sky is usually bright, the air balmiest, and the plantations most resonant with the songs of the "old darky folk," making their own melodies as they sing.

From the standpoint of economy, no one can find a better time to visit New Orleans. Seldom, if ever, do the railroads give such good rates to that city except during "Mardi Gras," when hundreds of thousands of people flock there and fill the hotels and boarding houses, paying fabulous prices for all accommodations, while at this season we can well be taken care of at a minimum expense. Our local executive committee in New Orleans stand between us and all graft, and have secured contracts with the hotels and restaurants guaranteeing less than the normal winter rates for boarding and lodging. If one desires to economize, he can live on one dollar per day by taking a room in a private house and eating at good restaurants. Or, if he desires to do so, he can have as fine accommodations as can be had anywhere, in either of the magnificent new hotels.

Again, it is well to note that under no other circumstances could our people receive such cordial reception, or make such good impression, for our convention will be the only thing going on at the time to attract the attention of the citizens or call forth their hospitality. Jew and Gentile, Catholics and Protestants, Americans and foreigners, officials and private citizens are co-operating with our local committee in making preparation for the entertainment of our people, and the secular press is giving liberal space to our Cause. We pray that every Disciple of Christ in the United States may be impressed with what a large, enthusiastic meeting of our people will mean as affecting our Cause in Louisiana, and more particularly in the city of New Orleans.

There was never a more opportune time, a more cordial citizenship, a more receptive people, nor a more impressionable heart and life than are offered us in the invitation which we have received to visit that southern metropolis at this time. Possibly never again in a lifetime will we have such a pressing invitation to visit that great city in the interest of such a great cause, with the assurance of accomplishing such great good.

It is also well to keep in mind that with this great opportunity comes also great responsibility, and that no Disciple of Christ was ever under such great obligations to join his presence and best efforts to make one of our missionary conventions an eminent success, especially in view of the Centennial of 1909.

Every member of every state and national board should be present; every annual and life member and director of every missionary society should be present; every business man interested in education, missions and benevolences should be present; every woman who can leave home ought to be present; every university, college and school among us should be well represented, and every church, Bible school and Endeavor society should be represented; and no preacher can afford not to be present. If all the interests of all our churches should be fairly represented, there would be no less than thirty thousand delegates at the New Orleans convention.

Hoping to meet and greet you in the convention at New Orleans, October 9-15, 1908, I am, yours fraternally,

R. A. Long.

SEPTEMBER.

Reigneth now the sad September.
Like a slowly dying ember
Fades the summer. Past its glory,
Yet remains the mournful story
Of the autumn. In the haze
Flames of goldenrod upblaze,
And the daisy, child of summer,
Stays to greet the staid new-comer,
Still to lend its bright good cheer
To the slowly dying year.
In the forest, lately green,
Autumn's handiwork is seen;
For, in orange, red and gold
Rarest beauties now unfold.
And each stream, but lately sparkling
With the summer's sheen, now darkling,
Chants a low, funereal song,
As it slowly moves along.
Choirs of song birds, grown more still,
In the orchard on the hill
Utter now a wild lament
That the summer days are spent.

Faith versus Doubt

By P. M. Watson

Browning's gospel for an age of doubt is proclaimed in "Bishop Blougram's Apology." His message is an inspiration, just such as could come from the fine Christian optimism that ever fills the poet's heart. In this poem an old bishop and a young reporter sit down to "see the truth dawn together." We may sit with them. As disciples of the Master it will quicken our minds; as preachers of the one faith, it will clear our minds.

The bishop does the talking; the reporter listens, assenting by a nod of the head as the argument is carried forward. "We mortals cross the ocean of this world each in his average cabin of a life; the best's not big, the worst yields elbow-room." With this acknowledged fact the bishop is off. Our business then is not to see what we would like to be and have, but to make the best of what is. First, then,

"Best be yourself, imperial, plain and true."

Unbelief.

You say you do not believe? All right; I'll go with you. Unbelievers, we find ourselves shaken in turn by belief, then unbelief. A sunset, some one's death, a great chorus, yet we fall back on the god we call the grand Perhaps. Why not listen to Him who says, "I am the Way, the Truth, the Life"?

Belief.

I find
Belief or unbelief
Bears upon life, determines its whole course,
Begins at the beginning.

* *

I know the special kind of life I like,
What suits the most my idiosyncrasy,
Brings out the best of me and bears me fruit.
In power, peace, pleasantness and length of days,
I find that positive belief does this
For me, and unbelief, no whit of this.

* *

I absolutely and peremptorily
Believe, I say, faith is my waking life,

* *

What's midnight doubt, before the dayspring's faith?

* *

The common sense of the world calls you Bedridden, and its good things come to me.

* *

You spurn belief because you have doubts. Is it not true that difficulties make the man? Doubt may be the very essence of your faith.

Decisive in Our Faith.

If, then, we acknowledge that the first step is to choose belief, we may agree that the second is to be decisive in our faith.

In every man's career are certain points,
Whereon he dares not be indifferent.

* *

We let him choose upon his own account
So long as he's consistent with his choice.

That is, we ask that his soul be in what he is doing. The question arises, What is "the form of faith" your "conscience holds the best"? The demand follows:

Hold to your faith with all your heart.

Even though we may regard the third step as Christian faith, disregarding the suggestion of following the one great faith in which the bishop was born, we are agreed that—

My business is not to remake myself
But make the absolute best of what God has made.

It is true, as the poet suggests, we have our pattern men—a Napoleon, a Shakespeare, a Luther, a Strauss, a some one else. We are told, "The aim, if reached or not, makes great the life." But, willingly or unwillingly, I can not be these men; I must fall back on my poor self. Another, too, I must win in life—succeed, reach the goal, overcome, get the crown.

Enthusiastic in Our Faith.

My poor self—imperial, plain, true—to get home and be worthy of a crown must be roused by enthusiasm. To have enthusiasm, will I believe or disbelieve? "Ice makes no conflagration." We may count on that. "Belief is fire" you must acknowledge. If your life would be worth while, and Nicholas Murray Butler in his recent book, "True and False Democracy," writes: "The most precious thing in the world is the individual human mind and soul, with its capacity for growth and service"—if your life is worth while it has enthusiasm, and to have enthusiasm you must believe, you must have faith, and "whole faith or none."

What of Doubt?

But you dispute the point. You say you doubt this and that. All right. "The more of doubt the stronger faith I say."

What matter tho' I doubt at every pore,
Head doubts, heart doubts, doubts at my fingers' ends,
Doubts in the trivial work of every day,
Doubts at the very bases of my soul.

What of all these—

What think ye of Christ, friend? When all's done and said, like you this Christianity or not? A fight is on in one's self.

God stoops o'er his head,
Satan looks up between his feet—both tug
He's left, himself, i' the middle: the soul wakes
And grows.

Doubt Great—Faith Greater.

What think you of Christ, friend? Will you believe or disbelieve? Will you have faith or doubt? The answer comes slowly, but note its comprehensiveness:

The sum of all is: yes, my doubt is great.
My faith; still greater, then my faith's enough.

What are the Religious Needs of the South?

By Roger L. Clark.

1. The obliteration of sectional lines in religion.

These have been Chinese walls. They have had a profound influence upon the bodies in which the cleavage took place. Even in our own brotherhood the tendency has been to look into Dixie land with a strange eye, and from within to look outward with a limited vision. We are the freest of all brotherhoods from sectional feeling. But these sectional lines affect us seriously. While the old, Southern Baptist "Landmarkism" survives it is useless to attempt union with that body. When the Baptists divided it was over the question of slavery; the consequence has been in the South an intellectual slavery to the dogma and peculiarities which characterized the whole body fifty years ago: such is Landmarkism. Our Baptist brethren across the Ohio appear to be as anxious for union as we; but the Southern attitude is too positive and too strong to be overcome. Any action on the part of Northern churches toward actual union with us would be divisive to themselves—a result as undesirable to us as to them. If the line could be obliterated and a free interchange of Baptist preachers be generally established, it would not be long before there would be a free interchange and communion between Baptists and Disciples.

The same obligation is true of Methodism. The purest type is in the South. Here is almost the only fertile ground for the old camp meeting and its concomitant views of conversion. All the virtues of the Wesleyan movement thrive within the narrow limits of the past. There is apparently not much sympathy between the Methodist Episcopal church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Some changes have been made in the Methodist Episcopal Church, while the Church South has been stationary. The reunion of the two bodies would give rise to an impetus towards Christian union.

The union of the Northern Presbyterian church with the Cumberland Presbyterian has been sadly marred by the alienation of many Cumberland churches. At the heart of the difficulty is most probably the old sectional bitterness and estrangement. Meanwhile the Southern Presbyterian body continues staidly on her way, with an unchanged creed and Calvinistic standards unmodified, garbed in the Presbyterianism of two centuries ago. This denomination is in a position to assume an active part in the propaganda for Christian union, having a strong organization, a ripe scholarship and a compatible temperament. What would be the force of the awakening of the spirit of union through Presbyterian unity!

Sufficient has been cited to show that the South has been long set in a religious immobility, miscalled conservatism. Denominationalism is strongly intrenched. A Baptist is apt to be a Baptist because his father, grandfather and great-grandfather were Baptists before him. In a town in South Carolina a gentleman, who was firmly convinced "that the Baptist church was right," could not leave the Presbyterian church of which he was a member because the graves of his parents, good, true Presbyterians, were in sight of the family pew. In the Wilson-Miller meeting at Savannah there were more than a few who were convinced and who freely admitted the force of our plea and the correctness of our position—without any evident desire to change their church relationships. It is true that there are signs of a breaking away from the old lines; and, also, that there are numerous individual exceptions to this attitude we have defined—but where the exception occurs it is usually the result of immigration.

2. A change in Christian people towards the negro.

The negro problem is no longer sectional. But as this is delicate ground it is well to state that the writer is Southern, and in his view anything like social equality—which would end in miscegenation—is sinful. He does not propose any step which would violate the integrity of the white race; he deplores the fact that the integrity of the negro race has been violated. The only solution to the difficulties of the negro question is the gospel of Jesus Christ. If the commission requires that we preach the gospel to every creature, discipling all nations, the mission of the preacher who holds that commission is as much to the negro as to his own race. Disagreeable as this fact is, it must be faced. If social laws and expediency prevent a personal work, this does not relieve him of the obligation; but the more insistently demands that the work be undertaken in the most effective manner. The Episcopalians have not deemed it necessary to institute race branches of their church, and in this they are examples to other denominations. From our standpoint we are forced to admit that our restoration of apostolic Christianity has been largely the restoration of white Christianity. We may thank God for the wonderful success of the mission at Bolenge—(Bolenge is conveniently remote)—but what about the negro in the midst of us? Practically all that has been done by the Disciples has been through the initiative of Southern brethren. Our first foreign missionary was a negro, sent out by a slaveholding church. More would be undertaken by our Southern churches were not most of them engaged in a struggle for their own existence; nevertheless it is true that the common attitude is that of unconcern.

Before he civil war the negro was well cared for religiously. He held membership in his master's church, had a section of the church building set aside for him, and was the object of the spiritual concern of his masters—when they were Christians. Since the war he has been almost left to himself, religiously; and wherever he has been entirely left to himself he has relapsed towards barbarism. The attitude of Christians individually has been to ignore him. Some sporadic efforts have been made to help him, most often coming from across Mason and Dixon's line, and often misdirected and hurtful. The crying need of the Christian South is to realize that the negro is in the truest sense a brother for whom Christ died and to be watchful and helpful where he is morally and spiritually weak.

One illustration will exemplify the need: There is in a certain state a Christian home of wealth, culture and genuine piety. The father is a member of one of our congregations, the mother a leader in auxiliary work, and the children faithful members of the church. There can be no reflection cast upon the integrity of the family or the high spiritual plane of the home life. Not a hundred feet back of the "big house" the negro cook lived in adultery with a negro employed on the place. There is not a doubt that the father, mother and children knew that the cook and man-servant were living together and that they were not married. Had the cook and servant been white the situation would not have been tolerated for an instant. But because they were negroes no cognizance was taken, no moral standard required of them. There, side by side, were lived two orders of life as widely removed as an enlightened civilization is from savagery, without reciprocal influence and with no spiritual inter-dependence. If this case appears to be extreme an appeal may be made to all who are conversant with the facts. The type of Christian manhood and womanhood in the South is high; but so far as the negro is concerned there is an appalling indifference to him.

There are other religious needs which are not cited here for the sake of emphasis upon the two mentioned. There is a vital connection between them. If the negro is to be helped and saved as a race it can be only through the breaking up of sectional lines, mainly as defined in the Southern mind. This is a herculean task for all Christians: it is the same problem of redemption manifested in this racial phase.

May God answer the South in her need, the North in her need, and make us one in patriotism, fraternity and religious faith.

Savannah, Ga.

By A. Rector.

I have not been in the South long enough to be able to answer satisfactorily your question. If I may be permitted to answer just for my own county, I will say, more (consecrated) preachers. There are three churches in the county within a radius of seventeen miles of Aberdeen, that have no preaching of any kind except as I am able to preach for them now and then. The pastors of the county and state have just closed a campaign and revival meetings in this county (Monroe). There is no one to shepherd these people who have been brought into the fold.

In Ministers.—Men who believe that Jesus Christ will conquer the world; men combining Christian culture with the spirit of the Master; recognizing the good in other people, seeking to lead them by life and precept to follow the great teacher more closely; presenting all the interests of the brotherhood; emphasizing the several missionary offerings, and studying religious literature.

In Christians.—Those who have a world-wide vision of the ministry of the Christ; studying his word daily for growth in grace that they may teach others the way of life; interested in all departments of church work; contributing systematically and proportionately to every missionary offering; subscribing to, and paying for in advance, our religious publications. In a word, loyalty to Christ.

DeLand, Fla.

By P. H. Duncan.

In answer to this question I would briefly but frankly say:

1. We greatly need in the South better houses of worship, and a more extensive reading of our church literature. Some localities, of course, constitute eminent exceptions. Better houses would give us a needed prestige, with corresponding inspiration and opportunity. A wider dissemination of church literature would supply a needed educational element, and it would bring us into a more sympathetic touch with the progress and real activities of our great brotherhood. We need the inspiration and good cheer that would come to us from a better knowledge of the great progress our brethren are making elsewhere; and we need the stimulus of participation in our great church activities.

2. We have many excellent representative local preachers in the South; but we need more representatively evangelistic work. Our cause suffers, because we are greatly misunderstood by many people. To some extent we are making, in the South, a contention for our great plea, similar to that made by our brethren in the Middle West, more than twenty five years ago.

3. We need a better organization of our forces. We have in the South heroic spirits, the truest and the best; but we also have among us the weak adherent, indifferent and drifting. He is by no means a lively building stone, but rather the proverbial "rolling stone." He is not absolutely bad, he is worse than bad—he is indifferent. He is either drifting away altogether, or drifting into the ranks of our more highly favored religious neighbors. He is influenced more by prestige and policy than by principle or piety. We need to organize, utilize and conserve this floating element.

4. We very greatly need some adjustment, some modification of a widely prevailing sentiment of non-progression, which is persistently fettering the hands of many excellent young people of the South. We need some plan provided, or some accentuation of plans already provided, by which these really pious and splendid young people may feel free to contribute to the spread of the gospel, and to enter heartily into the practical activities of church work, so congenial to the enthusiasm and the true spirituality of youthful Christians. It is really pathetic to contemplate the inertia brought about by this widespread theory of, what I denominate, "negative Christianity," which is neutralizing and paralyzing some of the very best material we have in the South. The loss to the church in the South is great because of this religious status, but greater still to the individual lives involved.

5. Perhaps one of our very greatest needs in the South is to enlist and utilize the immigrant members coming to us from other parts of the country. The prosperity of the rapidly growing South is producing a constant influx of population, a considerable per cent of whom are members of the Christian Church. However active in their home churches, many of these brethren are lost to the church when they come south. They throw off all responsibility—rather they fail to assume it—and become recreant to the most sacred of all trusts—Christian duty. They are elusive and we seek them in vain. They complacently stand aloof, and persistently refuse to affiliate with us. Sadly we give them up realizing, as W. E. Garrison recently said, "It is easier to catch a tame goat than a wild sheep." What a golden opportunity of promoting the great cause in the South, these recalcitrant and derelect brethren are losing, and what a blessing to themselves and homes they are missing! Responsibility still confronts us wherever we go, and we must answer at the judgment.

AFRAID TO EAT

Girl Starving on Ill-Selected Food.

"Several years ago I was actually starving," writes a Me. girl, "yet dared not eat for fear of the consequences.

"I had suffered from indigestion from overwork, irregular meals and improper food, until at last my stomach became so weak I could eat scarcely any food without great distress.

"Many kinds of food were tried, all with the same discouraging effects. I steadily lost health and strength until I was but a wreck of my former self.

"Having heard of Grape-Nuts and its great merits, I purchased a package, but with little hope that it would help me—I was so discouraged.

"I found it not only appetizing, but that I could eat it as I liked and that it satisfied the craving for food without causing distress, and if I may use the expression, 'it filled the bill.'

"For months Grape-Nuts was my principal article of diet. I felt from the very first that I had found the right way to health and happiness, and my anticipations were fully realized.

"With its continued use I regained my usual health and strength. To-day I am well and can eat anything I like, yet Grape-Nuts food forms a part of my bill of fare." "There's a Reason."

The Disciples of Christ in Louisiana

Perhaps the first preacher of the Restoration movement who visited Louisiana was Jacob Creath, he having made a trip through the eastern part of the state as early as 1835, when he preached the principles for which we as a people stand among the Baptist churches. Alexander Campbell himself visited New Orleans in 1839, and ascended the river as high as St. Francisville, preaching everywhere to large crowds. Other of the pioneers such as James Challen, John O. Gano, John T. Johnson, and William Baxter, all made short evangelistic trips through the eastern part of the state. But it was at Cheneyville that our Cause first got a foothold. Here was organized a church in 1843, and it was established through the influence of the "Millennial Harbinger." A score or more of the members of the Beulah Baptist Church, of Cheneyville, withdrew, and convinced of the wrongness of the separation of Christian people through adherence to human creeds, organized a congregation that should be simply Christian. During the first few years of its existence it had no regular or settled preacher, and was ministered to by two of its members—W. P. Ford and Josiah Scott. Its first two deacons were Jabez Tanner and Andrew Jackson. The latter also served in the capacity of preacher, while the former was one of the most liberal contributors. The members first met in a frame building erected by themselves, but this, in a few years, gave place to a brick structure, which was completed in 1852 and is still standing. Their first protracted meeting was held by Jacob Creath. Their first salaried preacher was the late W. H. Steward, who commenced his labors in 1849, serving them for eight years. Among the noted visitors, the church mentions with pride Alexander Campbell, Robert Graham and T. W. Caskey. Among the old landmarks there is no one who stands more prominent than that of C. G. McCormick, who deserves, in church history, to be ranked as one who was the salt of the earth. By the time the Civil War closed only a few of the charter members were left. From this time on until the coming of D. W. Pritchett, in 1878, the responsibility of keeping the church together devolved mainly on Brother McCormick. A. E. Meyers, Alexander Ellett, Lawrence W. Scott, R. B. Hewett, C. L. Chambers, J. B. Cole, W. S. Houchins, J. E. Spiegel and R. L. Porter all served the congregation for brief periods, while Frank Lanehart frequently occupied the pulpit. The present beautiful church building and parsonage was erected in 1903. J. M. Mason became the minister in the fall of 1907, and has proved both efficient and consecrated.

This was the first church planted in the state, but it only preceded the church in New Orleans by two years. In another place will be found some history of our work in the convention city, where we have two churches—one co-operating with our missionary societies, and one of the extremely conservative type.

The Baton Rouge Church, as we have it to-day, was organized by J. L. Haddock in June, 1903, but it has a much earlier history. It was in the winter of 1851 that John T. Johnson and John A. Dearborn came to Baton Rouge and held a meeting, which resulted in several additions. Brother Dearborn organized, and in the following spring renewed the meeting with greater success. The congregation was so strengthened that they felt encouraged to build, and in February, 1853, dedicated a substantial brick edifice. The following year their preacher resigned, and William Baxter was called, serving efficiently until 1856. Dr. W. H. Slossen followed, and established, in connection with his ministerial work, an academy, continuing in the double work until the outbreak of hostilities in 1861. Then demoralization set in. The congregation was scattered and a debt that hung over the building was foreclosed, and the property passed into other hands. For forty-three years the plea for New Testament Christianity was not heard in the capital of Louisiana. Then J. L. Haddock began his meeting in May, 1903, with a view of organizing a church, and after seventy days a congregation of over sixty members was organized, and the state convention met with the new church. Through the Church Extension Board a desirable location was purchased, and upon this a handsome building erected. In July, 1904, W. O. Stephens became the minister of the congregation, continuing until February, 1905. In May E. L. Crystal took charge of the work, remaining with the church until October, 1906. On account of threatened suit by some of the creditors, and the imminent danger of losing the property, John A. Stephens and wife were sent by the American and State missionary societies as emergency workers January 1, 1907. In six months they reduced the debt $2,600, and the situation being relieved they were placed in other fields. The following September Roy Linton Porter began his work as minister of the congregation. During the past year there has been $650 paid on the principal and interest. The debt that remains is $3,700. Brother Porter has just received a unanimous call to remain with the church indefinitely.

Just prior to, and following the Civil War, W. H. Stewart and others evangelized the Black River country, organizing a number of churches. Somewhat earlier than this the Friendship Church, of West Feliciana parish, was established. The Big Cane Church was established in 1880, but, with the exception of two or three years' work by Brothers Pritchett, Houchins and Shields, little evangelistic or pastoral work was done for twenty-five or thirty years, and several of the churches disbanded. In 1895 there came a revival of interest. Northern immigration brought a number of Disciples to southern Louisiana, and as a result the church at Lake Charles was organized. It has enjoyed seasons of prosperity as well as seasons of adversity, being blessed in the leadership of some of the ablest and most godly men, while suffering also at the hands of others who could not be so described. Organized in February, 1895, with twenty members, it now has a membership, resident and non-resident, of 165, an increase of 20 being registered since the coming of the present minister, Otis Hawkins, five months ago. There is a good building, a parsonage, and no indebtedness. It has an excellent Bible school; every teacher of it is a member of the training class, and this numbers about 40. It prospers and is preparing with great hopes for an ingathering during the evangelistic meeting to be held the latter part of October by Hamlin and Daugherty.

Ten years ago Claude L. Jones, its present minister, organized the Central Christian Church at Shreveport. He has served the congregation during this period. There is now a membership of about 400. The congregation is moving along evangelistic and missionary lines. It worships in a tabernacle building, but is contemplating the erection of a permanent structure at no distant date. W. E. Harlow is now engaged in a great meeting there. Delegates from this congregation will go in a special car to the national convention at New Orleans. Brother Jones is an Arkansas boy, and was educated at Addran (Texas) Christian University. He preached for two Texas churches, was pastor of the church at Lake Charles, and also, for a year, state evangelist for Louisiana.

The Christian church at Jennings was organized in October, 1901, by Evangelist J. L. Haddock. Since then it has had about 300 members, and the present enrollment is about 150. Its ministers have been as follows: Charles N. Williams, George Van Pelt, W. H. Trainum, H. M. Polsgrove and S. F. Fowler. Evangelistic meetings have been held by James L. Haddock, B. B. Sanders, John A. Stevens, E. Lynwood Crystal and S. F. Fowler. A meeting was to begin on September 16 under the leadership of L. E. Sellers, of Indianapolis.

In the spring of 1904 Evangelists J. L. Haddock and Stanley went to Alexandria and pitched their tent on the city square and preached for six weeks. There were seven members of the church there. At the

"THE PALE GIRL"

Did Not Know Coffee Was The Cause.

In cold weather some people think a cup of hot coffee good to help keep warm. So it is—for a short time but the drug—caffeine—acts on the heart to weaken the circulation and the reaction is to cause more chilliness.

There is a hot, wholesome drink which a Dak. girl found after a time, makes the blood warm and the heart strong.

She says:

"Having lived for five years in N. Dak., I have used considerable coffee owing to the cold climate. As a result I had a dull headache regularly, suffered from indigestion, and had no 'life' in me.

"I was known as 'the pale girl' and people thought I was just weakly. After a time I had heart trouble and became very nervous, never knew what it was to be real well. Took medicine, but it never seemed to do any good.

"Since being married my husband and I both have thought coffee was harming us, and we would quit, only to begin again, although we felt it was the same as poison to us.

"Then we got some Postum. Well, the effect was really wonderful. My complexion is clear now, headache gone, and I have a great deal of energy I had never known while drinking coffee.

"I haven't been troubled with indigestion since using Postum, am not nervous, and need no medicine. We have a little girl and boy who both love Postum and thrive on it and Grape-Nuts."

close of the meeting there was a church organized with 70 members. A lot was purchased and a building started. As soon as this could be used the congregation moved in and has had regular services ever since. Not a Lord's day has passed without the commemoration of the Lord's death and resurrection. J. E. Donovan was the first pastor, serving the church for one year. The church then called L. A. Betcher, who has entered upon his fourth year there. The house is finished and is one of the best in the city. A loan of $2,700 from the church extension board helped to get the best lot in the city for a church. This church is heartily in sympathy with all the activities of the brotherhood. The congregation keenly feels the loss sustained in the death of the pastor's wife. She was a great worker. The Bible school was her specialty, but as a leader in every undertaking among the women her place is vacant.

Brother Haddock, also, organized churches at Crowley, Alexandria, Monroe and Rustin. Other churches of recent growth are those at Jennings, Leesville, Jewella and Morrow. We believe the number of the Disciples of Christ in the state is under 2,000, so that the Cause is numerically weak.

The state work is chartered under the name of the Louisiana Christian Missionary Society. A small state paper is used as a medium of communication. This is edited by Brother Betcher, pastor of the church at Alexandria.

Christian Church in New Orleans.

The church was organized in 1845 with twenty members, in the home of Dr. A. A. Jones, the grandfather of Claude C. Jones, late of Washington, D. C.

In 1856 there were sixty members, who bought property at the corner of Melpomene and Coliseum streets, that year for $10,500. During the civil war the members scattered and the property was ost. The city high school held its sessions there for a while and the property was later bought by the Swedenborgians. n 1867 the members reorganized, holding services in private homes and public alls until 1877, when, by a gift of one f the members, Sister Maria V. Roberts, oyfully the congregation was enabled o recover the old property. In 1877 Knowles Shaw held a great meeting here. The last service held in the old uilding before it was demolished was in une, 1893. While the present frame uilding was being erected the congregaion met in the schoolhouse of that noble roman, Miss Sophie B. Wright, known as the "Home Institute." Our building was sold in 1905 to the Christian Scientists, who still occupy it.

The membership of the First Church moved to the corner of Seventh and Camp streets, where they erected a substantial and imposing building and are conducting in connection with their regular church work, a free school. The policy of the First Church is to decline co-operative in any of our missionary enterprises and to oppose the use of instrumental music in the church; however, a number of the members advocate more liberal views on those lines.

The Birth of the Soniat Avenue Christian Church.

About the year 1903, the First Christian Church in New Orleans being without a minister, having only a small membership, a very small Bible school, averaging an attendance of about thirty each Sunday, and the American Christian Missionary Society having withdrawn its support of the work in New Orleans, the outlook for us seemed very dark and doubtful.

Just about this time the Louisiana state convention was held at Crowley and the writer, who was then chairman of the official board of the church, attended as a delegate and met Benjamin L. Smith, of the American Christian Missionary Society. After much persuasion Brother Smith agreed to visit New Orleans and look the situation over. This he did, meeting the congregation; at this meeting, upon Brother Smith's recommendation, it was agreed by a unanimous vote to move from our location, as we were on a very noisy corner, in a neighborhood which had been closely canvassed more than once in the interest of the Bible school, but in vain.

Brother Smith agreed to take the matter up with the church extension board, which resulted in our receiving a visit from George W. Muckley, who was shown over the city. He selected the lot on Peters avenue on which we erected the tabernacle and started an evening Bible school under the direction of R. M. Denholme, which soon had a membership of 100. In the meantime the American Christian Missionary Society had recommended O. P. Spiegel to us, and he had taken charge of the work. The congregation began to grow fast and at the end of eighteen months we had a membership of about 150, and were making plans for a large church building on our new lot.

At this time the six-weeks' meeting of Evangelist John A. Stevens was held in a large tent on the Peters avenue lot; during the meeting a strong sentiment against either selling or moving from the old location had developed; this was principally among the new members. A few of us, however, decided to keep the faith with Brother Smith and the church extension board, and under Brother Stevens' guidance, articles of separation were drawn up and approved at a congregational meeting. The new work then started with five men, nine women and their children, forming the Second Christian Church, which was afterwards changed to the Soniat Avenue Christian Church, and a charter gotten out.

We had just assumed a debt of $3,000, had practically no money on hand and only five male members, but by hard and persistent work on the part of the few we succeeded in buying, altering, and on Nov. 20, 1904, dedicating the church building on the corner of Soniat and Camp street, B. L. Smith preaching. The thanks of the congregation are due to the few persistent men and women who did the actual work, and who seemed to have never heard of such a word as fail.

On January 1, 1905, Marcellus R. Ely, of Joplin, Mo., was called and the congregation rapidly grew larger. Brother Ely left us in June, 1906, and was succeeded by W. M. Taylor, our present minister, under whom the work has steadily gone on. We now have a strong and growing congregation of about 150 members, and we will soon have the distinguished honor of being the entertainers of the annual gathering of the international convention of our brotherhood in New Orleans. All this has been accomplished from the foundation laid by the "twenty-three members" less than four years ago.

I think the success that has attended our efforts has been because we believe in and practice organized work, the only safe and sane way to handle our own affairs as well as God's work, and the help we have had and are still having from the American Christian Missionary Society, and the church extension board, for we never could, without their help, have gotten the splendid results now apparent to all.

EVANGELISTIC SESSION.

Thursday Night.

7:45—Song and Prayer.
Sermon, Herbert Yeuell, Evangelist.
Final Adjournment of Conventions.

CONVENTION POINTERS

It is time to get ready.

Have some plans before you start.

"The Christian-Evangelist" Special leaves St. Louis over the Illinois Central, Wednesday, October 7, at 1:50 p. m. Fare round trip, $18.25. If you wish reservations, let us know. For fuller particulars, see page 1234.

Do not say a "party of five." Specify, "Myself and wife and three lady friends; two rooms will do for the party." The local committee can more easily place you when you tell who is in the party, and how much you are willing to pay.

Hotel prices vary from $1.00 (European plan), two in each room, to $3.00 for a single person in a room, with bath.

There are plenty of good homes open at cheaper rates. Address Chairman of Entertainment Committee, care W. M. Taylor, 1628 State St., New Orleans.

The convention will be held in the Atheneum Hall, on St. Charles Ave.

The reception committee will meet all trains. Headquarters will be at the banquet hall of the Atheneum.

The C. W. B. M. sesions will be held in the First Methodist Church, across the avenue from the Atheneum Hall.

Register at once, get your program, and get located.

The convention program is a good one. There is to be a great chorus directed by Hackleman. Leaders of the Sunday-school work have planned big things for their session, while Hill will hold a thrilling Christian Endeavor rally.

The brethren in New Orleans have undertaken a heroic task. They have done so willingly, and the brotherhood must respond with the same largeness of heart. In no city where our convention has been entertained has the Christian Church been so weak numerically and financially. In all the state we number probably less than 2,000, and the Soniat Avenue Christian Church has a local membership of only several hundred. They have invited us to their city in the faith that we will go in large numbers to impress this southern metropolis and the territory all around with the fact that the Disciples of Christ are in truth a great people.

Walter Menzies.

—Jasper Moses has returned from the hospital, and is so much improved that he will be able to attend the New Orleans convention and give a message.

The annual board meeting of the C. W. B. M. is on Friday morning, October 9, and will continue for two sessions. Mrs. Atwater will preside. Here will be considered the report of the executive committee and the committee on watchword and aims.

Miss Bertha Westrup.

On Friday night a song service will open the first session of the convention. Mrs. John J. Zigler will give the welcome address, and prominent speakers will be W. G. Menzies, of India, C. H. Winders, of Indianapolis, W. R. Warren and Mrs. N. E. Atkinson. The Netz Sisters and Miss Una Dell Berry will sing. On Saturday will come the missionaries' period, which is usually the choicest part in point of real heart power. Mrs. Menzies and Miss Zonetta Vance will tell of India; J. H. Fuller and Mrs. Bertha Mason Fuller and Miss Bertha Westrup will represent Mexico. Miss Maria Reynolds Ford and Miss Nora Siler will speak for Porto Rico. William Pearn and wife, who have served the work in Jamaica, will bring the message from this mission field. There will be messages, also, from the home field, which will thrill the convention as it hears of the planting of churches and schools in the waste places of America. Mrs. Atkinson will give the closing address, and conduct the memorial hour.

Miss Zonetta Vance.

One of the most interesting features of the entire convention will be the model mission study class, conducted by Prof. C. T. Paul, meeting each morning from 8:30 to 9:30.

The auxiliaries conference will be in charge of the president of the largest auxiliary in the world. Miss Mattie Pounds will have charge of the Junior conference hour.

The state officers' conference will be in the form of a banquet council, presided over by Mrs. Maud D. Ferris, Detroit, Mich.

Among the speakers for the Foreign Christian Missionary Society are C. M. Chilton, Finis Idleman and H. K. Pendleton, all strong, growing young men, whose work speaks for itself. Secretary Stephen Corey will speak of a phase of the work that should be of great interest just now, while Secretary Rains will conduct a symposium on the Sunday-school.

Much of the time of the Foreign Society will be occupied by the missionaries. We publish pictures of those that are expected to be present.

The subject of Christian union will be prominent, and two well-known Baptist brethren have addresses. J. H. Garrison is on the program to respond on this occasion.

The Home Society program shows the names of some brethren who have frequently appeared on convention platforms, while younger men like Peters, Burnham and Stauffer have a great opportunity before them. R. H. Crossfield, the new president of old Transylvania University, will give us a great address on "The Relation of the Sunday-school to the Evangelization of America."

Mrs. Menzies.

A business man is president of the American Christian Missionary Society this year. R. A. Long, of Kansas City, is not only a generous giver of his money, but is an earnest worker in church and Sunday-school. On another page we print a helpful, suggestive message from the president.

The report of the National Benevolent Association will, we think, stir the blood a bit. It will show an increase over last year. A new building, costing $75,000 has been erected, and more people have been helped than in any other year. Brother Mohorter has done faithful service, and the convention should recognize this by a large attendance at this session.

All the affiliated interests will have brilliant speakers to represent them. Jenkins for Church Extension and Scoville for the National Benevolent Association will be heard with special interest. The latter was on the program at Norfolk, but failed to appear. Yeuell is another representative of the evangelists who is to make the chief address at the special evangelistic session.

The brethren of the South will surely wish to hear Charles Reign Scoville, of whom they have read so much. The National Benevolent Association will have a fine musical program. W. J. Morley, of St. Louis, is chairman of the nominating committee. L. W. McCreary, of St. Louis, will make a short speech on the Centennial session program. Mrs. Ayres will preside, and L. W. Grant present the treasurer's report.

The Newer Side of New Orleans

New Orleans is located in a crescent formed by a broad sweep of the Mississippi river; hence it is called the Crescent City. At this point the river is about 200 feet deep and affords accommodations for the greatest ships of commerce from all parts of the world, and often a great man-of-war finds anchorage at this port.

While New Orleans was founded in 1718 its growth has been gradual and conservative until within the past decade; it has recently gone forward most aggressively, but on safe calculations as to future stability, until the population has reached 375,000, covering an area second to New York, leading the world's markets in four staple articles, banking a billion dollars annually, educating the young in 103 public schools and kindergartens and six universities, beside many private schools. It is provided with handsome hotels, theaters, clubs and churches. Here will be found "skyscrapers" as are found in other large cities, buildings which show progress and enterprise that have placed New Orleans in the front rank as the leading city of the South. Here are palatial and beautiful homes surrounded by veritable flower gardens, with a tropical background of palms and banana trees every month in the year, while the air is laden with odor of magnolias and cape jasmine at the proper season.

The Panama Canal being 600 miles nearer New Orleans than to any other large seaport of the United States, and this being the gateway to the Mississippi valley traversed by 20,000 miles of navigable rivers, and the terminus of 50,000 miles of railroads, and of ocean steamship lines from all over the world, make New Orleans a city with an exceptionally bright prospect; and as evidence of the faith of railroad men in the future of New Orleans it is enough to state that they are spending $15,000,000 in terminal improvements, while the faith of the steamship people is evidenced by their organizing new oceanic lines and putting into operation many new and handsome vessels. At the same time the faith of our own municipality in her future is witnessed by the expenditure of $5,000,000 sewerage and drainage systems.

The breaking up of the old conservatisms in social, commercial and religious life makes New Orleans the city of opportunities.

Never in the history of our nation has any city been in a better position to hear and receive our gospel plea; being torn away from old moorings by the spirit of progress, New Orleans religiously is as a vine, whose tendrils having been broken away from their support, are feeling out for something which they may grasp. This is just the opening of the era of readjustment, and is our one opportunity to take the city for Christ.

Our convention has, without doubt, the greatest opportunity ever experienced to make an impress on a great city which will wield a world influence for all time to come.

How to See New Orleans

New Orleans is really two cities in one; the one lying above Canal street is called the "American Quarter," or "Uptown Section," and the one lying below Canal street is called the "French Quarter," or "Downtown Section."

The "American Quarter" is best seen by a ride around the "St. Charles belt" and the "Tulane belt."

The "French Quarter" is the most interesting and picturesque, and is best seen walking, for every square has its quota of realistic or legendary lore.

In order to see the French quarter at its best and to breathe in these latter days all the quaint poetry and foreign atmosphere of early days in New Orleans, the tourist must make up his mind to rise early and loiter lazily through the curious old thoroughfares, for he will want to stop at every parrot call, at every "clang of wooden shoon," at every note of a gay barcarolle floating down from the dormer windows set in the queer tile roofs; he will want to peep into the quaint old Spanish courtyard, fresh and fair and cool, with sunny marble-flagged pavements and palms and olives and magnolias within; to stop a moment to listen to the soft musical French of the pedestrians, to catch a glimpse of the fair Creole girls as they stand in the fragrant old-fashioned gardens, wafting a kiss on a rose to "Mama" sitting at the jasmine-twined window above, or see them as they pass demurely out of the grim buildings, prayer-book or rosary in hand, on the way to early mass in the old Cathedral.

It is in the morning that the dreamy beauty of this old city dawns upon you, and you see in the dull gray belfries and tall steeples and gilded crosses of her sanctuaries, the roses climbing over the beautiful wrought iron work of the old verandas, and the lovely women you meet, with their sweet foreign ways, the things that have given thought and inspiration to the poets and romancers of old New Orleans, and yet appeal to the imagination with extraordinary charm.

You will be struck with the picturesqueness, the character and thought in all the names of the streets and parks.

All through the old "French Quarter" the streets suggest the city's royal descent and ancient faith and customs. In the "Uptown Section" we have the Nine Muses all in a row, leading gracefully into Felicity street. A little further on generals of the Mexican war are drawn up in soldierly array, then Napoleon is commemorated, not only by the avenue which bears his name but by half a dozen streets christened after his most famous battles, then Calhoun, Henry Clay and Webster are side by side, the Cato and Brutus are in close proximity to Socrates, then Arts clasp hands with Agriculture and Industry and terminate in abundance and independence, then Music and Piety are hard by "Good Children street": in fact nothing is lacking in poetry and romance in giving names to the streets of this unique city as living reminders of a historic past.

A people held by the fascination of the poetry, romance and history of the past centuries should be fascinated by the ancient gospel in its primitive purity and simplicity of our life to indelibly fix the message in their minds and hearts. For this reason, if no other, you should attend the international Christian missionary convention in New Orleans, October 9-15.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTES.

Remember that the books of the Board of Church Extension close on Wednesday, September 30, and that all offerings should be sent promptly on Monday, September 28, so as to reach Kansas City by September 30. Remit to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 500 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., by personal check, draft, express or money order.

There are now before the Board of Church Extension worthy applications for loans aggregating $97,000. Offerings should continue and be taken in October until every co-operating church is heard from. Do not refuse to send an offering because it may be small. Let us join heartily in a work so necessary to the mission churches we have created.

Many new applications will be coming in after the offering, for aid to build. Note this fact: Only the worthy church is aided. The really needy church is the one that, having done everything to help itself, is yet unable to build its workshop and home. Let all the brethren note that these churches are self-reliant after all because they ask for loans—loans that will be returned to the board to go out again.

Since September 1 three new annuities have been received by the Board of Church Extension; $300 from a brother in Indiana; $250 from a sister in California, and $500 from a sister in Colorado. Plan to give some annuity money this fall, because annuity money builds churches just the same as 4 per cent money. As to the plan, inquire of G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 500 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Our Budget

—New Orleans!

—That is the next place in the church calendar.

—"The Christian-Evangelist" Special starts Wednesday, October 7.

—New Orleans, as a city, has a fascination for the tourist.

—But New Orleans, as a great center for the radiation of the apostolic plea, is what merits our attention.

—The Christian Church of the Crescent City needs our help, sympathy and co-operation.

—We give, this week, extended space to our work in the South, and we will follow this with another Southern number next week.

—Brother Garrison has made very little headway during the past week. He has intermittent spells of freedom from great pain, but has lost much sleep, while the abscess does not seem to dissipate to any appreciable extent. He was able on Monday morning to write with his own hand a couple of paragraphs for the space usually occupied by his "Easy Chair." Friends will read this with the understanding that now, as on many other occasions when writing for that page, his condition is by no means that of the one who occupies an easy chair. It is impossible, of course, for him to respond to the many personal letters, with their loving messages, nor can we quote from more than two or three. Some of the older men must have precedence. M. M. Davis, of Dallas, Texas, writes: "I regret very much to hear of your continued and severe suffering, and I am praying the Father for you every day. Having just passed through the school of suffering, I can sympathize with you as otherwise I could not." J. S. Bell, one of the editors of "The Christian Leader," who himself has to sit in a chair all day, a partial paralytic, and for more than thirty years a reader of "The Christian-Evangelist," and a free critic of its Editor, expressing the hope for his early recovery to strength, realizes the brotherhood there is in hearts despite some differences there may be of opinions. J. W. Ellis sends love and sympathy for his "old-time friend and cherished brother." Joseph Lowe, in praying for a speedy restoration, writes: "While thousands will feel a like sympathy for you, none will more deeply and truly enter into sympathy with you and your family than the humble writer, who has carefully and thoughtfully followed you since you preached your first sermon and wrote your first editorial. If I am permitted to say anything about one who has devoted his life to the interests of the Church of Christ, and who sustains so important a relation to current religious thought as yourself, I would say, 'Cheer up, the golden days of your autumn are just dawning. Be not overanxious concerning the future of the cause to which the best energies of your life have been given, for an overruling Providence will conduct the great work to a grand, united and happy consummation.'" Here is a characteristic expression from one of the younger men, Bruce Brown, of Valparaiso, Ind.: "I ever think of you with the same abiding affection that I cherished for my own father."

—The Bible-school at Beloit, Kan., where W. H. Scrivner is the minister, is now in a rally striving to build up the school to an enrollment of 300 by September 27. On the last date reported the number present was 219.

—E. B. Bagby, we understand, has accepted a call to Fort Smith, Ark.

—The corner stone of the new church at Redfield, Ia., has just been laid.

—L. L. Carpenter will dedicate the new house of worship at Yeoman, Ind., October 4.

—J. T. Boone is now back at Jacksonville, Fla., after a month's visit with his mother.

—The Southeast Iowa District convention meets at Brighton September 29-30-October 1.

—Herbert N. Garn, of Chicago, has accepted a call to the work at Augusta, Ill., beginning October 1.

—Claude E. Hill has been for a few days' rest at Clarksville, Mo., and has had all his folks with him.

—Members of the official board have just presented a piano to the Sunday-school of the Salt Lake City Christian Church.

—A. O. Hargis was remembered in an appreciative way by a large number of his congregation at Harvey, Ill., on his birthday.

—J. A. Holton, recently of Long View, Texas, has accepted a call to the church at Glouster, Ohio, and entered upon the work Sept. 20.

—University Heights Christian Church, of San Diego, Cal., has called to its pulpit W. L. Martin, so that further correspondence is unnecessary.

—The Coombs-Lucey-Beyer team is now in a meeting at David City, Neb. They are using many original and effective advertising methods in their work.

—We are glad to know that Mrs. W. B. Clemmer, wife of our pastor at Rock Island, is now recovering after a long, hard siege of typhoid fever.

—By invitation of the general secretary, J. W. Holsapple, of the Central Christian Church, Hillsboro, Texas, will address the Y. M. C. A., Waco, on Sept. 27.

—C. F. Ladd, Rock Falls, Ill., wishes to get in touch with men and women, everywhere, who use tracts. He asks that they send him a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

—Owing to the sickness of his wife, Robert O. Nash will not work, for a time, with Brother Wrentmore in his evangelistic work, after the meeting they are now in at Mystic, Iowa.

—The second year's work of I. H. Teel with the church at Visalia, Cal., is drawing to a close, and he will be open for engagements for future work as pastor or evangelist.

—C. A. Freer, our Ohio correspondent, lectured at Hebron, in that state, on September 5, and preached at Violet Chapel, near Columbus. Brother Freer is well known and beloved in this region.

—A note from Charles S. Settlemeyer, of Shanghai, China, reports all well there, except Brother Meigs, who had been in bed for nearly three weeks with stomach trouble; but there is hope of a speedy recovery.

—J. M. Plummer was recently called to Sioux City, Ia., by the death of his father. He is to hold a meeting for the church at Havanna, Kan., the first of October, with Sellers Spainhower, of Denver, Mo., conducting the music.

—A. W. Kokendoffer, of Sedalia, delivered an address before the convention of the Fifth District Christian Endeavor, at the Christian church, Columbia, Mo., his theme being "God's Call to Us Through Adam." The talk was much enjoyed.

—The work grows at Houston, Mo., where H. G. Dillinger is ministering. The Bible school has kept up an excellent attendance during the summer, and a junior C. E., only organized two months, has 52 members. A contest for the doubling of the membership has been planned.

—Evangelist W. O. Stephens, assisted by Edward McKinney, singer, will hold a meeting for A. F. Sanderson and the Central Church at Houston, Texas, following the national convention. They will also hold a meeting for the Central Church in Galveston in November.

—T. Elmore Lucey recently gave his "Evening of Sacred Song and Story" at the union services in Fayetteville, Ark., and nearly a thousand people heard him. Brother Lucey will attend the New Orleans convention, going on "The Christian-Evangelist" Special.

—W. A. Harp has been called to the pastorate of the Lenox Avenue Union Church, New York. W. F. Bower, pastor of the North Tonawanda Church, who is taking a four months' course at Columbia University, will worship with this congregation on Lord's day mornings.

—Evangelist J. Bennett is to begin a meeting for J. D. Williams and the church at Chambersburg, Ill., September 27. There has been a good increase both in the Bible school and the regular services. Brother Williams has been there five months. A new piano has just been purchased.

—We regret to learn that E. C. Nicholson, pastor of the Church of Christ, Redwood Falls, Minn., has lost his voice, and the doctors say he must rest for at least a year. This will be not only a great deprivation to an earnest minister, but will be a distinct loss to our work in that northern state.

—Earle Wilfley has entered upon his work with the First Christian Church, St. Louis, and the beginning gives promise of a successful ministry there. Everybody seems delighted with him. His family is expected to reach St. Louis this week. Brother Wilfley will hold a meeting in October.

—The church at Bolenge, Africa, gives $609.55 for missions this year. This remarkable record ought to bring shamefacedness to us all. No Living-Link church here can boast of its accomplishments in comparison with our church on the Congo. The wages of those people average less than ten cents per day. Out of their poverty they have contributed this sum. Comparing their income with ours, the $609.55 means far more than $6,000 for any church of similar size here.

—A newspaper clipping sent by P. E. Hawkins, minister of our church at Hartford, Kan., gives an account of a lecture recently delivered there by G. F. Bradford, of Van Alstyne, Tex., on the subject, "The Real Man." The writer says that Mr. Bradford is a man who commands attention anywhere, being almost a giant in stature, and inspiring both respect and confidence in those who hear him. For more than an hour he held the undivided attention of a large audience.

Good Homes and Business

Any one who desires to procure a good home on a farm or in a nice little R. R. town, well located in a good section of country, will do well to write me, as I have in charge some excellent claims, both patented and unpatented, and the sale of lots in a beautifully and well located town site on the main line of Rock Island R. R., about 17 miles N. E. of Tucumcari, N. M. We now have two stores, P. O., telephone line and office, one blacksmith shop, one corn and feed mill, one doctor's office, one school and church house, section house, one lumber yard and a good settlement around in a good country. Any one wishing information further, write me for particulars. Address me at Hudson, N. M. L. B. Grogan.

—"Allow me to say that I am much pleased with the attitude you are taking in criticizing some present tendencies in evangelism. It will do good to discuss the subject, for a little light does no subject harm. Only the professional is alarmed, and the critic can do him some real good. We need more Todds."—Lloyd Goodnight, Colfax, Ind.

—The convention of the Christian Churches of the Seventh District of Missouri, embracing twenty-three counties in the northwestern part of the state, will be held at Cameron, Sept. 30, Oct. 1, 2. The C. W. B. M. will hold its session in the afternoon of Thursday, Oct. 1. All churches and auxiliaries are requested to send delegates.

—The Foreign Society receives a legacy of $200 from Shanghai, China. This is from the estate of a native Chinese Christian. About a year ago Brother Ware, of Shanghai, baptized Miss Niao Tsugu, of the "Door of Hope" in connection with his mission there. She has recently died, and requested in her will that this sum go to the cause she loved.

—Those interested in Bible school literature and other supplies can secure the new descriptive catalog for the year 1909, just issued by the Christian Publishing Company. This gives in a concise, yet detailed form the information they may need. "Anything and everything for the school," is the motto under which we as publishers are working.

—Charles E. Smith, minister of our church at Marion, Ohio, writes that the greatest anti-liquor fight ever known there is in progress, with practically every preacher participating, and every township with an effective organization. Judge Blair, of Portsmouth, Ohio, has made four addresses, Wooley of Chicago, four, and Clinton Howard and George Stewart and probably Oliver W. Stewart will, also, speak.

—Dr. Z. H. Loftis sailed from San Francisco on September 15, for China. From Nankin he will go a little later to Batang, on the borders of Thibet. It will take him nearly four months to get there. Batang is the most remote mission station in all the world. It is high up in the mountain passes. He goes to the "roof of the world." He joins Dr. and Mrs. Shelton and J. C. Ogden and wife there.

—Allen T. Shaw writes that H. H. Peters, of Eureka, delivered a splendid message to the church at Pontiac, Ill., on "The Relation of Education to the Success of our Plea." One of the Pontiac young men enters Eureka this term. We hear, by-the-way, that the prospects of the college were never better. The trouble through which it recently went seems to have clarified the atmosphere, and won for the institution many friends.

—We hear that the Pike county annual convention, held at Myers, Ky., Sept. 11-13, was the best in the history of the county. Five Bible schools were organized, two buildings erected and one congregation organized during the past year. Committees were appointed to promote Bible school work, and to set the churches in order. R. B. Neal and Edna L. Prutzman urged more systematic and more united effort in the county. In fact, the untiring efforts of Miss Prutzman as secretary are, in a large measure, responsible for the splendid annual meeting.

—Parker Stockdale has resumed his work with the Jackson Boulevard Church in Chicago, after a vacation. During the last year there were 160 additions. The congregation has grown until it is one of the largest we have ever had in Chicago. Brother Stockdale spent August in chautauqua work, lecturing in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. He will deliver the Christian Endeavor address at New Orleans, and give you as warm a hand-clasp as any of our southern brethren.

—Our church at Winnepeg, Manitoba, was apportioned $50 for its Church Extension. The offering amounted to $78.50, with more to follow. Ernest C. Mobley, the minister, writes: "We are growing into the great spirit of this great West, and rising into service commensurate with our plea in this wonderful city. Our Teacher Training class within two weeks has gained 30 in attendance. We want fifty regular members by the last of the month. Gordon Shaw, one of our young men, enters the Bible College at Lexington, to prepare for the ministry. Others will go later."

—The seventy-fifth anniversary of the organization of the Christian Church at Paris, Mo., will be celebrated on Wednesday, Sept. 30. There will be meetings in the afternoon and evening, with addresses by prominent preachers, and a six o'clock dinner in the churchyard. Frank Waller Allen is the minister, and is accomplishing a good work for this historic church. The most noteworthy feature will be an address by T. P. Haley at the evening service. He was formerly pastor at Paris. Other pastors are expected, among them T. W. Pinkerton and W. N. Briney. "Come to the feast," is the invitation.

—C. C. Wilson and wife, of Shelby, Ohio, will sail on November 3 on the S. S. China for Honolulu, where they will become missionaries of the Foreign Society. Brother Wilson has done a splendid work at Shelby, and is one of our strongest young men. He and his wife, both, are graduates of Hiram College. They are glad to leave the homeland and the rare promises of usefulness there, for the work in the Hawaiian Islands. They expect to make this their life work. The Lathrop Cooley mission in Honolulu is a strategic one, as that city is, in many respects, the gateway to the orient. These new missionaries will not only do a work among the native people, but also among the Chinese and Japanese.

—W. B. Taylor, who recently resigned at Moberly, Mo., is to be associated with F. W. Norton as a representative of the Wharton Memorial Home, in which the children of our foreign missionaries are to be cared for while receiving an education in this country. No one representative of such a work can reach even the strongest churches of our brotherhood. Brother Norton has therefore associated with him Brother Taylor, who will represent the work west of the Mississippi, devoting most of his time to Missouri, Iowa, Texas and Kansas. Brother Taylor was a classmate and personal friend of G. L. Wharton in college, and is a man "The Christian-Evangelist" can cordially commend.

—J. M. Philputt resumed his pulpit at the Union Avenue Christian Church, St. Louis, last Lord's day, after a restful summer on the Maine coast. Brother Philputt and this congregation are about to lose the services of Irving S. Chenoweth, the assistant pastor. Brother Chenoweth has been invaluable. Coming straight from Eureka College, he entered upon the difficult field of a large city work, and with a church that was in the process of building. He has had an earnest desire to go to the foreign field, but his immediate purpose will be to thoroughly equip himself, as far as he can, by some further scholastic training, so he is moving to New York to spend some time in Columbia University and Union Theological Seminary.

—Next Lord's day evening is brotherhood night at the Union Avenue Christian Church, St. Louis, and the speaker will be Judge Lee Estelle, of Omaha, Neb., and his theme, "The Boy Problem." Judge Estelle is a noted speaker and has made special study of this subject. Mr. Metcalf, the editor of Mr. Bryan's paper, "The Commoner," says of him: "Thousands who have heard Judge Estelle are a unit in indorsing him and his work as a judge and a lecturer. His years of experience in the work, his warm and tender sympathies, and his magnetic personality, combine to make him markedly successful in this great work." It is expected that many of the St. Louis judges and bar will be present when he gives his message at Union Avenue.

Topeka—1910.

The Convention Committee for 1910 is receiving inquiries about entertaining the International Convention of the Disciples of Christ the year following the Centennial. Recently from both Nebraska and Oklahoma messages have come acknowledging the priority of our claim and expressing the hope that they might be given the opportunity of entertaining the convention in case Topeka waived her claims.

To all such brethren we desire to reply, through the medium of our papers, that the question may be settled once and for all. After having received $300.00 from the Commercial Club of this city to be used in our campaign at Norfolk, we feel that we are morally bound by every consideration of fair dealing and Christian obligation to protect the interests and conserve the rights of the citizens of this city, who so generously gave of their means and interests in the last contest.

Certainly no other state will seriously entertain a proposition to contest Topeka's claim for 1910, if they but consider the promises made to Topeka at Norfolk, the money that the Commercial Club has already expended and the timeliness of this early notice to the brotherhood at large. We want you all here in 1910.

F. E. Mallory, Secretary.

Books Close!

The fact that our convention falls about a week earlier this year than usual, makes it imperative that we close our books on the evening of September 30. The time after that is all too scant for the preparation of our reports. Offerings which do not reach us by that time can not be credited in the present missionary year. Please hurry your offerings into our hands by that time.

Notice to Oklahomans.

Will every Oklahoman who expects to attend the great convention at New Orleans please plan to go with the Oklahoma Christian Special. If one hundred promise to go we shall get a special train; if not, we shall go in a special coach on the regular train, which leaves Oklahoma City, over the M. K. & T. R. R. at 7:40 a. m., Wednesday, October 7. We shall go via Shawnee, Atoka, Denison, Dallas and Houston. Let every one plan to go that way. Let us make a big showing. We are going down to "land" the convention for the near future. This will be a great trip. For any thing that your agent can not tell you, write to Frank L. Van Voorhis, at Edmond, Okla.

Railroad Rates to New Orleans.

Southern Passenger Association, east of Mississippi river and south of the Ohio and Potomac rivers, for round trip, one fare, plus 25 cents.

Southwestern Excursion Bureau, west of Mississippi river, north of the Rio Grande river, to southern line of Missouri and Kansas, for round trip, one fare, plus 50 cents, excepting in the "two-cent territory," through which 2 cents per mile is charged to the point at which above named rate obtains.

Central Passenger Association, including Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Western Pensylvania, 2 cents per mile to southern gateways, Cincinnati, Louisville, Cairo, etc., beyond which Southeastern Passenger Association rates obtain.

Trans-Continental Passenger Association, one first-class, thirty-day fare for the round trip; dates of sale October 3 and 4; going transit limit ten days; final return limit October 31.

Fares will apply over same diverse routes as direct route nine months tourist tickets apply. Stopovers. No stopovers allowed on going trip in California; otherwise they are allowed on outbound trip within transit limit, and on return trip within final return limit.

Date of sale of tickets, except trans continental, October 6, 7, 8, 9. Stopovers. In general these are permitted, both coming and going. We can not give them in detail on all the lines. To illustrate: The Louisville and Nashville road will allow stopovers on all tickets sold north and east of Flomaton and Pensacola, both going and coming, at Bowling Green, Nortonville and at all points south thereof. By depositing your ticket in New Orleans and paying 50 cents, you can obtain an extension beyond October 24, the date limit for return on most lines.

In view of complications which have arisen because of railroad rate legislation in many states, these are generous rates; indeed, aside from the G. A. R. we have gotten the best average rates given this year. These good rates ought to insure your attendance at the conventions.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST SPECIAL

TO THE

New Orleans Convention, October 9-15, 1908

Over the Illinois Central Railroad

"The Christian-Evangelist" will run a special train from St. Louis to New Orleans, leaving St. Louis at 1:50 p. m., on Wednesday, October 7, over the Illinois Central Railroad, and arriving at New Orleans at 10:55 a. m., the next day. The railroad fare from St. Louis to New Orleans and return will be $18.25, and the tickets will be good until October 24; but, upon payment of 50 cents additional, an extension of time will be granted, making the tickets good for return up to November 8, 1908. The sleeping car accommodations on the train will cost $4.50 for a double berth in a standard sleeper to New Orleans, and the same price for return. Berths in a tourist sleeper will be half this price. Where two go together, of course, they can divide this expense.

As the time draws near the matter of reservations is an important one, and all of the friends of "The Christian-Evangelist" who desire to travel with this company, on "The Christian-Evangelist Special," will please send in their names and addresses, together with a remittance of $5.00 on account, and we will make reservations, but these reservations should be made as early as possible, so as to avoid any confusion or mistakes, and also to let us know how many we must provide for.

We would also like to know how many will want us to secure hotel accommodations for them, at the St. Charles Hotel. The charges at this hotel (European plan) will be, for rooms without bath, two or more persons in each room, $1.00 for each person; for rooms with bath, two or more persons in each room, $2.00 for each person. Perhaps some cheaper accommodations can be had, where four or more persons desire to occupy large alcove rooms, but in the matter of hotel accommodations, we request our friends to let us know at once, just what kind of accommodations they want, so that we may reserve them, and these reservations for hotel accommodations should be made without much delay, so that we may secure good accommodations. The convention headquarters will be at the St. Charles Hotel, and we have therefore selected this hotel as the one for our delegates to go to, except some who may desire to go to boarding houses, and if some of our party want to go to these, they will please let us know, so the committee will have time to make reservations for them, in accordance with their wishes.

Our friends will please bear in mind that this train leaves St. Louis Union Station at 1:50 p. m. Wednesday, October 7, and those who desire to take the train from St. Louis will please so state. Our friends from Illinois and the Eastern States, who desire to join our party at St. Louis, Carbondale or Cairo, will please also notify us, so that we can reserve accommodations on the train for them, and when we have ascertained exactly how many people will accompany us on this trip we will then be in position to make definite arrangements with the railroad company, as to the number of cars, etc.

Our special train will go straight through to New Orleans, without stopover; but, in returning, it is quite likely that we will stop at the Vicksburg National Military Park, and some of our party may decide to leave our Special Train at Natchez, and travel from Natchez to Vicksburg on the Mississippi river by boat. This will entail an additional cost of $3.50, for each person, including meals and berth on the boat. The boat will leave Natchez at 12 o'clock, noon, and arrive in Vicksburg the following morning, but these details can be arranged on our way down to New Orleans, the trip there being, as above stated, direct, without any stopover.

Let us impress upon our friends the importance of writing to us at once about this trip, and let us also urge as many as possible to attend. We have some special circulars issued by the Illinois Central Railroad Company, which we will send to those interested, together with other information concerning this delightful trip.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Bethany Beach, Del.

I have not sent you any notes from North Carolina for some time, having been out of the "Tar Heel" state on vacation since July 29. The first few days were spent with the Perry Hawkins Church, on the eastern shore of Maryland. Here, on August 1, I united in marriage Miss Mamie B. West, daughter of P. D. West, a pioneer preacher in that section, and Mr. John T. Myers, of Baltimore, a member at the Christian Temple. I also for a few days assisted Nelson H. Trimble and wife, who have charge of the "Christian Center" work in Baltimore, in a meeting at Perry Hawkins, where J. R. Biggs is minister. He has been with this church for a few years, and they in conjunction with Olivet and Bethlehem have built a neat comfortable parsonage. There were over 20 added in the meeting.

On August 4 I went to Bethany Beach. Here I was disappointed to find F. D. Power had returned the day before to Washington on account of the serious illness of Mrs. Power. At this time she is better, but ill yet. We missed his fellowship and the walks on the beach for which Brother Power is noted. He was first to suggest the place and has been one of the leaders in promoting the resort for Disciples and their friends.

On the first Lord's day in August Brother Power preached and Sister Harrison, our excellent C. W. B. M. worker from Kentucky, made an address. The second Lord's day was rainy but W. S. Hoye, of Beaver Creek, Md., preached two good sermons, and the services were very helpful. On Tuesday night he gave an interesting lecture on, "The Oldest Institution — Marriage." George B. Townsend, of Hagerstown, was speaker for the next Sunday, and as this place is his "native shore," a number of the neighbors came down to hear George. His sermons were helpful, as also his lecture Tuesday night on, "Gaining the Heights." L. G. Batman, of the First Church, Philadelphia, gave a strong discourse on the fourth Sunday morning, exalting Christianity above all other religions and at night spoke on "The Burning Bush." A northeaster persistently blew for two or three days and the accompanying rain hindered us from hearing his lecture on "Our Inheritance." I conducted two Thursday night concerts by talent on the beach, and a service to children. Among some other features was an evening's talk on "Esperanto," by Mr. W. J. Cheney, of Washington, D. C.

G. W. Remagan has had charge of the church at Ocean View, a mile and a half from the beach, since February. There have been some 20 additions in that time. He is also secretary of the assembly committee and had charge of the program when his duties at the church would permit. He is a valuable workman.

The new life saving station is now manned, and one of the attractions at 8 a. m. is the drills. An imaginary shipwrecked man is rescued in the "Breeches Buoy." Another morning is the boat drill, and again an imaginary drowning man is resuscitated. We are thankful that no one had to be really resuscitated. This speaks well for the safety of our beach. The fare at the hotel was good. The Sussex has wide porches and comfortable rooms, and the Atlantic has been much enlarged and named Belleview. J. M. Addy has built a fine cottage. The Lee cottage also has an addition. The attendance at the beach was not large, but if plans set on foot are consummated a much larger attendance and a fuller program are expected next year.

August 21 found me in Baltimore and the next day I beheld the glory of the mountains at Blue Ridge summit and Pen Mar Park. Running on the trolley to Waynesboro, Pa., I spent a few hours shaking hands with the brethren of my former charge. Saturday brought me to visit the glories of our capital, and on the Lord's day I discoursed to the saints at Ninth street, Washington, Brother Miller being on his vacation. J. A. Scott kindly entertained me in his home. It was a pleasure to speak to such an attentive congregation. J. A. Hopkins.

Montana.

Owing to the condition of the railroad our annual convention at Billings had not a large attendance. Some account of it has appeared in "The Christian-Evangelist." We have a great city and there are splendid possibilities, but the state is just beginning to be open to the public. Formerly people passed through to the coast; now they are stopping off and making their homes here. This means the beginning of larger things for our people, and it means we must get to work if we want to follow up the opportunities. As yet we are a feeble folk. We have good churches at Billings, Bozeman, Butte, Hamilton, Missoula, Kalispell and Helena. Outside of these, our churches are very weak, but we are hoping for better days, and the convention not only talked of our future possibilities, but made some wise plans. In the first place we have some splendid preachers here. Brother Jordan has returned to the state, and has taken up the work at Billings. He is so favorably known that he needs no introduction. But we are glad to welcome him back, and wish him a long and happy journey through the wedded life upon which he has just entered. Brother Lee came from Iowa to Bozeman a little over a year ago. He and his consecrated wife are doing a great work there. They have the largest church membership, as well as the largest Bible school in the state. Sister Lee teaches the largest Bible school class in the state, among any people. Brother Tilburn, of Butte, has been studying music. His is by far the most difficult work in the state. It is like doing missionary work in Hades. Hamilton is situated in the beautiful Bitter Root Valley, far famed for its fruit. Here Paul Castle is building up a strong church. Brother Bagby ministers in the cultured little city of Missoula, which is at the center of things in Western Montana, and destined to be a place of large things. He and Brother Castle were unable to be present at the convention. We are hearing things from the church at Kalispell. They have had the largest ingathering of any church in the city. Brother Griffis, the pastor, was able to attend the convention, though I did not have the pleasure of meeting him. At Helena we have had a good year, for which we are grateful. We have multiplied our Bible school by three; organized a young ladies' class with an enrollment of 55 and a young men's class with 42. We are completing Sunday-school rooms, and our assembly room will be 38x38, giving us ten class rooms besides the church auditorium. We have the largest, as well as the most enthusiastic school in town. We are feeling the great tidal wave from the East. We are putting electric lights throughout the building. When all is done we will have a church home costing $20,000. All current expenses are being promptly met. Missionary offerings are larger than in years. The services are well attended, and a general spirit of hopefulness and good will prevails.

THE VERY NEWEST IDEA IN LIFE INSURANCE.

Life Insurance Pays the Rent and the Grocer's Bills.—Here is Something Really "Different"!

Just think of a Life Insurance Policy which enables you to leave to your wife a Monthly Income—a guaranteed sum which nothing can disturb, not affected by hard times, bad judgment in investments—which can not be lost, depreciated or stolen, but which will come to her regularly every month for 20 years or for her lifetime, if you want it so. Enabling her to adjust and meet the family expenditures, relieving her from all worry and putting poverty out of reach.

This is exactly what is accomplished by the New Monthly Income Policy just issued by The Prudential Insurance Company, the very latest development of modern life insurance.

The demand for a policy of this kind must needs be great for it relieves the wife and mother of the responsibilities of securing a safe and profitable investment for the Life Insurance money and assures her an income which comes to her in the way she is most capable of dealing with it and making the most of it.

Give the American mother a fixed monthly income and she will keep the family together and the children in school when a man might utterly fail. Give her a monthly income and she will keep inside of it.

With the New Monthly Income Policy of The Prudential the husband and father can provide Insurance Protection in the most practical and useful form, a Policy to pay the rent and the household bills.

This covers the time occupied in the development and training of the youngest child. It provides for food, clothing and education by a fixed, regular monthly payment which can not fail.

The comparatively small cost at which this almost priceless provision for the wife and family can be made is another attractive feature of this newest idea of Life Insurance.

Fifty cents a day saved, commencing at age 30, would give your wife an income of $50 a month for 20 years in Life Insurance, and The Prudential is entitled to great credit for presenting it to the public.

Dorris at Wickliffe, Ky.

Victor Dorris, of North Yakima, Wash., closed one of the most successful revivals at the Christian Church here ever held in this part of Kentucky. It lasted for three weeks, and people came from afar in buggies and wagons over dusty roads to hear this justly famous evangelist. The intense interest in the meeting was not manifested so much by the number of additions, as by the eloquence, learning, logic and power of the man, although there were 32 additions —17 immersed, and 15 by letter and from other bodies. The result of the meeting will be far reaching. This community, while a moral, law-abiding and God fearing one, is not emotional, nor susceptible to the popular enthusiasm incident to most revivals, but this preacher presented his own construction of the Gospel so forcibly, that he stirred the hearts and consciences of all classes and creeds. Aside from peculiar fitness for his calling, by his social gifts he attached all people to him personally and when he left for his western home, he took with him the respect and admiration of all classes, and the love and prayers of his own people. Already arrangements are in progress to have him hold another revival here early in the spring. C. J.

Notes from the Arkansas Traveler.

Our last notes were written while we were enjoying the cool breeze of the Ozarks. While writing now we are "down where the cotton blossoms blow." There is a wonderful change of temperature from the mountain crest to the low lands in this state. It means a drop of about 1,500 feet. A trip at this time of year through the great cotton belt and the broad rice fields is, indeed, an interesting one. The cotton and rice fields will this year bring forth a rich harvest, and our missionary offerings ought to be proportionately great. We are confidently expecting our brethren down here to give to missions this year as the Lord has prospered them. In this connection let us not forget that this is the month for our church extension offering. Our cause in Arkansas owes much to this splendid ministry. Doubtless every strong church in the state has been helped by this board. Our churches in this state have given, in all, to church extension, $3,399.49. Church extension has helped 32 congregations to build comfortable houses in which to worship, by granting an aggregate loan of $21,500. Of this amount $6,400 has been paid back by 19 churches. Brethren, let us roll up for this worthy cause such an offering as has never been made before.

The church at Newport has called Charles C. Ware and he is already on the ground pushing things to a glorious consummation. This is a splendid new church, built at a cost of $8,000. We are expecting a great work to be done by Brother Ware and his excellent wife.——Clarendon, a good town, has a commodious building. The minister, Brother Orahood, has, we understand, resigned. Applicants for that place should address Mr. A. S. Baine.——Forest City is the county seat of St. Francis county, on the Rock Island and Iron Mountain railroads. We have there a good church building and some excellent people. A young man with no family could soon build up a strong church there. It is a splendid opportunity for the right party. They can pay a salary of at least $500 to start with. Those who are interested should write to Mr. Charles Delano, Forest City. ——Our field this fall will present a scene of vigorous activity. Let every one put on the whole armor of God and begin the campaign in earnest. Remember our watchword: "Four thousand dollars this year for state missions."

Centennial City Notes.

Nearly all of the preachers are in place and at work. Brother Moss, of Blue Field, W. Va., is at Homestead. Brother Crerie has gone from Fourth Church to Observatory Hill. Brother Weisheit has been called to Calvary.———The Centennial Committee is working hard on the plans for the greatest convention. The most important decision yet made is to have the convention in the Exposition Building instead of in the east end of the city, as planned. The reasons are: (1) A central location where four sessions, seating 15,000, can be held under one roof, and where every convenience is at hand; (2) convenient to railways and street cars. The exposition is within easy walking distance from the terminus of all our car lines; (3) proximity to hotels and restaurants. There are no facilities in the east end for caring for a crowd while the hotels and restaurants down town can care for all who come; (4) convenience of our people who care for the throngs. Every home will be filled with guests, and a matter of an extra hour in going to and from the convention will prevent many from enjoying the sessions. The change of place will necessitate the holding of the convention in the latter part of July. This must be taken up and decided at New Orleans. There is not a dissenting voice here as to the change. All are enthusiastic for it. (The matter was fully discussed at the ministers' meeting, September 14.)

McKeesport, Pa. Howard Cramblet.

Ohio.

It is with deepest sorrow that we learn of the death of A. E. Meek, pastor at Blachleyville and Jeromeville, in Wayne county. Brother Meek was a young man, and has done good service in Central Ohio for the past ten years. He died of typhoid fever. The funeral was held at Danville, conducted by President Bates and L. G. Walker. He leaves a wife and three children, to whom the sympathy of the Ohio disciples go out.———President Zollars has been a visitor in Ohio this summer, preaching at Warren on a recent Sunday, when he took the confession of his granddaughter, Claudia Page. The Warren church gave Brother Lynn a most hearty welcome on his return from his six months of absence.—— Hiram opens September 22. The outlook for a large attendance grows each week.

A Contest at Marion, Ind.

We noticed that our Bible school at the Tabernacle began to fall off in attendance last May, and decided that we would not have a dull school during the summer, so we challenged Wabash for a three months' contest. Both schools entered upon the contest with spirit. During the three months we had an attendance of 3,553, and collections amounting to $192.04, giving us an average attendance of 273 and an average collection of $14.79. Wabash had an attendance of 3,436, with a collection of $173.93 for the same period. Our largest attendance was on the last Sunday, when 587 were present. On the same day Wabash had 548. As the contest was on the per cent basis, Wabash secured the banner. We held our joint picnics half way between the two towns, and the schools had a genuine love feast. C. E. Stewart, superintendent of the Marion school, and Frank Carpenter, superintendent of the Wabash school, made addresses. Brother Daugherty in the ball game pitched like a professional, and I am sure he could make more money playing ball than at preaching. Pastor Martin, of LaFontaine, was the umpire. We had a great day. Our work has never been more prosperous, and we enter upon the fall campaign full of hope.—J. Boyd Jones.

Oklahoma.

J. M. Monroe, corresponding secretary of Western Oklahoma, sends us a report of the state convention, from which we glean some items. A report of the convention has already appeared in our columns from the pen of O. L. Smith. Brother Monroe says it was the most enthusiastic and greatest convention ever held in Oklahoma; was royally entertained by Brother Van Voorhis and the Shawnee church, and presided over by a master of assemblies in the person of T. R. Dean. It was a business convention, yet some great addresses were made. H. S. Gilliam's work is spoken of in the highest terms. Mary A. Lucey is doing fine work for the C. W. B. M., and is ably assisted by Sisters Aten and Gilliam. The influence of the auxiliaries is silent and constant, and spiritualizing. Sister Kelley is likened to Joan of Arc. A more prominent place ought to be accorded to the Christian Endeavor work, in which Miss Frye and Miss Lawson and O. L. Smith are the moving spirits. President Zollars made a great address for education. All the visitors from outside the state did credit to themselves, and were highly appreciated. Many of the "old guard," like Smith, Williams, Curtis and Chapman, who have given shape to the Cause in earlier days, while not so much in evidence on the program, did great work on committees.

DEDICATIONS.

Elmo, Mo.

On the night of October 28. 1907, the old church building at Elmo was destroyed by fire. It was a sad night for the faithful little congregation, as the building had just been remodeled, and by an overight the insurance had elapsed only a few days before, so the loss was complete. The panic came the next day, adding to the gloomy outlook. The minister was not discouraged, and to the cry, "We can't build," he said, "We must." The trustees of the Methodist Episcopal church tendered the use of their building for our regular services every two weeks, and we accepted. But it was decided to rebuild, and $2,000 in pledges was secured as a basis to begin upon. The best available lot in the town was purchased. The pastor drew the plans for the building and the work of construction was begun at the end of March. It is of cement block foundation above the grade line. Everything is after modern plans. J. M. Hoffman, of St. Louis, an old-time friend and father in the gospel of the pastor, conducted the dedication services. Twelve hundred dollars in pledges and cash was secured at the morning service. In the evening following the communion service there were talks by W. H. Rust, the pastor; G. P. Shoptaugh, chairman of the building committee, and several other friends. And to Brother Hoffman's appeal $200 was pledged. In the evening a song service was conducted by Brother Hoover, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and more than enough money was raised to make up the $1,500 that had been needed. Brother Hoffman asked the pastor to go for a pitcher of water, and on the latter's return he was informed that the congregation and friends had raised money to send him to the convention at New Orleans as a slight token of their appreciation for him and the work he had accomplished. The congregation is now in a position to do a great work. It thanks Brother Hoffman for his great help. No congregation will make a mistake in calling upon him.—W. H. Rust, pastor.

Wellington, Kan.

September 6 was the occasion of the dedication of the new church here. George L. Snively, of Greenville, Ill., was called to assist in the day's services. Sixty-five hundred dollars was needed to clear the church of all indebtedness, but when Brother Snively made the plea, in his effective manner, $7,300 was raised at the morning service, and before the day closed more than $8,000 was pledged. You will make no mistake in sending for Brother Snively to dedicate your church.

Two and a half years ago when I took up this work the congregation had a five-roomed parsonage and frame church, out of repair; now it has a nine-roomed parsonage with modern conveniences, and a nice modern church. The parsonage was remodeled one year ago at a cost of $1,500.

The church is of Romanesque style, built of pressed brick, trimmed with white Carthage stone, making a very imposing structure. The interior is beautifully frescoed. The ceiling is finished in a dome shape and studded with electric lights; the building will be heated with natural gas.

This great victory, a building free of debt, means great things for our people in this growing city. We have the only modern church building in the city. We are in a position now to take care of our work more effectively. The growth of our congregation during the last two years brought this demand upon us. Among the many good people of this church who contributed largely for this success is A. A. Richardson, cousin of our beloved W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City.

In the Brotherhood has been asked to observe

CHILDREN'S DAY FOR HOME MISSIONS
NOVEMBER 22ND

Or upon some more convenient date. We have also addressed letters to all the active ministers asking them to encourage the Bible Schools to observe the day. Replies have been received indicating unprecedented interest. This offering will make up the record for the Centennial year. Every school will want its record for that year to be the best. No school can afford to drop out of line this year of all years.

Supplies will be furnished free of charge by

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Bentonville, Sept. 9.—One addition at the prayer-meeting.—J. W. Ellis.

Bentonville, Sept. 14.—Four additions at our regular morning service yesterday.—J. W. Ellis.

Canada.

St. Thomas, Sept. 18.—Three baptisms at prayer-meeting—one a lady 78 years of age. Eighty-five additions since January 1. I enter Yale University September 24.—M. M. Amunson, minister.

Brownsburg, Sept. 19.—L. H. Graham, of Worthington, Ind., opened a campaign for Christ here last Sunday, with all day rally services. Since Sunday evening there have been 17 additions—16 by baptism and one by letter. Brother Graham is a splendid teacher and worker.—F. E. Trucksess, evangelist in song.

Colorado.

Lyman, Sept. 19.—On September 6 I began a meeting in this new field. The first week we used the school building, but the second week moved to the best hall in the town. The only church is a M. E. church. Next Lord's day we organize, and may continue the meeting another week. I hope in the near future to open the work at Fountain, Hugo, Burlington, Arraba and possibly Bovina.—A. L. Ferguson.

District of Columbia.

Washington, Sept. 15.—The Ministerial Association of the Churches of Christ in the District of Columbia met in Vermont Avenue Christian Church. Present, F. D. Power, G. A. Miller, J. E. Stuart, W. G. Oram, Dew, G. W. Muckley and W. F. Smith. Reported as added since last meeting: Vermont Avenue, four by letter; Ninth Street, five by letter and one by confession and baptism; Whitney Avenue, three by letter and two by confession and baptism. Churches all report a splendid condition.—W. F. Smith, secretary.

Illinois.

Roseville, Sept. 13.—One confession at the last night service. Interest good.—M. S. Metzler.

Rock Island, Sept. 14.—Good services yesterday—our first Sunday after my vacation. Church extension offering increased over last year. At the evening service I had the joy of receiving the confession of, and baptizing, my only brother, who is visiting me from Chicago.—W. B. Clemmer, pastor.

St. Elmo, Sept. 14.—Recently closed a three-weeks' meeting at my old church near Loogootee, Ill., with 39 additions. I am in a meeting at Ingraham, Ill., at present—meeting nine days old and 19 added. E. S. Thompson is the beloved minister here.—C. M. Smithson, evangelist.

Pleasant Hill, Sept 14.—One week ago I was called to open a meeting here, and so far we have had 17 confessions—all by baptism. The church is wonderfully revived, and we will continue for this coming week. Any one desiring my services may address me at 633 West Capitol avenue, Springfield, Ill. Brother Easterling is the pastor here.—L. B. Appleton.

Flanagan, Sept. 18.—Our meeting is progressing nicely. We have had seven confessions. John R. Golden, of Gibson City, is the evangelist. He is an eloquent speaker and a strong evangelist. He was elected to the State Legislature two years ago on the Prohibition ticket, and is a candidate for re-election. R. E. Thomas, the local minister, has been doing good work here for three years. Flanagan is a whisky town, having five saloons. The Amish Lutherans and Catholics are strong here. I have two large choruses.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

Urbana, Sept. 15.—Three received into the fellowship of the church at Bushton last Lord's day by statement.—J. A. Lytle.

Pontiac, Sept. 15.—There were seven additions here Sunday—two confessions. All departments are in splendid condition. We resume the teacher training work this week.—Allen T. Shaw, pastor.

Indiana.

Marion, Sept. 15.—A man and wife of mature years made the confession Sunday night.—J. Boyd Jones.

Kansas.

Goodland, Sept. 18.—Meeting began Sunday. The Kendalls are coming Sunday. Meetings are being held in an opera house.—J. M. Lowe and the Kendalls.

Winfield, Sept. 16.—Roger H. Fife and sons are with us in a meeting. There have been 28 confessions, and 11 by statement. We will close Sunday night.—Albert Nichols.

Kentucky.

Madisonville, Sept. 14.—S. M. Bernard, minister of this church, did the preaching in a two-weeks' meeting, with J. Walter Wilson as soloist and chorister. There were 50 additions—46 adults—mostly by confession. Church happy. Spiritual effect fine.

Lexington, Sept. 21.—The writer recently closed a two-weeks' meeting at Kirksville, Ky., with 50 additions—27 by confession and baptism, three from the Baptists, the others by letter and statement. C. E. Powel, the faithful preacher for this congregation, has been called to the new Woodland Church in Lexington, and will begin his labors there on the first of October.—Mark Collis.

Louisiana.

Lake Charles, Sept. 14.—Good work being done by the church here. There were two more additions yesterday. We decided to raise the money for our evangelistic campaign before the evangelist reached us, and yesterday morning asked for $300, which was given in about fifteen minutes. At the close of the services several more came up and contributed, so we more than raised the amount asked for. The Ladies' Aid Society gave $50, making more than $100 they have given to the general and special work of the church in the last two months. Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor societies also contributed largely.—Otis Hawkins, minister.

Iowa.

Blockton, Sept. 17.—Closed our meeting on Tuesday night with A. R. Liverett as our evangelist. Tolbert McRae led the singing. The plan of salvation was made plain as could be, and the singing was inspiring. Although only six were added to the church—two by baptism, four by letter and statement—the church is more alive than ever, and all are anxious for a great year's work in God's field. The meeting was in no sense a failure. The church paid, on the last night of the meeting, an old debt amounting to $70 or $80, and we start off free from debt.—George E. Purdy, pastor.

Panora, Sept. 15.—James T. Nichols closed an 11-days' meeting with 17 additions. Brother Nichols has wonderful tact and talent. His description of the Holy Land was beautiful, and his sermons delighted his hearers. Were he not doing such good work on "The Christian Union," our state paper, he ought to be kept in the field all the time. Our short meeting was beneficial in many ways.—F. W. Mutchler.

Wapello, Sept. 16.—The old historic church at Lost Creek, Lee county, which was founded in 1836, and is the oldest Church of Christ in Iowa, recently closed a short meeting with 12 confessions and baptisms. B. L. Kline, pastor of the church in Fort Madison, did the preaching, and did it well. He is held in high esteem in all that community, and the writer, who preaches for the church at Lost Creek,, while editing one of our local papers, greatly appreciates the kindness and helpfulness of Brother Kline.—Charles Blanchard.

Michigan.

Grand Rapids, Sept. 18.—Vacation is over, and the motion of work now is heard. The Second, Third, Fifth and Sixth District conventions are now on. Good reports from each are expected. Indications are good for a great year in Michigan. Now for Michigan day, November 1.—F. P. Arthur.

Mississippi.

Baldwin, Sept. 17.—I am now in a very interesting meeting four miles east of Baldwin. Owing to a disappointment in my arrangements in Mississippi I desire to correspond with some church or group of churches wanting a preacher. The work in Mississippi lags. This is one of the greatest mission fields in the United States. J. E. Spiegel is doing a grand work as corresponding secretary.—Robert E. McCaskie.

Missouri.

Columbia, Sept. 14.—Held a ten-days' meeting reaching over the third Sunday, at Prairie Hill, with 11 added—nine baptisms—all adults, including the village doctor and druggist, also the editor of the paper there, and his wife.—I. N. Jett.

Breckenridge, Sept. 14.—There were five additions here yesterday—four by confession and one by statement.—E. G. Merrill.

Salisbury, Sept. 14.—One added at the regular services here yesterday.—G. H. Bassett, minister.

Bolckow, Sept. 14. We have just closed a three-weeks' meeting with four confessions—two from the Baptists and one by statement. The pastor did the preaching. Maude Brunk, of Des Moines, led our singing; she is one of the best. We also had the pleasure of having Brother Cottingham with us one week. He is one of our old stand-bys.—Arthur Dillinger, Drake student.

Garden City, Sept. 14.—In the last two weeks there have been 74 additions here. This is the result of a great union meeting conducted by Evangelists Lovic P. Law and Edward G. Phillips, in which there were 186 conversions.—R. A. Blalock.

Jerico Springs, Sept. 14.—C. W. Worden, of Huntsville, Mo., closed a splendid meeting for the church here. It lasted three weeks, with 15 additions—14 by confession and one from the Baptists. There was one confession at the water after the meeting closed. Brother Worden presents the gospel in its fullness and purity, and in the spirit. The church has been strengthened and encouraged. We feel he was the right man and did the right kind of work, when we consider the field had been gleaned, about 130 having been added to the church during the last 18 months. Brother Worden expects to be with us in November to deliver a lecture on his travels through the Holy Land.—E. W. Yocum, minister.

Corder, Sept. 16.—The meeting with R. Tibbs Maxey closed with 29 accessions—25 by primary obedience, and two by letter from other bodies. The meeting leaves the church much strengthened and encouraged. We begin soon an addition to the building to cost $250 for Christian Endeavor and Sunday-school rooms, robing room, etc.—Arthur Downs, minister.

Carterville, Sept. 15.—Great meeting at Prosperity, Mo. H. Thomas King, our pastor, is doing the preaching and home talent doing the singing. Meeting three weeks old with 44 additions and continues with great interest.—J. T. Moss, elder.

Kansas City, Sept. 14.—We have just closed a good meeting at Bates City, Mo. Baptized 21 and added five by statement. W. O. Thomas, of Kansas City, did the preaching, and it was well done.—J. W. Monser.

Frankford, Sept. 21.—George L. Snively is leading a good meeting here and is assisted in the music by C. H. Altheide. Large crowds are in attendance. The sermons thus far have been of an evidential character, calculated to remove doubt. Both the workers are well known and strong men in their particular fields. Talmage DeFrees, the minister, expects large results from this effort.

Nebraska.

Grand Island, Sept. 18.—Our great revival closed with 100 confessions, and 30 by letter and statement. A fuller report will be sent. Lockhart and Garmong were the evangelists.—James R. McIntire.

Ohio.

Marion, Sept. 3.—Three added last Lord's day at morning service—two by letter and one confession. Baptism last night after prayer-meeting.—Charles E. Smith, minister.

Oklahoma.

Edmond, Sept. 14.—Meeting eight days old with 19 added. F. L. Van Voorhis and Edward McKinney leading to satisfaction of all. Fine interest. Detailed report at close.—R. E. Rosenstein, minister.

Lawton, Sept. 14.—Evangelist Charles P. Murphy, of Frederick, Okla., closed a fine meeting at Fletcher, the best that was ever held in the town. Any church wanting a good evangelist will make no mistake in securing him. He is a fine speaker and knows how to reach the people. Address him Frederick, Okla.

Texas.

Chico, Sept. 8.—I have held very successful meetings at the following places since I last wrote you: Paradise, Bowie and Montague, Tex. I am now in a great tent meeting here, which began last Lord's day with three services. The tent is crowded every night. So far we have had additions at each place. As I own the tent I shall be glad to hear from churches needing meetings either with or without tent.—James Sharrall, general evangelist, 2038 Penn avenue, Kansas City, Mo.

Dallas, Sept. 14.—Cephas Shelburne, of the East Dallas Church, reports four additions and one baptism on Sunday. There were two baptisms on the Wednesday before, making a total of 40 accessions to the church since Brother Shelburne took the work.

Laredo, Aug. 25.—Have just returned from my vacation. While resting preached at Liverpool, Texas, one week—seven confessions; two weeks at Des Moines, New Mexico, and organized a church of 20, secured lots and started fund for Utah.

Salt Lake City, Sept. 13.—One letter at regular services.—Albert Buxton, pastor.

Washington.

Walla Walla, Sept. 14.—Since the beginning of my ten-months' pastorate there have been 59 additions. Last Wednesday I baptized a rising young lawyer. A physician and wife made the confession yesterday. The outlook for a meeting this fall with Joel Brown is very promising.—S. G. Fisher.

Ministerial Exchange.

Lee H. Barnum, pastor of our church at Medicine Lodge, Kan., desires to introduce to our brotherhood J. W. McLaughlin, of 452 South Campbell street, Springfield, Mo., who was formerly a minister of the Free Baptist Church, and for a number of years located in Wharton, Kan. He and Brother Barnum were associated together for three years while the latter served our church there. He commends Brother McLaughlin as a consecrated man of strong personality, a splendid pastor and a good pulpit address. He will, he says, make a good leader for any church, and his wife is a fine worker and a great help to him in the ministry.

W. H. Book, of Columbus, Ind., has a word of keen appreciation for T. H. Adams, of Edinburg, Ind., who enters the evangelistic field. Brother Book says he has done a great work in that state, is much loved by the church, and is especially fitted for evangelistic work. "Warm-hearted, full of faith, with deep conviction and plenty of courage due to the old gospel, industrious, and a passion for souls—with these qualifications he must succeed."

J. C. Mason, state corresponding secretary of Texas, informs us that Walter O. Stephens, late of Mineral Wells, and L. D. Parnell have become living link evangelists of the Central Church at Beaumont and the Central Church at Houston. Their work will be in South Texas, and their plan will be to fully establish mission work, leaving a minister behind them to care for the new flocks. They begin their work at Crockett, an old southeast Texas town, where we have had a good building practically out of use for five years or more.

"The church at Muskogee, Okla., is in need of a pastor. This is a very hard field, and any one looking for a 'soft job' need not come. We have been paying $1,000, and can possibly pay a little more for the right man. The church here gets no support from business men of the town, but has a little band of faithful ones that, with the pastor combined, would accomplish much good. We are in the throes of a building enterprise also."—W. W. Settle, 215 North Eleventh street.

O. M. Pennock, minister at Osceola, Ia., can arrange to hold a meeting at some time between November 1 and February 1, taking his vacation at that time. Any church desiring his services should address him at once.

Wanted.—A young married preacher to locate with village church in Eastern Kansas for full time, at $600 per year. Must be a wide-awake hustler. Address all correspondence to J. T. Adams, evangelist, 705 Conn street, Lawrence, Kansas.

"I can place a minister in a good field paying about $750 or $800. Don't write unless you are ready to come on thirty days' notice."—A. R. Adams, Milestone, Sask., Canada.

Miss Mabel Swift, Bloomfield, Ia., is now open for engagements as evangelistic singer.

The church at Webster Groves, Mo., has given its pastor, J. G. Engle, the privilege of holding a meeting this fall, and he can furnish a singer if desired.

W. H. Van Deusen, Chattanooga, Okla., will correspond with churches desiring the services of a minister or evangelist, who is also a good baritone singer—a man of ten years' experience in successful work, both as pastor and soul-winner.

J. Y. B. Wood, gospel singer, cartoonist and entertainer, of St. Louis, Mo., who is assisting B. H. Coonradt in a meeting at Cleghorn, Ia., is desirous of getting work in Iowa for the winter months. Ministers wanting his services in the state should address him at Bloomfield; those out of the state should address him at 2403 Thrush avenue, Walnut Park, St. Louis, Mo.

Dr. David T. Stanley, of Little Rock, Ark., and Prof. Harry W. Miller, of Troy, N. Y., have formed a combination for evangelistic work and are now making dates for the coming season. Dr. Stanley is a graduate in arts, in medicine and in law, but during the past eight years has been devoting himself to missionary and evangelistic work. He preaches the gospel simply, plainly and powerfully, but without offense to any. He is a thorough organizer and handles the workers in his meetings with much skill. Professor Miller has a reputation as a chorus leader and tenor soloist. He has worked with several of our great evangelists and is highly commended by them. For dates and terms address "The Stanley-Miller Evangelists," either at 134 Riverside avenue, Little Rock, Ark., or at 111 Twelfth street, Troy, N. Y.

An opening for a man, member and worker in Christian Church, who is capable of managing a Democratic paper in town of 2,000. Write to 1111 Paquin avenue, Columbia, Mo. Address of owner of paper will be sent. The paper is not for sale.

The church at Athena, Ore., is without a pastor and correspondence may be addressed to L. J. Foss.

Wanted.—A position with a good evangelist as chorister for the year 1909. Best of references given.—Harry O. Whipp, Charleston, Ill.

"Theo. Kellogg, the student preacher, who has been preaching for us during his vacation, returns to school September 14. During the summer we had a great tent meeting with Joel Brown, evangelist, resulting in 64 additions—63 grown people. This with the other helpful features of the meeting puts us in a position to pay from $900 to $1,000 for a good live preacher who is not afraid to work." Address P. M. Lind, Queen City, Mo.

Churches desiring a minister can be put in touch with same. Best of references. Also, I shall be ready to engage as assistant pastor by January 1, 1908. Experienced as pastor. Address Mrs. L. B. VanDeusen, Chattanooga, Okla.

A good faithful minister is needed to take up the work in an excellent locality in Ontario, Canada. They can pay between $700 and $800 a year. There are four points. Rent and living are comparatively cheap. Send references to Andres Leitch, Kilmartin, Ontario, Canada.

"I can put churches in touch with two good, strong preachers. One will expect from $800 to $1,000; the other $1,200 to $1,500 salary. One is a graduate of Bethany, and has B. D. degree from Yale. Address Evangelist Clarence I. Mitchell, Lima, Ohio.

Mr. and Mrs. R. O. Noah, who have been assisting A. E. Wrentmore in general evangelistic work as singer and pianist, are now open for engagements for fall and winter engagements. Brother Wrentmore commends them as a strong team. Address them at Mystic, Iowa.

"I would like to arrange with churches wanting a meeting this fall or winter."—J. A. Lytle, 602 Elm St., Urbana, Ill.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

FRUIT BEARING.

Topic September 30.—John 15:1-8.

There must be, first of all, a recognition of the true vine as the source of all life, without which there can be no fruit bearing. There must be also a recognition of the Father as the husbandman. I feel that most of our fearful failures in Christian living and fruit bearing result from our failure to recognize God as our Father, in the real sense that imparts strength to us spiritually and gives direction to our moral energies. "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him." To thus recognize our heavenly Father in all things sets us in the succession of apostles and prophets and the faithful servants of the living God in all the ages.

To recognize in Jesus Christ the true vine of the heavenly Father's planting, and the Church of Christ as the representative of the heavenly kingdom in the world, is to put ourselves in the right attitude to live and serve. We must become the children of the kingdom before we can bear fruit in the kingdom. We must, to use the Master's figure, become branches of the true vine and abide therein, in order to become living and spiritual and fruitful members of his kingdom, his church, his family; for the figures of the vine and the branch, the kingdom and its subjects, the church and its members, the family and its members, all mean essentially the same thing.

One of the most vital of all the relationships of the Christian is indicated in this figure of the vine and its branches. "As the branch can not bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in me." The truth is self-evident in the physical world. It ought also to be in the spiritual world. Strange how we do blunder in the simplest things of the spiritual life! The fact is, spiritual life is just as simple and easy as everyday life. It is everyday life. And the laws that govern in the spiritual life are exactly the same that we find in plain, everyday living. The branch grows normally in the vine, and if cut off it withers, of course. So Jesus says, "If a man abide not in me he is cast forth as a branch and is withered." Ah, the withered lives in the church simply because they did not continue in the Christ, or were never really grafted into the true vine! Perhaps it is in the "grafting" process that many of us fail. Yet grafting is a simple thing in nature, and not a mysterious thing in the realm of the spiritual. The trouble is we are accustomed to think of spiritual things as necessarily mysterious. One is no more mysterious in the mind of the Master than the other. Nor should they be in our thinking and living. "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." The "purging" or pruning process with most of us is a source of fret and of failure. Some of us fret and some of us flunkey; in either case it usually means failure. To fret under the pruning process prevents our spiritual growth and hinders our fruitfulness. True, the cutting process is not pleasant, but it yields the peaceable fruits of righteousness to them that are exercised thereby. Just to be faithful is the simple secret of fruitfulness in discipleship, as in farming. We must study the soil and till it and study the soul and fill it and cultivate it and let it blossom and bear fruit.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

Plans for Bible School Work in Oregon.

Oregon's aim is, "The whole church and as many more in the Bible school." We know of no more potent factor for the accomplishment of this aim than the teacher training class and the organized Adult class. Hence, we shall urge the organization of both in every school in the state, so far as practicable.

A number of our schools have already organized both, and we hope to report many more before the year shall close. Any information regarding either will be gladly given in response to inquiry.

The teacher training classes should be organized early in the autumn, that the course may be completed and classes graduated before the close of the school year. To do this books should be ordered at once.

In addition to the above named plans, we purpose to emphasize the missionary phase of our Bible school work. Children's Day for Home Missions demands our immediate attention, and we hope to make it a great day in our state.

The first Lord's day in October is Rally day for our Oregon schools.

The offering on Rally day is to go for state work and will be credited on pledges made for this work. A little special effort on the part of leaders will insure the canceling of all pledges on that day and leave our schools free to meet other obligations that will come to them.

Co-operation is absolutely essential to the accomplishment of any aim, and we confidently expect a hearty response on the part of our schools in our efforts to bring about more aggressive work in our state.

To my fellow workers let me say in closing, I am your servant. How can I serve you best? Let me hear from you if I can be of assistance in your particular field.

Mrs. Clara G. Esson, B. S. Evangelist.
267 Knott St., Portland, Oregon.

Smith Center, Kan., Teacher Training Class Graduates.

On Wednesday evening, September 9, our teacher training class had its graduating exercises in the church at Smith Center, with appropriate ceremony.

Brother Gardner, of Kensington; Brother Scott, of Lebanon, and Bro. Myron C. Settle and his wife were present and assisted. The graduation address was made by Brother Settle, who organized the class last October.

Members of the class also took part in the service with appropriate recitations, papers and music. Of special interest was a class prophecy, uttered by the class prophet, who foreshadowed the careers of every member of the class most interestingly indeed.

Thre were twenty-four graduates in all, the oldest being 77 years young. (It would not be appropriate to say 77 years old.) This graduate was Sister R. M. Tracy, a fine-spirited, gracious mother in Israel. What class is there in the brotherhood that can boast a member older than she?

Why not start a list of the graduates in the columns of the national papers, giving the number of graduates from the various states, instead of the number enrolled? We would like to know how the various states are coming on as well as know how they started. Smith Center expects to and will organize classes for both the First and Advanced courses very soon now.

F. E. Blanchard, pastor.

Note.—This was a most enjoyable occasion. I am right proud of this class, as I am of all those who complete the course. Brother Blanchard's suggestion is a good one. It's what we graduate that count—not how many are enrolled. Let us put Kansas in the front rank in this respect, too.

The Advanced courses are now ready. Let all classes that have completed the First course take up the Advanced course at once and get an early start, finishing before hot weather sets in next summer. All who agree say "aye." Myron C. Settle.

Oklahoma Bible Schools.

I respectfully submit my report as state superintendent of the Sunday-school Department of the Oklahoma Christian Missionary Society for the year ending August 24-28. I have visited 54 schools once and some of them twice. I have given 61 addresses in the interests of Sunday-schools and preached 42 sermons. I held four institutes and rallies and personally led in several canvasses for new pupils and the organization of Home and Cradle Roll departments. I have assisted in perfecting the organization of several "New Movement Adult Classes." I have organized 20 teacher training classes and stimulated the organization of a large number of others. As last year, we have emphasized the importance of the Home and Cradle Roll departments and "modern methods" of Sunday-school work. We have, in addition to this, stressed teacher training and the New Movement Adult class organization. We are glad to say that all schools visited have given us a fairly hearty response, and in some instances our ministers extended us the courtesy of their pulpits when we were with them on the Lord's day. During the more than two years of our work, we have seen many of our ministers who seemed indifferent to the importance of the Sunday-school and its place in the life and growth of the church, become enthusiastic in its propagation. With some of them there is yet room for large growth.

During the year I have received many letters and words of encouragement, and assurances that my work among the schools had resulted in much good, and that following my visits the schools had taken on new life. We attended the annual meeting of the State Sunday-School Association at Tulsa, in June, and was presented to the convention and accorded a fifteen minutes' speech. By authority of the State Missionary Board we assisted in the organization of four of the seven districts of West Oklahoma. We have no disposition to parade what we have done and the results of our efforts beyond the point necessary to inform the brotherhood, whose servant we are, as to the general character and scope of the work—its progress and its possibilities. The greatest progress made this year has been in the department of teacher training. Last year we had only two classes, with a membership of 20, taking a course in teacher training. We have to-day 72 classes, with an enrollment of 1,600, taking Moninger's or some other teacher training course approved by the education committee of the International Sunday-School Association. On account of all the classes being less than one year old, only a few have graduated and received their diplomas. Hundreds now taking the course will be ready for final examination early in the fall. Considering all the handicaps under which the work has been prosecuted, we have great reason for giving thanks to our God for the measure of progress our Sunday-schools have made the past ten months.

We estimate our Sunday-school enrollment at 31,250, and an average attendance of 21,750. Including the Home and Cradle Roll and Teacher Training departments, we have connected with our schools 39,500 persons. By the end of 1909 we should have not less than 50,000 in our Sunday-schools in Oklahoma.

We urge upon our schools and ministers to stress the following points the coming year:

1. Doubling the membership.
2. Organized Adult Classes.
3. A teacher training class in every school.
4. A Home Department in every school.
5. A Cradle Roll department in every school.
6. All the church and as many more in the school.
7. Bringing every unconverted member of the school to Christ.

Receipts for the year are as follows: From individuals, $61.50; from the field, $38.36; from Sunday-school apportionments, $335; from sermons and addresses, $195.47. Total, $630.33.

Over 100 per cent more schools gave to state Sunday-school work this year than last. Fewer individuals gave this year than last.

Oklahoma City (First) has the largest total enrollment in the state, and El Reno is second. El Reno has the largest Home and Cradle Roll departments in the state.

McAlester has the largest teacher training (55) class in the state, and Oklahoma City (First) the largest (110) young men's class and the largest (126) mixed class in the state.

The youngest and biggest (85) school, for its age, is Fairview, six miles out from Kingfisher in the country.

H. S. Gilliam,
State Superintendent Bible Schools.

Young People's Bible Class.

This Adult Bible class of the South Broadway Bible school, of Denver, Colo., with 65 members, is fully organized after the international standard. Allen P. Reid is the president of it and Mrs. Lena E. Treloar, pastoral helper, the teacher. The motto of the class is, "The smile of God is victory." This is one of the largest and most substantial classes we have in the state. It is, however, not so much the size of the class as the quality of its work and workers. One item of special work it has adopted is the giving of $100 this year to the Golden church, a missionary point near Denver. It is truly a fine class and means a great deal to the church in every department. E. M. Cosner.

The Sunday School at Weston, Mo., continues to "boom." The contest has just closed with Tarkio, which won, but only by a little over 200 points. There were 149 present at Weston on the last day and an offering between $13 and $14. J. E. Wolfe, the minister, reports that this has done the school much good. All this advance work started by Brother Ryan visiting the school. The state workers have been a great blessing to it. As Brother Wolfe says, "They know your work and your wants."

The Teacher Training Situation in Illinois.

Illinois reports 347 teacher training classes with an enrollment of 11,453. Some of these classes were organized in the closing months of 1907, but the greater number began work in the first half of 1908. The following letter of Mrs. Northrop, of Wheaton, Ill., Teacher Training Secretary for Illinois, gives the situation up to September 14, 1908. It is informing and interesting, and ought to stir the classes of Illinois to enroll, resume, persevere, graduate. The test of the strength of this great movement and of its value to the Bible school, is not simply in the number who begin, but in the number who persevere unto the end and obtain the diploma. At the same time, a great blessing comes to those who take only the Bible lessons of the training course. But we should not lose sight of the imperative necessity of training teachers.

ILLINOIS MUST ENROLL. Out of the 347 classes reported. Mrs. Northrop reports only 97 as enrolled in her office. It is quite probable that some are enrolling that have not yet reached the first of the three examinations given to Illinois classes. Illinois classes owe it to their painstaking State Bible-school Superintendent, C. L. DePew, to heed his careful and repeated instructions to enroll. Send the report of your class at once to Mrs. A. E. Northrop, 310 Center St., Wheaton, Ill.

Here is Mrs. Northrop's letter:

Wheaton, Ill., September 14, 1908.

Clarence L. DePew, Jacksonville, Ill.:

My Dear Mr. DePew—I tried to get the enclosed list off to you the day after your letter came, but it really took a longer time to prepare it than I thought it would, and I have been crowded with examinations. Vacations and hot weather have made very little difference with our work. I am very glad to send you enclosed list, and think it will speak for itself of the work being done in your churches. There will be at least 25 more international diplomas out within a week, some to the very fine class at Niantic, led by J. W. Walters. I have sent the questions which are to be used Wednesday evening.

Thank you for copies of your leaflets. You may be assured of my prayers and co-operation in every effort to push this great work. Sincerely yours, Edith V. Northrop.

In the list which follows, the numbers in the first column have taken the first examination; the numbers in the second column have taken the first and second examinations; those taking the final examination and receiving diplomas, are numbered in the third column.

The above report is a challenge, not only to every teacher training class in Illinois, but to every class in every state as well.

347 classes, only 97 enrolled.

250 classes not yet enrolled.

1,134 students took the first examination.

464 students took the second examination.

303 students persevered and received their diplomas.

Illinois reports 11,453 students who have begun the teacher training work the past few months. Let every class enroll at once with Mrs. Northrop. Let every teacher strive to graduate the whole class.

A Common Sentiment.

I attended no less than nine conventions, conferences and other gatherings of Sunday-school workers during the first six months of last year. Four of these gatherings were composed entirely of men, and one in particular was composed largely of men representing many colleges and theological seminaries, while every man present was in close touch with the Sunday-school. No less than twenty-five of the men present gave addresses prepared for the occasion or spoke informally in the discussion following these addresses. At this conference, and at all of the others, something was said about the new movement in the Sunday-school along the line of work for and with adults, and it was the common sentiment that nothing in recent years assumed anything like the degree of importance this new movement has assumed. Very strong emphasis was laid on the value of the Adult Bible class, and it was the common sentiment that this part of the work of the Sunday-school should be fostered with the greatest care. The action of so many of our state Sunday-school associations in appointing state secretaries to have charge of the adult work in the Sunday-school was highly commended, and it was the general opinion that the International Convention to meet in Louisville should give all possible emphasis to this movement in the Sunday-school. One speaker said that in his opinion the Adult Bible class movement was the greatest movement in the entire history of the Sunday-school, and he was sure he saw in it the salvation of many a weak and steadily declining Sunday-school. At some of the meetings instances were given of almost miraculous transformations in weak classes and weak Sunday-schools after the formation of organized Adult Bible classes. One speaker seemed to meet with special approval when he said:

"The organized Bible class can do more to lift the Sunday-school out of the ruts than any other agency that I know of, and the school that has not an active organized class in it is not keeping pace with the spirit of progress that is giving new life to hundreds of our Sunday-schools and that has in it so much of hope and promise for the future. The organized class is far past the experimental stage, although I doubt if all of its possibilities have yet been realized."

The Sunday-school convention that does not give a part of its sessions to the Adult Bible class is behind the times. Men of the widest experience in the work of the adult organized class are in harmony with the speaker from New York, who said:

"Experience has taught some of us that through the organized Bible class men can be reached when other means fail. That organized Bible classes are an open door to those now indifferent to the church has been proved in over four thousand such classes in the Empire State. The power developed in a class properly organized and working its organization is a tremendous agent for good among men."

No one pretends that the organized class is going to solve all the problems of the Sunday-school, but no one who has given the organized class work careful study can fail to see how it is helping to solve the problem of how to hold the boy in the Sunday-school when he reaches the razor age and the girl after she comes to her first long dresses. Nor can one fail to see how it draws into the Sunday-school men and women who left the Sunday-school when they were at the period of life of the boys and girls described. Yes, it is a common sentiment that the organized class movement is the best thing that has "struck" the Sunday-school in many a day or year.—Morris Meredith, in the "Adult Bible Class and Teacher Training Monthly."

Another Centennial Bible School, Soon.

The Bible school at Boonville, Mo., will soon be a Centennial Bible school. Every member of the church but twelve are now enrolled, and they will soon have the twelve. This was the good news I heard when visiting them on Lord's day, September 20.

Last year a class of twenty completed Hurlbut's normal course. This year a class of fifty will take up teacher training in earnest, some for the first course and others for the advanced course.

Prof. M. A. Orear, principal of the public school of Boonville, is the superintendent of the Bible school, and Brother J. B. Weldon is the minister. They are a fine team in Bible school work.

Soul Building.

Souls are built as temples are—
Sunken deep, unseen, unknown,
Lies the sure fundation-stone.
Then the courses framed to bear
Lift the cloisters pillared fair,
Last of all the airy spire,
Soaring heavenward, higher and higher.
Nearest sun and nearest star.

Souls are built as temples are—
Based on truth's eternal law,
Sure and steadfast, without flaw,
Through the sunshine, through the snows,
Up and on the building goes;
Every fair thing finds its place,
Every hard thing lends a grace.
Every hand may make or mar.

Why Quakeresses Never Catch Cold.

"A Quakeress," said a physician, "never catches cold. Her immunity is due to her bonnet. If I had my way, all of us, women and men alike, would wear Quaker bonnets. This bonnet protects the back of the head and nape of the neck, two very tender spots. The Quakeress bonnet may not be beautiful, but, protecting her nape, as it does, it keeps her free from colds year in and year out."

Great duties are before me and great songs;
And whether crowned or crownless when I fall
It matters not, so as God's work is done.
—Alexander Smith.

Biblical Baseball.

A Canton theological student interested in baseball wrote a thesis on "Baseball among the Ancients," from which are gleaned the following facts:

Abraham made a sacrifice.

The Prodigal Son made a home run.

Cain made a base hit when he killed Abel.

David was a great long-distance thrower.

Moses shut out the Egyptians at the Red Sea.

Moses made his first run when he slew the Egyptian.

The devil was the first coacher. Eve stole first—Adam second.

When Isaac met Rebecca she was out walking with a pitcher.

Samson struck out a great many times when he beat the Philistines.

When we are alone we have our thoughts to watch; in family our tempers, in society our tongues.—Hannah Moore.

Seven Rules for Longevity.

The following rules for living a ripe old age are given by Mrs. Henderson in her recently published volume, "The Aristocracy of Health," (Harpers):

1. Study the laws of nature for health and the remedies of nature for cure.

2. Avoid all poisons.

3. Take abundant exercise in pure air, but always short of fatigue. So exercise that every portion of the body is equally benefited. As it takes a strong engine for a long journey, cultivate lung-power by slow, deep-breathing exercise.

4. Eat only the amount of food that nature needs, and study what to eat from a scientific point of view.

5. Cultivate normal sleep. Live and sleep only in rooms that are well sunned, well ventilated, and not overheated.

6. Cultivate the habit of work in connection with some worthy ambition, for healthy exercise of body and mind is as strengthening as repose, and should balance it. Work while you work and rest while you rest, avoiding all worry. Make yourself useful to the world, and feel that you have a part in it.

7. Avoid bad environments, the worst of which is the friend who encourages you to poison yourself.

Use for All.

The visitor in the South was offering his sympathies to the old colored parson.

"It's a shame, uncle," said the visitor, "that the congregation should drop buttons in the plate when you were collecting your salary."

"Dat doan mattah, sah," replied the old man with a luminous smile, "Ah kin use dem on dat old paih ob trousers de kernel gib me."

"Well, they dropped nails in the plate also."

"Just what Ah need, sah. Yo' see Ah'll need de nails to drive in de shingles."

"But the lead nickels. What are you going to do with them, throw them away?"

"No, sah; Ah'm gwine to make sinkers foh mah fishing lines. Glory, hallelujah!"

THE SIMPLE LIFE.

A certain openness of mind to learn the daily lessons of the school of life; a certain willingness of heart to give and receive that extra service, that gift beyond the strict measure of debt which makes friendship possible; a certain clearness of spirit to perceive the best in things and people, to love it without fear and to cleave to it without mistrust; a peaceable sureness of affection and taste; a gentle straightforwardness of action; a kind serenity of speech —These are the marks of the simple life, which cometh not with observation, for it is within you.—Van Dyke.

Indian Proverbs.

The coward shoots with shut eyes.

No Indian ever sold his daughter for a name.

Before the paleface came there was no poison in the Indian's corn.

Small things talk loud to the Indian's eye.

When a fox walks lame, old rabbit jumps.

The paleface's arm is longer than his word.

A squaw's tongue runs faster than the wind's legs.

There is nothing so eloquent as a rattlesnake's tail.

The Indian scalps his enemy, the pale face skins his friends.

There will be hungry palefaces so long as there is any Indian land to swallow.

When a man prays one day and steals six, the Great Spirit thunders and the evil one laughs.

He who is false to present duty breaks a thread in the loom, and will find the flaw when he may have forgotten its cause.—S. Buonaventura.

A thousand empires rise,
A thousand empires fall;
And still the eternal stars
Shine over all.

At last the shining stars
Into the night are thrust,
And suns and systems pale
Go down to dust.

But let the universe
Back into darkness roll—
Two lights death can not dim,
God and the soul.

Pithy.

Pastor (revisiting his flock): "I can not help noticing many absent faces with which I used to shake hands."—Punch.

The Hard Road of Woman.

A little maid of seven summers asked her mother, says "Lippincott's Magazine":

"Mamma, if I get married when I grow up will I have a husband like papa?"

The mother answered with a smile:

"Why, yes, dear, if you get married you will have a husband like papa."

The little brow clouded. Then she asked: "If I don't get married will I be an old maid like Aunt Nelly?"

"Yes, dear, you would be an old maid," answered the mother, laughing at this rather complex question; "but whatever put such thoughts in that little head?"

But the child didn't laugh; she only looked grave, and said dejectedly:

"Well, no matter which way we go, it's a pretty tough world for us women, ain't it?"

Increase our faith and clear our vision, Lord:
Help us to take thee at thy simple word:
No more with cold distrust to bring thee grief,
Lord, we believe! help thou our unbelief.

"Where are you off to in such a hurry?" "To the doctor for my husband." "What's up with him?" "He tells me he has got hepatitis, dyspepsia, rheumatism, enteritis, gastritis, appendicitis, nephritis and cerebro-spinal meningitis." "Holy terrors! Where did he get all that?" "Why, a man induced him to buy a medical dictionary,and he's just begun reading it."—Pele Mele.

"It is Sweet to Die for One's Country"

By Rachel Henderson.

Ruth McGregor sat in the living-room of the parsonage, a most satisfying picture of healthy, happy youth. Though the room was plain, it was homelike and dainty in all its appointments; the fire gleamed with flames of crimson and blue; the plants bloomed contentedly in the south window, and Baby Ruth, when not in mischief, posed among them as a Raphael's cherub, the long tendrils of the smilax wreathing around her golden hair.

Ruth was happy; the coming of spring always gave her a childlike delight in mere existence, and that day the first bluebird had dropped like a bit of the sky on their tiny lawn, now a shimmer of delicate green, with here and there a crocus pushing up its bright head. The tulips in the garden borders were working their way through the dark earth with true Dutch obstinacy; in the apple tree a robin of critical spirit was selecting a site for a house—it must be far enough from the ground to be out of reach of that gray kitten, whose countenance was plainly of the criminal type, yet not so high that the young robins would be in danger of broken wings or spinal curvature if they should chance to disagree and fall out, as they often did—Dr. Watts to the contrary, notwithstanding.

For two years peace had dwelt in Granite, and Ruth had learned that while there is no bitterness like that which may be fostered in a congregation, there is no home so safe, so warm, as that which a minister's family finds in the hearts of his people.

But with all her happiness, there still lingered in her heart a very womanly love for a jaunt and a new frock, and now that Donald's sister was with them she was to have both; free from the care of husband, home, and baby, she was going on a pilgrimage to the shrine of her girlhood's divinity.

"You know, Alice," Ruth raised her voice above the hum of her machine, while she talked in her quick, self-interrupting way, "I never knew Eleanor was get-at-able until last summer; then there was always something to keep me at home. To tell the truth, when I first wrote to her I did not think her invitation so very cordial, but Eleanor was always a trifle stately, and she is a very busy woman. Anyway, I mean to go; I always adored her; you know, she was vice-regent of our D. A. R. Chapter. (Ruth, don't touch mother's lily.) Of course you don't remember her; you were in school; she lived with her uncle, Mr. Derwent."

"Oh, I remember," Alice tapped her lips reflectively with her thimble, "the tall, beautiful girl with the shining eyes, who always reduced me to infantile awkwardness and hopeless grammar. Did you know Mr. Derwent left absolutely nothing? Everyone thought him a millionaire."

"What a pity! Eleanor would have had some and it would have helped so much in her work. She was always giving. I went into the D. A. R for fun, but it meant unutterable things to Eleanor. Alice, will you take that child away from the coal-scuttle? I'm mixing this sewing dreadfully; Eleanor's frocks were always perfection. Eleanor loved her country the way I—the way some women love their husbands, but she was never tiresome about it; it wasn't so much that she talked, as that she lived. To be really scientific"—Ruth was the most unscientific of women—"I think it was hereditary; she was born during the Civil War; the first music she ever heard was martial music; they sang her to sleep with national airs; and the first thing she remembers was the draping of their house with crape when President Lincoln was shot."

"I should call that environment," said Alice.

"Oh, well, call it what you will, with most of us it is as much one as the other, and with some it is neither. Look at Ruth! there was never a miner among all her ancestry or acquaintances, yet I think I shall have to suspend the coal-scuttle from the hanging lamp. But as to Eleanor, I believe it was some strange influence born with her that made her leave her beautiful home for that half-civilized hill country; otherwise I can not understand it."

Alice stopped playing with the baby long enough to say with some surprise, "You did the same thing."

"Oh, no, Granite is a dear little town, and I came here for Donald's sake. It would have been just the same if he had been a 'butcher, a baker, a candle-stick maker.' I took up church work at first just for Donald's sake, and never pretended to be any better than that. It is different now; no one could live with Donald McGregor four years and not grow better; but Eleanor never would have cared for John Prentiss if it had not been for his work. Of course she loved him when she married him, but Donald taught me to love his work, while John Prentiss' work taught Eleanor to love him—and that is very different."

"And which way is the better, my wise sister?" asked Alice, with a faint note of anxiety beneath her smile.

"Oh, as to that, it all amounts to the same thing in the end, I suppose; only I do not believe Eleanor ever gets tired, or wishes she could have new china, or pretty clothes, or—"

"Books?" said Alice, slyly.

"Books! If ministers had as many dollars as they have books and magazines and papers and unsolicited pamphlets and circulars, they would never enter the kingdom of heaven. If you had seen the 'Foreign Missionaries' and 'Christian Statesmen' and 'Readers' Reviews' I took out of the storeroom the other day, with their backs all gnawed by mice, you would understand. Do you know, Alice, Donald once spent his last fifty cents for a book, and his salary was not due for two weeks, and what do you think it was?—'Widow Bedott Papers'! —because I had la grippe and was blue! I determined I would not laugh, and I just couldn't help it. But what I want the most of all when I am real wicked is to do just as I please; that, a minister's wife must never do, though I do when I am at Mrs. Wilson's. So that is the reason I long to go and see Eleanor's brave, beautiful face, and be made better. I can just fancy her up there among the hills, living in a quaint log house, moving like a queen among her mountaineers, a very gracious queen, of course."

Alice laughed. "You have certainly lost none of your imagination; but go, by all means. I am longing to know of this new Zenobia and her Palmyra in the mountains."

Next day the train sped away from the flag-station where she had alighted, and Ruth was left alone on the little platform with its weather-beaten shed. Hills and forests, forests and hills, everywhere, and the soft green of spring swelling upward to the deep blue of the sky. Beautiful—but the loneliness of it all! A meadowlark stirred by the roadside, then swept by with low flight and the poignantly sweet note that seems ever calling us to some lost paradise.

No sign of man's possession of the earth, except the yellow road that passed by her, dipped down into the valley, then climbed rough and stony to the sky. Presently she heard a horse's hoof-beats and the sound of wheels.

Turning, she saw an old-fashioned surrey which an elderly horse of philosophic mien was dragging up the hill so slowly there

Charcoal Removes Stomach Poisons

Pure Charcoal Will Absorb One Hundred Times Its Volume In Poisonous Gases.

Charcoal was made famous by the old monks of Spain, who cured all manner of stomach, liver, blood and bowel troubles by this simple remedy.

One little nervous Frenchman held forth its virtues before a famous convention of European physicians and surgeons. Secheyron was his name. He was odd, quaint and very determined. His brothers in medicine laughed at his claims. Thereupon he swallowed two grains of strychnine, enough to kill three men, and ate some charcoal. The doctors thought him mad, but he did not even have to go to bed. The charcoal killed the effects of the strychnine and Secheyron was famous. Ever since that day physicians have used it. Run impure water through charcoal and you have a pure, delicious drink.

Bad breath, gastritis, bowel gases, torpid liver, impure blood, etc., give way before the action of charcoal.

It is a really a wonderful adjunct to nature and is a most inexhaustible storehouse of health to the man or woman who suffers from gases or impurities of any kind.

Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made of pure willow charcoal, sweetened to a palatable state with honey.

Two or three of them cure an ordinary case of bad breath. They should be used after every meal, especially if one's breath is prone to be impure.

These little lozenges have nothing to do with medicine. They are just sweet, fresh willow, burned to a nicety for charcoal making and fragrant honey, the product of the bee. Thus every ingredient comes to man from the lap of nature.

The only secret lies in the Stuart process of compressing these simple substances into a hard tablet or lozenge, so that age, evaporation or decay may not assail their curative qualities.

You may take as many of them as you wish and the more you take the quicker will you remove the effects of bad breath or decaying meal. They assist digestion, purify the blood and help the intestines and bowels throw off waste matter.

Go to your druggist at once and buy a package of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges, price 25 cents. You will soon be told by your friends that your breath is not so bad as it was. Send us your name and address and we will send you a trial package by mail free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 200 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

seemed imminent danger of its slipping back whence it had come. A slender, careworn woman held the reins, and two little girls with bright hair and shining eyes were crowded on the seat beside her. Ruth stepped forward to ask the way to the parsonage, when the woman leaned out with words of glad welcome, and Ruth with swift sharp pain recognized the eyes and the smile of Eleanor Derwent.

Ruth was thankful for the ever-changing beauty of the scenery, for the whispered debate of the little girls as to which should sit beside her, a debate she ended by taking them both, bidding them call her Aunt Ruth. Anything was welcome that could hide the shock she had received. With stolen glances she tried to become acquainted with this new Eleanor; the bright hair still waved back from the temples and made fluffy little curls below the heavy braids, but it could not conceal how sunken the temples were, nor the blueness of the veins about them, nor the hollows in the throat, once so white and beautiful. The eyes were still bright, but there was in them at times the look of one who clings desperately to some failing support. Half unconsciously, Ruth smoothed her own well-rounded cheek as she brushed aside the hair the warm, moist wind blew across it, thinking as she did so, "And I thought my work was hard!"

But the color came into Eleanor's face as they talked, and her smile deepened into laughter. Her lips still had that pretty upward curve when a smile tried to escape, and the dimple still came to meet the smile. There was so much to talk of, as the old horse jogged on in his philosophic way, pausing to have a nibble of the roadside grass if he saw fit, or hastening to overtake a hay-wagon and bury his nose in its fragrant load, while from time to time he turned a wary eye to see if his mistress' hand might be straying toward the whip; but Eleanor had no wish to disturb his contemplations; for once she meant to loiter.

The woods were bright with the coral of redbud, and the glistening pearl of the dogwood; here and there were snowy drifts of bloodroot and anemones, and in the fence corners the ferns were pushing up their fuzzy caps. From the green dimness about them came the delirious love-song of the cat-bird, and the joyous, half-frivolous notes of the song-sparrow. A scarlet tanager dropped like a falling star from a tall pine tree and was lost in the forest. Once Eleanor stopped in a willow thicket where a little stream stirred the springing mint, and they listened to a yellow chat as he went through his melodious jesting and musical mimicry, until, carried away by the simple joyousness of life, they joined in the bird laughter and so silenced it.

The hills began to recede, the farm houses grew more frequent; poor, plain little dwellings they seemed, but the stir of human life is ever grateful when the night draws near, and the smoke curling up from kitchen chimneys, the gleam of a lamp here and there, gave Ruth a pleasant sense of coming cheer as she drew her soft wraps more closely about her, for the soft, white mist was beginning to wreathe in and out of the valleys. A last turn, a slight ascent, and Eleanor said, "We are at home, Ruth." There was a little constraint in her tone; all the nobility of her nature was fighting down the feeling of humiliation that a friend of the old time should see the home which in other days she herself would have deemed almost squalid.

Nobility conquered, and with a dignity as gracious as unassuming, she played her many parts of hostess, maid and cook, while a deeper beauty than that of her girlhood was in her face when, from his shabby cradle she brought her baby boy.

Ruth had known what it was to feel irritated when she had noted the shininess of Donald's coat beside the broadcloth of his city brethren, and therefore her spirit could bow before Eleanor's when the latter's gentle dignity showed no change as she introduced her husband coming in from feeding the horse and milking the cow. Where, Ruth wondered, had he learned those arts; they were not taught at Princeton.

But when they gathered around the supper-table, Ruth's depression vanished. By the softening light of the lamp and the woodfire, the faded carpets were an artistic monotone, the furniture showed no lack of polish, the skillfully mended curtains were filmy and white, and there seemed no incongruity between these things and the rare pictures on the walls, the dainty china on the table, or the talk, at times merry, at times earnest, that lengthened out the evening meal.

Little Marian looked up shyly, saying, "Aunt Ruth, aren't you glad you came to eat off these pretty plates?"

Eleanor glanced at Ruth, then laughed: "Really, Ruth, I can not use my china all the time, for my little maids, though very helpful, are very young, and I want them to have some of their mother's dishes when they are women. I value my mother's Canton teaset so much. Some day when John has time he is going to make me a plate rail. I have always thought this low-ceiled room with its queer windows had great possibilities. Now, my heirlooms are stored in the attic; once in a while, on stormy days, I bring them down and invite my little maids to tea."

Mr. Prentiss smiled as he glanced at his wife. "Did you know, Mrs. McGregor," he asked, "that 'some day' is Eleanor's panacea to heal all ills? Blessed be imagination! To some eyes this may seem a queer old room with dingy walls and inadequate windows, but to us it is an old colonial, 'done' in Pompeian red and Flemish oak, so we dust and polish with never a regret for distant shores."

"Do you mean," asked Ruth, "to remain here always?"

Eleanor answered quickly: "Yes; we put all our fortune in our country-seat, and we do not wish to waste our energy in moving from place to place."

"Some day," added Mr. Prentiss, "when the youngsters are ready for college, probably we rather expect to find a coal-mine or an oil-well on the place, though it will be rather a pity to spoil the garden."

It was fun for Ruth to watch the little girls put on tiny gingham aprons and help with the evening work, then hanging them each upon its own particular hook, go into mother's room to sing baby to sleep; finally, all their duties done, they put their rosy faces to be kissed and climbed the narrow stairs to the attic.

"Aren't such little things afraid to be alone?" she asked.

Marian heard, and turning said with a superior smile, "Why, Aunt Ruth, our sky-parlor is perfectly 'lovally'. We have all mother's toys and books, and her little desk, and if we want her, we just telephone down the pipe-hole."

"And," their mother added, with perfect gravity, "they tell me there is a fairy family living under the eaves by the window where the trumpet-vine climbs up."

At this a little torrent of laughter rolled down the winding stairs.

"I need not have pitied Eleanor; she is a happy woman," thought Ruth as she sank to sleep lulled by the solemn silence of the hills. But in the night she wakened, sitting up with a start and the watchful listening most mothers learn. Through the thin partitions came the sound of coughing, a racking, choking cough, again and again. Then Ruth understood, The words, "I want my children to have my china when they are women," came back with pathetic meaning; it was the yearning of the mother to be remembered and held dear even in little things.

The week went swiftly by, and Ruth, as she helped Eleanor about her household tasks or drove with her through country lanes or walked over rough mountain paths, listened with ever-deepening comprehension, and treasured up many things in her heart. The poverty and isolation in the life of John and Eleanor Prentiss faded into the background, and only its beauty remained. She no longer looked upon these mountain people with half-contemptuous pity, as men and women of low degree, but came to know them as elements of the awful force that is to raise or wreck our country. She began to see them with John's or Eleanor's eyes, as human beings torn by passion, struggling with temptation, borne down with sorrow, or glad with the gladness of living that filled her own heart—not mere hewers of wood and plodders in the field, but sons of God and immortality.

Still, when the last day of her visit came Ruth was glad to be awakened by the sound of rain; this day she could have Eleanor to herself—even Mr. Prentiss was away. There had been so many things to interrupt the long talks—the sewing-class, the cooking-class, the constant callers. Care-worn, stoop-shouldered women came for advice on every subject under the sun; comfortable farmers' wives stopped for a moment on their way to or from the post office; pleasant women came to the front door; obtrusive women thrust their way in at the kitchen. But to-day, surely, no one would venture over country roads in such weather. The birds were silent, and the chickens, with matted feathers and depressed countenances, stood in a row under the eaves of the woodshed; even the branches of the trees hung limp and hopeless.

Even as unregenerate Ruth stood congratulating herself on the prospect, a woman came up from the barn, a shawl pinned over her bowed head, a brimming pail of milk in her hand. "Oh, bother!" Ruth grumbled; "coming so early, too." The woman disappeared, then came out, and going to the woodshed called the mournful fowls about her while she spread their breakfast. This done, she gathered an armful of wood and started back to the house. The wind caught the shawl and whipped it back from the slender shoulders, and a lock of brown hair loosened and blew across her eyes. She raised her head to toss it away, slipping as she did so on the wet, uneven boards, and then Ruth saw that it was Eleanor. With a sudden impulse she dropped the curtain and turned away. Such tasks were cruelly unfitted to that delicate woman, but what could she say or do? She well knew that intrusive sympathy wounds more deeply than indifference; but in their comradeship that day there was a tenderness in Ruth's manner that Eleanor felt, as she felt the warmth of the spring air. But tenderness is dangerous even to the reticent, and that evening, when the two women sat alone by the fire, Eleanor's strength gave way. Ruth, beguiled into thoughtlessness by the magic of the firelight, had been giving an animated account of happenings at their old home, as Alice had related them, coming at last to the D. A. R. "I meant to bring our Regent's last letter to me," she said, "but of course she wrote to you. Why, Eleanor!" She sprang up, startled, for Eleanor's hands were pressed to her eyes, while tears were running down her flushed cheeks. "You poor, tired child," Ruth said, sitting down on the arm of Eleanor's chair, drawing the slight figure to her, and kissing her upon the forehead and hair. "You dear girl! Tell me all about it; or, if you don't wish to, don't. Just cry it out."

For a few minutes Eleanor did cry—cried as does a woman who, for months, has been fighting tears with smiles and brave words. Then she sat erect, while her eyes grew hard, and her lips took a bitter curve.

"Sit down, Ruth, and I will tell you. I must talk to some one, and there is no one here who would understand, except John, and I can not trouble him. Besides, I sometimes think he would not understand—we women are so queer." She made a pitiful attempt to smile. "Tell me, Ruth! Am I indolent, and careless and unpatriotic?"

"You? I think you are wearing yourself out for your country and these people, washed up into the nooks and crannies of the earth."

"Do you really believe that?" Eleanor asked, with feverish eagerness. "I came here because I loved my country; for the boys and girls in these 'nooks and crannies' go down to the cities, and as they are made or marred up here, they make or mar down there; and I want to stay, because I love the people, and they love us; but I am so tired. It is all such a wearisome problem, and I seem such a pitiful failure; then again, I have such a sense of injustice, of wasted strength, that I could cry aloud in bitterness and anger—not sorrow, but anger. That is the worst of all; I am growing suspicious and cynical, estranged from my own people, thinking they wish to patronize me, or spy out the poverty of the land. At first I did not wish you to come. Is it not shameful to sink to such feelings? But I am glad you came. It comforts me to know that you know about my little girls, if anything should happen." She caught her breath a little and again into her eyes came the look of one who, falling, catches at anything, no matter how frail it is. "It will be well with my baby," she went on, "for John will understand him; but I think fathers can only love their daughters, and can never really understand them."

Eleanor was silent a moment, her brows drawn with anxious thought; then she leaned back wearily in her chair and her clasped hands fell apart as if she gave up some struggle.

"I will tell you," she said. "You may think ill of me; perhaps it is cowardly to burden you with my troubles; I saw you drop your curtain when I was bringing in wood. I never do that when John is at home, but he is called away so often. It does not matter in pleasant weather, only I am not accustomed to it, and that makes a difference. Until last summer I had help—a tall, strong girl who seemed to revel in hard work. I taught her to read and sew. But last summer a member om the home mission committee visited us. It was the loveliest time of the year. Every one is rich in summer, and our little home, with its vines and fruit-trees must have been charming to a tired city man. Our garden is really wonderful; it is on a southern slope and John takes care of it, so our table was well supplied. Our little church was freshly cleaned and painted, and sweet with jars of wild roses. It is restful to sit looking through the open windows into the woods, hearing the bird voices laughing at our squeaky little organ and the hymns our choir attempted. It was funny to hear Mrs. Jamison, that tiny, meek-looking woman singing "All Saints," in her thin, high voice. I do not feel so now. I know the bitterness the longing, the bravery of the hearts under the faded clothes or the queer new frocks. I have learned that from such as these 'that noble army' was recruited, and I sing reverently: Oh Lord! to me may strength be given

"To follow in their train."

"The old hymns are food and drink to them. I could not wish one voice silenced. But I am wandering from my story. Our people are hospitable, and Dr. Brant was entertained by our most well-to-do farmers; then he went home and reported our church so prosperous it would be well to cut down our appropriation one-half, and it was done. I had to give up help, and also much work among the people; the days are no longer than when I had less to do. I try to be patient, but is it justice, is it common-sense, to let those whose strength is needed for other work wear out their lives in literal hewing of wood and drawing of water? At times I could fling their pittance back to them, so wicked have I become.

"Last Christmas the children talked of the turkey that would come flying through the snow, and we had not even a chicken; but Christmas eve a couple came to be married, the fee was a dollar, and after they were gone John went out to get the Christmas treat. Hardest of all, we can not help others as we did. I am no longer a member of the D. A. R. I could not pay my dues, so I resigned and sent back my pin." Eleanor's voice had grown strangely calm. "I received a letter from our regent, regretting that I had lost interest in our order. She thought that, of all women, a wife and mother should be most patriotic, and that a minister's wife would esteem it a privilege to use her influence in her country's service. So I ask you again, Ruth," Eleanor clasped her thin hands nervously while she leaned forward, "have I degenerated? Am I neglecting my opportunities, and is it only the insignia that makes the patriot? I am so tired that I can see nothing aright; I seem, lately, to be able to see nothing but my children. They used to repeat at our meetings, 'It is sweet to die for one's country.' It may be for men, for in the struggle they can forget every thing; but death can only be bitter to the mother of little children; above all other sounds I should hear my babies calling me. Have I not a right to my children? Am I altogether wrong?"

Ruth rose with an impulsive gesture, and kneeling by Eleanor's side, held the poor, trembling hands still in her own firm clasp. "Wrong, Eleanor! A failure! You?" she exclaimed. "There was never a woman of the Revolution braver or more patriotic, or"—oh wise little Ruth!—"more useful than you."

It was a new world they looked upon from the station the next morning; a world of sunshine and blue sky, of cloud shadows and billowy green hills, of perfume and bird music. Eleanor felt the change through every nerve of her sensitive body, and as thy heard the faint, far-off whistle of the engine, the sound that to modern ears has the same mournful undertone of separation and longing that of old was heard in the surge of the sea, she caught Ruth's hands, saying, "Ruth, please forget what I said last night. I was in one of my rainy-day moods; I must not yield so to the weather. I was wrong; I ought only to be enthusiastic about our life. It is such creative work, at the very heart and beginning of things. The summer is coming and I shall grow brown and fat. You know I come of a longlived race, and summer is glorious here in the hills. Now hurry, dear; goodbye, and come again!"

So Ruth left her, standing slender and erect with glowing cheeks and shining eyes, waving farewell from her realm of hills and forests.

Swiftly the summer sped on her way, seedtime changing to the ripening of fruits. All day the hot August sun had shone upon the little parsonage until it seemed to Eleanor as if the air lingered ever just beyond her lips, as if strength was visibly slipping from her fragile hands. Yet as sunset drew near there was a chill in the air, and Mr. Prentiss, before leaving her to go and comfort a dying man, lit a fire of pine cones, and fitted the cushions more closely to her, saying as he stooped to kiss her: "I am afraid you need me, Eleanor;

"Put your arms around me—
There, like that;
I want a little petting
At life's setting,
For 'tis harder to be brave
When feeble age comes creeping
And finds me weeping,
Dear ones gone,
Just a little petting
At life's setting:
For I'm old, alone, and tired
And my long life's work is done."

I wish the girls were home, for you will be lonely."

Eleanor held her hand tightly a moment, looking up into his face with a strange intent gaze, and answered slowly, "Yes, John, I think I shall be very lonely without you, but after all, it will not be very long. Please put baby in my lap before you go; no, he will not tire me; he will sleep. Be sure and tell Jane to send for more fruit for Henry, and don't be anxious, John; the wind has changed, and to-morrow will be cooler."

The baby, disturbed by being lifted, opened his eyes and smiled at his mother, then waking still more as she played with the soft hair on his forehead, talked in baby fashion and laughed gleefully when she uncovered the pretty white feet, and played, "This little pig went to market" with the tiny toes; then he nestled to sleep again, while his mother, holding in her thin hand the little feet that had so far to go, sat dreaming of his future as she gazed through the open door at the sunset. A neighbor stopped, saying, "I've got a letter and a package for you, Mrs. Prentiss. Smith thought you might like 'em to-night. Letters; newspapers can wait, for they're good most any time; but when your kinfolk have somethin' to say you don't want to wait."

Eleanor turned letter and package over and over, looking at postmark and address, guessing from whom they might come, then laid down the package to read the letter before the daylight faded. As she read her face flushed and her eyes filled. It was from the Regent of her D. A. R. Chapter, and its stately diction could not hide the tenderness that inspired it, or the humility of the woman who, putting aside all considerations of age and position, begged pardon for having so misunderstood.

"Our chapter has listened with eagerness and admiration to the account of your work, as Mrs. McGregor has written it, and by a rising vote has pronounced you true woman, true patriot, and begs you to accept the gift of life membership, and to wear, as earnest of your forgiveness of our ignorance the insignia which should never have left you." So the letter closed.

With trembling fingers Eleanor opened the little box and took out the pin whose wheel and distaff and stars had signified to her the duty and the beauty of a woman's life. She looked at her name engraved in it; she turned it that the firelight might shine upon it while it recalled the days of her girlhood. Then, with a sudden fancy, she pinned the pretty thing on her baby's gown. He stirred in his sleep, and with a sudden rush of tenderness she caught him up and held him tight in her arms, his warm plump body pressed to her tired heart, his little head with the damp curls nestled in the hollow of her shoulder. She could not give him up! She kissed the bright hair, the closed eyes, the white forehead. If only she might kiss those pretty curving lips!

Then suddenly the mother's lips were hot and dry no longer, and the flushed cheek was cool, though it rested against the warm soft one of the child.

So the father found them, the baby still asleep in his mother's arms, dedicated to patriotism by the mother's red blood that stained his white dress.

But as John Prentiss looked upon the face of his wife, his heart was comforted, for it was the face of one who had conquered, who in the last extremity had found no bitterness, but only that death for one's country is passing sweet.—The Interior.

Just Ask Dad.

Our family is the queerest one
I'll bet you ever see;
There ain't but one in all the batch
With a good quality.
The rest o' us have lots o' traits,
But all of 'em are bad,
An' if you don't believe me, why,
You jest ask dad.

There's sister Kate an' sister Nell,
Their fault is makin' breaks;
They ain't like pa a single bit,
Because they make mistakes.
They ought to have been better with
The trainin' they have had,
But if you don't believe me, why,
You jest ask dad.

Next comes my sisters, Bess and Sue,
With fault of too much style;
They seem to think o' nothin' else,
They talk it all the while.
They keep us in hot water with
Some fool, expensive fad,
An' if you don't believe me, why,
You jest ask dad.

Now last—not least—cames Bill an' me;
Fergettin' is our trait.
It ain't no habit we've acquired,
It seems to be our fate.
We all takes after ma, we do—
No wonder we're so bad—
An' if you don't believe me, why,
You jest ask dad.

The Red Reminder

Walter Freeman had lived in Welchville fourteen months, and this was his first invitation out in all that time. And it was from Ralph Stanley, too, the fellow who had just returned from Europe with a French tutor, and whose parents were the wealthiest, it was said, in the town.

Mrs. Freeman, smiling, took the dainty missive.

"At home, Tuesday evening, 6:30 o'clock. The Willows."

"Do you think my clothes are—"

"Suitable?" interrupted Mrs. Freeman, with a reassuring smile, noting the doubting expression on Walter's face. "Certainly, dear. Your black suit is just the thing. Do you suppose I can find them?" with more seriousness.

"I—they're in the closet," stammered Walter, blushing. "I hung them—"

"Didn't somebody's mother do that for her boy the nert morning after he got back from Lake Whitney? If I remember correctly the vest was behind the bureau."

"I—come to think of it, I guess you did," replied Walter, slowly. "But I will remember hereafter to put things in their place!"

"How are you coming on with your bookkeeping?" asked Mrs. Freeman, the evening before the dinner at the Willows, as Walter sat at the table busy with his entries. "It's pretty warm to be doing private work, but I suppose you're almost ready for the position at Cole's?"

"Very nearly. Mr. Hubbard says I'm doing finely. I wish I had some red ink," suddenly; "mine is completely out. I meant to get some this afternoon, but forgot it."

"I think Uncle John has some. It's on the lower shelf in the closet. Don't forget to return it."

"There!" an hour later. "It's so hot I don't believe I'll do any more. I can finish in the morning!

"I won't bother to take the ink back tonight—I'll just set it in the cupboard till morning."

He took up the ink and carried it to the kitchen.

Returning to the sitting room, Walter turned out the light and hurried to bed.

"I'll have to shut down that window!" He awoke in the night, and threw back the light covering. "Seems as though the mosquitoes are thicker than ever." Then, after closing the window, "I'll have to go down and get some camphor; my face is all eaten up. I'll be a pretty sight to-morrow!"

Groping along without a light, Walter found his way to the kitchen, and going to the cupboard took down the camphor bottle.

"I'll fix it so they won't bother me any more," and he completely covered his face and ears with the contents of the bottle in his hand there in the dark.

"It doesn't smell very strong," he remarked to himself, "but I guess it will keep the mosquitoes off—that's the main thing."

Walter closed the cupboard door and went to bed.

It was late when he awoke the next morning.

"What!" he exclaimed hurriedly, glancing at his face in the mirror. "I've—why, what is it?"

"Mother," he called, hurrying to the stairs. "Come here—quick! What is the matter with me?"

"Walter!" cried Mrs. Freeman, "Where have you been?"

"Nowhere."

"But what is it?"

"I don't know; I don't feel any different than usual. It's only my face—but that is awful!"

"Doesn't it pain you?" anxiously.

"No."

"Have you put anything on it?" and Mrs. Freeman closely examined Walter's face.

"Nothing—nothing except camphor. I got up in the night to put some on to drive off the mosquitoes; but camphor isn't red!"

"Where was it?"

"In the cupboard in the kitchen."

"Did you put your Uncle John's red ink back in its place before you went to bed?"

"No. I—I was going to this morning," stammered Walter.

"You put it in the kitchen cupboard, and you've gone and covered your face and ears with——"

"Not with red ink!" exclamed Walter in dire distress.

"It must be; nothing else could give that color. You don't know how you look, dear," and Mrs. Freeman couldn't refrain from laughing.

"Then I—I can't go—" Walter hesitated. "It can't be washed off; I know from the little I've got on my fingers at times—it has to wear off."

"I'm afraid, dear, you'll have to send regrets. You couldn't possibly go to Ralph Stanley's with the appearance you present."

"Oh, mother!" There was such a tone of bitter disappointment in Walter's voice. "And it's what I've wanted for months—a chance to get acquainted with folks."

The Difference.

Eight fingers,
Ten toes,
Two eyes,
And one nose.
Baby said,
When she smelt the rose,
"Oh, what a pity
I've only one nose."

Twelve teeth
In even rows,
Lots of dimples,
And one nose.
Baby said,
When she smelt the snuff,
"Dearie me!
One is enough." —The Companion.

"I know, dear; and if you only——"
"Hadn't been a slave to Not-have-a-place I could have gone. Do you suppose this will teach me—this horrid red—hereafter to put things where they belong?"

"I trust so, my boy."

And it did—effectually.—Southern Christian Advocate.

Bopeep's Lost Sheep.

Bright and early one morning Bopeep took her daily walk out to the barn. There were the cows and the horses and the dog, but where were the sheep? She looked and looked, but she couldn't find them anywhere. She went down to the meadow and called and called, but she didn't hear one little "Baa." Fido came and licked her hand, but he couldn't tell her where the lost sheep were. She came back to the house, looking very forlorn. Mother saw her and wondered what could be the matter. Then she thought what the trouble must be, and a funny look came into her eyes as she said:

Little Bopeep, she lost her sheep,
And didn't know where to find them;
Leave them alone and they'll come home,
Wagging their tails behind them.

So after breakfast Bopeep sat on the steps and waited.

She wondered what the funny look in her mother's eyes meant.

Suddenly there was a cloud of dust down the road. "There's my father and my sheep!" she cried, and she hurried to meet them.

Oh, how queer the sheep looked! Some one had cut off all their wool!

The dear little sheep of little Bopeep
Had left their coats behind them;
Then, shorn and sheared, they all appeared,
Without her going to find them!

Little Bopeep counted her sheep over and over. Yes, they were all there—Blackie, and White-nose, Smutty and Beauty and Bunty, and the others—every one had come back!

Then her father told the story of where they had been:

"We drove the sheep down to the creek and washed them nice and clean. Then the men helped me cut off their wool with these large queer shears. Snip! snip! When the wool was cut off we did it up in large bulky bundles and loaded it on wagons. Next it will go to the factory. There the wheels will turn round and round—whir! whir! work! work!—to spin the yarn into threads, to weave the threads into cloth to make a warm wool coat for my little girl."

Bopeep laughed and ran to tell her mother about it. The funny twinkle came back into her mother's eyes again, as she said:

Little Bopeep, to thank your sheep,
Some salt you'll have to find them.
They're not forlorn though sheared and shorn,
For they're wagging their tails behind them.

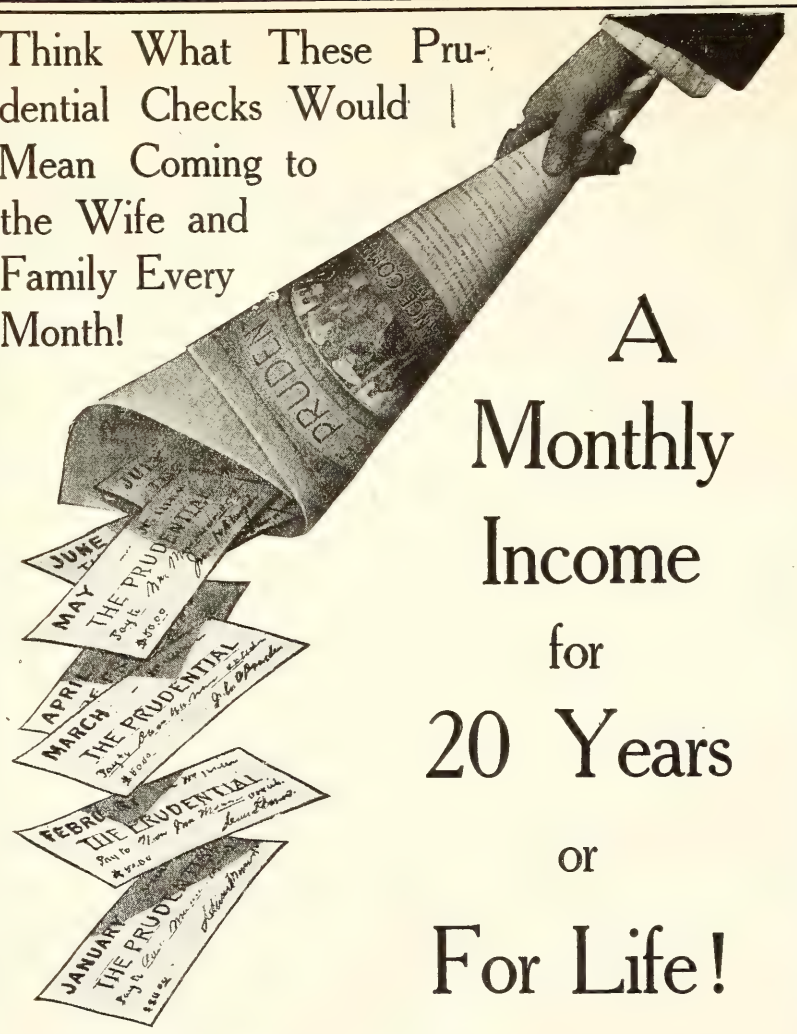
Think What These Prudential Checks Would Mean Coming to the Wife and Family Every Month!

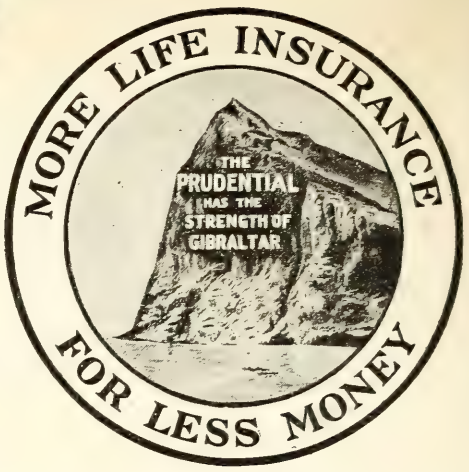


A Monthly Income for 20 Years or For Life!

The Prudential's

Very Newest Idea In Life Insurance

At age 30, for $167.35 a year, during your life, (a saving of $13.95 a month) your Family Will Receive after your death $50.00 Every month for 20 years, or $12,000 in all.
At slightly higher cost, the income would continue for life!



SUPPOSE your salary should permanently cease to-day by your death, what would your family do? What have you provided for them in its place? THE PRUDENTIAL has a new and perfect plan. Read this carefully. Say you are 30 years old; a monthly income of $50.00 a month for your family for 20 years after your death, or $12,000 in all to them, would cost you now only $167.35 per year, or $13.95 per month during your life. Think of what your family could do with a check of $50.00 sent them on the first of EVERY MONTH, EVERY YEAR for 20 years by The Prudential. If your wife should die within 20 years the money would still go to your children or other heirs for the remainder of the 20 years. Under this plan the safe Investment of your life insurance money is guaranteed by THE PRUDENTIAL. In other words you can practically arrange in advance yourself for the proper investment of your life insurance money through this new policy of THE PRUDENTIAL, instead of leaving it for your wife or children to do. These checks will be sent each month by THE PRUDENTIAL to your heirs and THE PRUDENTIAL has the Strength of Gibraltar to guarantee the payments.

The checks will supply the money necessary to buy food, clothing, rent and education to those whom you now support, and the money will come regularly each and every month for 20 years, mind you. At slightly higher cost, the income could be made to continue for life.

Give to every mother in America even a small income, and in the strength of her character, patriotism and devotion to home and family, she will keep the family together and the children at school. It is within your power to make her task as light as possible. Will you do it?

Send to-day for information of this wonderful new home-protecting policy. It will put you under no obligation and will give you a plan guaranteeing support and education for those most dear to you in case you should be taken away.

Fill out a postal card now, stating your age, occupation, and the amount you think you might be able to save each week or month towards this kind of a policy, and mail it to us to-day. You will be under no obligation and the information will be held strictly confidential.

If you are a single man, the policy may be taken on the Endowment plan, which will provide for a monthly income for yourself in later years.

Don't wait. Write to-day. Address Dept. 43.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one,

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

To our Subscribers:
Dear Friends:--

There are two matters I desire to call your attention to, in this communication:

First. We are making a special offer to new subscribers to The Christian-Evangelist, who would like to take a three months' trial subscription, beginning with this month, and ending January 1st, 1909. Full particulars concerning this offer will be found on page 1273, of this issue, and we are hoping that our present subscribers will be sufficiently interested in extending the influence of this paper, to send us several subscriptions of this kind. Why not select four of your good friends, get 25c from each of them, send us their names and addresses, accompanied by a $1.00 bill? We will send The Christian-Evangelist to the persons whose names you send in, for three months, beginning with this present month.

We will hope for a generous response to this suggestion to our subscribers, which will increase our present circulation several thousand.

Second. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST SPECIAL to the New Orleans Convention will leave St. Louis Wednesday, October 7th, at 1.50 p. m., before the next issue of this paper is out; therefore, this is the last call, and our friends who intend to go to the Convention with us will please write to us at once.

Yours sincerely,

W. Daviess Pittman

Business Manager.

MEN WANTED AT NEW ORLEANS

There will be special and important meetings at the New Orleans Convention, of all interested in Men's Organizations; and we are hoping for a large attendance of MEN.

It is especially desired that our Men's Associations, Clubs and Brotherhoods, send delegates to tell us what they are doing, and how they do it. We also urge "all men everywhere" to meet us at New Orleans, and "The Christian-Evangelist" booth will be the headquarters for men, where they may register and get a special badge indicating their interest in our Men's movement.

A Pioneer of the Northwest.

The first of the great wheat farmers of the Northwest is dead. Oliver Dalrymple was a pioneer of the Red River Valley in North Dakota. He deserves a place in the roll of honor of American men of energy. Going up there in 1875, when no one considered the land valuable for agricultural purposes, he broke and plowed 6,000 acres each year for a period of five years, and put this great farm into wheat. He became one of the wonders of the land. His energetic career was an inspiration to others, and a powerful incentive in the development of the wonderful resources of the great Northwest.

Quoting "The Nation."

The ministers of Springfield, Ill., have agreed that the riots were the natural result of the lax government of the city. We took this position at the time. "The Nation," commenting on the facts, says: "The American who prides himself so on his efficiency, administrative ability and shrewdness, has yet to grasp the fact that bad government is the most wasteful and costly of extravagances—to say nothing of its immorality."

A Victory by the Sea.

Governor Fort has won a notable victory for law enforcement, but it remains for the people of New Jersey to guard what he has won for them. After closing their places on one Sunday at Atlantic City for fear the Governor would send the militia to enforce the law, the saloonkeepers decided that further evasion might be dangerous. An organization including nearly all the local liquor dealers, resolved thenceforward the bars should be kept closed on Sunday until the legislature can be prevailed to enact a more liberal statute. The estimate that the people who were in Atlantic City on that Sunday had $150,000 more in their pockets and the saloonkeepers that amount less as a result of the closing, is a point worth noticing.

Coke and Drink.

"This company will not employ any one who is known to be a drinker." If drink unfits a man to make so common a thing as coke, how can it fit him to be a worthy citizen and a homemaker? A great Pittsburg coke company has decided that drink interferes with the efficiency of its employes, and it has made the ruling which we have quoted. The company does not claim to be a religious or a reform organization. But it has evidently found that the drink habit is very disastrous to the conduct of a big business. This is but another testimony from great corporations to the wholesomeness and benefit of abstinence. With a growing sentiment of this kind, it looks as if some day the state may find it wise and beneficent to abolish the saloon.

A Notable Abbey.

There is something pathetic in the outcome of the French government's attitude to the religious orders. One may have no liking for these, and yet feel a sympathy for them in the loss of their homes. Some of the monastic establishments have been sold, some converted into jails or factories, others taken down. One of the most famous has been purchased by an English nobleman, Lord Clifford, who will preserve it. This Abbey of Marmontier, by Tours, is said to be the cradle of Christianity in France. Here it was that St. Martin reigned as Abbot and Bishop. For centuries this abbey was to France what the Delphic Oracle was to Greece. Abbot Alcuin, a pupil of the venerable Bede there taught Charlemagne's sons, and his consort, surnamed the "Guardian of her People" lies buried there. That it now be preserved and become a museum is worthy its history.

Demonstration and Legislation.

We read frequently of the public demonstrations abroad in the interest of some kind of legislation. Of late we have heard much of the "suffragettes" in England. Public demonstration is common in that country. Whether in support of or in opposition to a government or a bill, it is no uncommon thing to see a hundred thousand people gathered in Hyde Park, London, and speakers addressing the crowds from twenty or thirty platforms. In America, for the most part, such exhibitions are witnessed only in the heat of election times. But we are taking note. What is stated to be the most remarkable demonstration given for the benefit of a legislature even seen at Indianapolis occurred last week on the arrival of the Methodist ministers from an adjourned conference at Shelbyville. Numbering more than two thousand, they assembled on the state house steps. In their prayers they besought that the legislature would grant county local option. Some ten thousand persons gathered in the afternoon. This was in response to the call of the Anti-Saloon League for "10,000 fighting Hoosiers who favor local option to be in Indianapolis to-day." The people came by special train and special interurbans. While the ministers prayed on the Statehouse steps, laymen thronged the Statehouse corridors singing "The Steamboat's Coming Around the Bend, Good-by, You Brewers, Good-by." Gov. Hanly looked on the throng with wonderment. He had told the Legislature that "thousands of men would be here to urge the claim of the people on you," but he said he expected no such demonstration as this.

Iowa Mulct Law.

Judge McPherson, of the United States Court, in a decision just rendered, declares the Iowa mulct law system under which saloons are now operating to be illegal. He says there has not been a lawful sale of liquor as a beverage in the state of Iowa for twenty-five years, and further holds that no person, under any circumstances, can lawfully sell liquor as a beverage in Iowa. Under this law saloonkeepers have been paying $600 annually as a tax, with the understanding that it legalized every sale of intoxicating liquors, and gave them relief from the old prohibitory law, which is still on the statute books. Some years ago the Legislature passed what is called "the mulct law," wherein it is provided that where 65 per cent of the voters in a county gave their written consent, the authorities of the county may allow the liquor trade to open a saloon without involving the saloonkeeper in the penalties of the law. In cities of 5,000 or over, the written consent of 51 per cent of the voters was sufficient to obtain for saloons the same freedom. With such an open door it is not to be supposed the liquor dealers were slow to get in their work. They have carried on a system of intimidation and boycott where that kind of thing was necessary while they have cajoled and bribed where that would do the work. They have organized the "Independent Citizens' League of Iowa," and are asking every candidate for any office to make a promise that he will use his best efforts to repeal the laws that are objectionable to the trade. This decision of Judge McPherson is one of great importance. The whole issue, independent of this, is thrown straight in the teeth of the Christian voters of the state.

Concerning Our Centennial Program.

The Centennial committee, during the past summer, has given a great deal of time and thought to the preparation of the program for our Centennial convention at Pittsburg in 1909. Few brethren can realize the magnitude of this undertaking. In the first place, it has not been a single program for a single convention that the committee has had to provide for, but programs for five simultaneous conventions. That is, there are to be five speakers discussing the same topic at five different places at the same hour. In the second place, suitable topics to cover the various phases of our movement had to be selected, and speakers assigned according to their supposed adaptation to treat these various subjects. This, it will be seen has involved not only a large amount of work, but of responsibility as well. If the committee has made no mistakes, it would be a most remarkable thing. Speaking in behalf of that committee, we can pledge only one thing, that it has striven, according to the best of its knowledge and ability, to serve the brotherhood and the great Cause we all love in the preparation of this program.

It so happens that the chairman of the general Centennial committee is the Editor of this paper, but what we are saying here is said in our editorial capacity. The chairman of the committee has felt from the beginning that its action should be subject to the revision of the general board of managers, which is to meet at New Orleans, and that our program should be regarded as only provisional until it met with the approval of that body. The majority of the committee, however, took the view that, as the committee was given power to act, and that the time was none too long for the speakers to make the necessary preparation, it would be better to regard the program as final, so that the speakers might begin their work of preparation at once. Since, however, there has been some dissatisfaction expressed with a few of the appointments in view of recent developments, we feel sure, without having had opportunity of consulting the members of the committee, that it will feel quite disposed to throw the responsibility on the general board of making any changes it may deem proper at its forthcoming meeting.

One thing more deserves to be said. The committee felt that in the Centennial celebration of a religious movement, whose chief characteristics are its freedom, its catholicity, and its supreme loyalty to Christ, it would be entirely proper to have the different types of thought which have been developed in that movement represented on the program, including the most extremely conservative element that counts itself a part of our general movement, and the most liberal, or progressive, that holds itself as loyal to Christ. It is for the representatives of the brotherhood in the general board of managers of the American Christian Missionary Society to decide whether this was the correct principle for the guidance of the committee, and how far the committee's application of that principle is modified by recent events. The committee never felt at liberty for a moment to confine its selection of men to those who would represent the views of the committee. It sought to act for the whole brotherhood. We believe this fact will be more apparent when the entire program is seen and studied. It required some concession on the part of every member of the committee to agree on this program. It is not expected that the speakers representing the different phases of thought among us will each seek to present or justify his particular point of view, but that all will be dominated by the great common aims and principles of the movement in their addresses. If the board of managers should, in its wisdom see proper to make any changes in the committee's report, the committee will accept the same without the slightest feeling, because the board undoubtedly has the right to make such change for what it deems proper cause. There is not the slightest occasion for any newspaper agitation on this subject, and all superheated appeals to passion are to be deprecated. We can be sound without being sour, and loyal to our plea without the use of unbrotherly epithets.

Let the brethren, therefore, possess themselves in patience and above all things, let them act in this matter with that dignity and breadth of vision becoming a great movement which is celebrating its completion of a hundred years of magnificent history.

Since the foregoing was written word has come to us that one of the provisional appointments of the committee that has caused most comments has declined to serve on the program in view of the objections which have been urged against him. But this does not change the principle stated in our article. Let the committee submit its report and the board, in an orderly way, pass judgment upon it.

THE SEARCH.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

I sought His love in sun and stars,
And where the wild seas roll,
But found it not; as mute I stood,
Awe overwhelmed my soul;
But when I gave to one in need,
I found the Lord of love indeed.

I sought His love in lore of books,
In charts of science' skill;
They left me orphaned as before,
His love eluded still;
Then in despair I breathed a prayer:
The Lord of love was standing there!

St. Louis.

In the Air.

We do not mean by this title the remarkable experiments of the Wright Brothers. It may be that their wonderful achievements are symptomatic of other things which just now seem to be in the very atmosphere we breathe. Nevertheless, our headline does not refer to any particular scientific fact though many of these might be presented in illustration of our subject. We refer to certain moral or religious sentiments which seem to be uppermost in the minds of the people generally, and especially those who think earnestly upon current problems. What is meant by "Modernism"? It is something that is in the air, which is just now having a predominating influence in religious circles. Probably it would be correct to say that Modernism has its origin in the Laboratory; in any case in the University. It is the product of education; it is a resultant from the hard facts which come out of scientific investigation. What it stands for may be right or it may be wrong. It is by no means certain that it can be trusted all the way through, for science itself must continue to walk cautiously, as there are many things still far out of the reach of even the most earnest and intelligent quest.

Still, it must be confessed that there is a predominant influence in the air which requires a recommitment of nearly all our conclusions to a new test. This is the origin of the present critical investigation as regards the Bible. There is nothing especially new in the modern contention. From Celsus down to the present time there has scarcely been a new objection made to Christianity. Over fifty years ago Dr. Colenso published nearly all the objections and difficulties which have since been so persistently paraded by what we call the "higher critics." But it remained for the latter part of the nineteenth century to so accentuate the higher criticism as to make it practically atmospheric in its influence. For some time it was almost an epidemic, but recently there has been a subsidence which shows a decided reaction with respect to the importance of the subject. This fact is also worth noting. The predominance of any particular thing in the atmosphere does not usually continue for any great length of time, any more than a high pressure in the physical atmosphere continues for a long time. Nearly all important movements or trends in thought have their day, when they are as much in the air as rain is or any other physical condition when this is the predominant influence. But the law of action and reaction prevails in these things just as in everything else. No one need be alarmed because an atmospheric condition indicates a storm period. These periods are as necessary as the periods of calm. The trouble is that some people are silly enough to imagine that we shall never see the other end of these periods. So as respects the agitations of our social, scientific and religious atmospheres. The rise and fall of the barometer are just as necessary in these as in the physical atmosphere. He is extremely foolish who imagines that we shall never see the other end of moral or religious storm clouds that may be sweeping over us.

This brings us to say that truth does not fear agitation. It may be crushed to earth, but it will rise again. In the furnace through which it is compelled to pass it will be refined and will shine all the more brilliantly when the dross is consumed. No one ought to desire anything to remain that is not worthy. The whole struggle of life is to attain to the best. Death itself is often on the road to the highest, and it is by no means certain that our upheavals in the religious world are even generally for evil. Doubtless some evil will come out of any conflict, but conflict is the law of progress. We can not even walk without meeting opposition. Unless there was something to oppose the foot that steps forward, it would be impossible to take the next step. Still, it is undoubtedly true that many weak souls become discouraged and cast down because here and there the air is full of contrary elements, and even storms break forth at different points and rage for a while. If we could understand the reason of these storms, and that they will last only until their purpose is fulfilled, we should then be encouraged rather than cast down by their appearance. There need not be, therefore, any unnecessary alarm because of present conditions in our religious atmosphere. These conditions all point to a better time coming. They indicate a new day dawning when we can sing with the poet:

"How calm and beautiful comes on
The stilly hour when storms are gone!"

The Call of the South.

"The South calls to you; it calls with deep earnestness, come home." In some such words the editor of a great paper devoted to manufacturing interests closed an address recently before the Southern Society at Boston. They are, of course, words directed to a special class—Southern men in the North. Mr. Edmonds pointed out that 9 per cent of the white natives of the South are living in other parts of the country, and that while the South has received, according to the latest available figures, 758,136 white natives from other parts of the country, it has lost to the North, East and West, 1,347,121 of its own native whites, showing a loss of over half a million more than it received. The reason why so many of its natives left the South is that in former years they could not find opportunities to satisfy their ambitions. It is estimated that since the civil war 2,500,000 Southern-born people have left the South. But now there is another call of the South. Once it was to ease and plenty, the estate of a gentleman and planter. Then came another call—the stern call, to which thousands responded with alacrity, to enroll in the ranks of the gray-coated men. When the issue was ended the South was bleeding and bare. The exodus had to follow. But there came the period of recuperation; the development in recent years has been noteworthy; yet the opportunity for future development is more noteworthy. It is estimated that the South could support a population far greater than the 86,000,000 that live within the confines of the Atlantic and Pacific, the Great Lakes and the Gulf. Massachusetts has 350 persons to the square mile, but the South only thirty. Yet the potentialities of the South are very great.

A few significant facts as to what has been done recently may be stated. Forty-five per cent of all their public revenues are expended by the Southern people upon education; they have increased their school revenue $11,590,000 in the last five years; 650 public school houses have been established in the same period, while 120 institutions of higher learning have been revived or established. The percentage of illiteracy among whites has been reduced from 25 per cent. to 15 per cent and among the colored race from 85 per cent to 45 per cent.

So the South sends forth another call. It tells you that there is in the making a new South, and it says, "Come, we want men." On every side Southern business men are calling for men and money, but especially men with the stamp of America on them. Here they see a solution of three of the great problems of the South—the industrial, the racial and the educational.

But there is another problem, and of this we do not hear so much. It is the problem of the highest type of men. The South may draw many of her own sons back; she may welcome even alien immigration. But if the wisdom of the world shall lead to ignorance of God she may not save herself. The people of the South are not naturally an irreligious people. There is no part of the land where religionism has such a strong hold. But it is a religious immobility rather than an aggressive Christianity. An inherited faith satisfies, and leads to little inquiry about one's neighbor unless denominational prejudices be aroused. The real call of the South to-day is one that is unexpressed.

We are the people to meet the call.

It might not seem so, however, were we to judge by what we have achieved in a hundred years of history. Think of Florida, with only one strong Christian Church, and only one other that does not receive mission fund support. In this state we number less than one-half of one per cent of the population, while in Georgia, where we have some strong churches, there is only one Disciple to every two hundred of the population. In Tennessee there are but thirty-five ministers who serve one church only. We number less than ten thousand all told, in Alabama, and not one-third of these are co-operating. Such are some of the conditions. In other columns of "The Christian-Evangelist" preachers of the South have told us some of the reasons for these conditions, and have pointed out some ways of betterment. Let us learn the lesson of the past. We have said that we are the people to meet the call. We have the greatest religious plea that can be presented. But the measure of its success will depend somewhat upon the spirit in which it is put before the people, and especially a people controlled by a pride of race and religion. The chief reason, perhaps, why we are so weak in the South to-day is because a legalism and narrowness was injected into our movement that made many men zealots but not apostles of a winning Savior. Their peculiar plea was to them of greater importance than the spirit of the Master. Fighting sectarians, they became sectarians themselves. The lamentable fact to-day is that while many of our leaders of the South are free from these shackles of the past and are calling for ministers—consecrated, educated and with the broader vision that is the real heart of our plea, there is a tendency in other parts of the country to revert to an overemphasized individualism which is really the backbone of anti-ism.

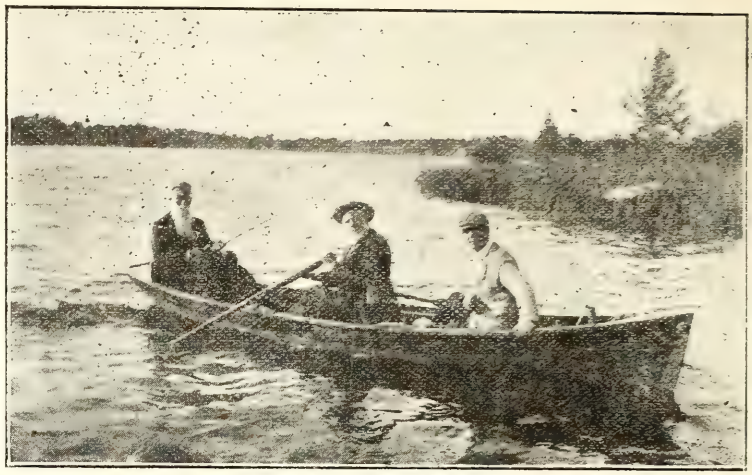
Notes and Comments

"Prof. Willett claims that his views on miracles represent the scholars of to-day on that subject. Is this your understanding? M."

It is not our understanding. No doubt his views do represent a certain class of scholars, or school of thinkers but the great leaders of thought in the various evangelical bodies hold to a very different view. They accept, without question, the miraculous element of the Bible, including the virgin birth of Christ, his unique sonship, his sacrificial death and his resurrection from the dead. In fact, Christianity has never made any progress in the world except by men who have held to these great fundamental facts, with all the miraculous which they involve. More than that, the church is never going to get away from the miraculous. It can not do that and hold to the Christ of the New Testament. There is, we should say, in scholarly circles a decided reaction against the tendency which manifested itself a few years ago to get rid of the miraculous at all hazards. The feeling is growing that "there is more in heaven and on earth than is dreamed of in our philosophy," and men are less ready to deny the possibility of what they do not understand. Long after the schools of thought that balk at the miraculous have "had their day and ceased to be," the Church, resting secure on its own divine foundation, will go singing on its triumphant way, trusting in an omnipotent Savior who conquered death and brought life and immortality to light in the gospel.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Our readers are expecting little more in this department for awhile than a personal message from the Editor. It is with great gratitude that we announce that the worst of what has been a very painful illness seems past, and that unless some unforeseen complication sets in the period of convalescence is at hand. While the recovery is likely to be slow, it is probable that it will be far less painful, so that it will not be impossible to do more work without retarding our convalescence. These personal words are justified by the large number of inquiries which continue to come to the office concerning our condition. For these letters of sympathy and of kind appreciation we shall never cease to be grateful. The assurance that brethren everywhere were praying for our recovery has touched us deeply and has given us confidence that the Lord has some work for us yet to do. Nothing else seems to us worth living for than helping in the extension of Christ's kingdom among men. It has been our effort for years to entirely subordinate all personal and selfish considerations to that great work. It seems now that it will be easier for us to do that in the future than ever before. We are sure that what the church and kingdom of Christ need most in order to their success is just this whole-souled and unselfish service on the part of those who claim to be his followers. It is not too much for Him to ask of us, nor is it too great a sacrifice for us to make for Him who loved us and gave Himself for us. Once we yield ourselves wholly to His control He will accomplish in us and through us things of which we do not now so much as dream. May His love so purify us and so unify us that we may become vastly more effective in spreading His kingdom among men!



Off for the Fishing Grounds.

In thinking of the New Orleans convention and praying for its success, one thing has occurred to us which might prove helpful in promoting the unity and welfare of the brotherhood. If that convention, by special resolution, should appoint a large committee of perhaps not less than ten or twelve of the wisest men of the brotherhood as a committee on the State of the Cause, to study thoughtfully the condition and needs of our cause the coming year and make report at our Centennial Convention, it seems to us it could not fail to prove helpful. What we need at a time like this is wise counsel. The great body of the brethren want to do what is right, if they know what that is. But many are misguided, and are as sheep without a shepherd. When the best people of a city govern it, it is well for that city. When any religious movement is guided in its course, under God, by its best and wisest men, it is well for such a movement. There ought always to be some way by which such counsel of such men could be brought to bear on the whole body. There was never a time in our history when there was greater need for wise counsel than at the present time. We pray that the New Orleans convention may furnish opportunity for the brethren to get together and take counsel with each other for the best interests of the cause which lies on all our hearts.

DISCIPLES AND THEIR CENTENNIAL

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. POWER

What shall I do for the Centennial? Preach about it. Get a hundred copies of the Declaration and Address and place them conveniently in the church. Have a sign, "Take one and leave a dime," and give the people a chance to get this remarkable document. Then tell them something about it.

The year of 1909 will be a year of centenaries. Among the men who first saw the light just a century ago, in 1909, were Mendelssohn and Chopin, Darwin and Cyrus McCormick, Poe and Tennyson, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Lincoln and Gladstone. The most important event in the religious world was the issue of this document. It was a sort of new declaration of independence, written just thirty-three years after Thomas Jefferson prepared his immortal address to the nations. It was written in a little upper room in a farm house in Washington county, Pa., by a Presbyterian clergyman, and a group of a score of people assembled one August day in a log house near by and approved it. Deploring the tendency of party spirit among Christians, and the enforcement of human interpretations of God's Word in place of the pure doctrine of Christ, it is resolved, "That we form ourselves into a religious association under the denomination of the Christian Association of Washington, for the sole purpose of promoting simple evangelical Christianity, free from all mixture of human opinions and inventions of men." It expressly affirms: "This society by no means considers itself a church, nor does it assume to itself the powers peculiar to such a society." It is addressed "To all that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, throughout all the churches."

This address pleads for the restoration of pure, simple, original, evangelical Christianity as exhibited on the sacred page, without attempting to inculcate anything of human authority, private opinion, or invention of men, as having any place in the constitution, faith or worship of the Christian church, or anything as a matter of Christian faith or duty for which there can not be expressly produced a "Thus saith the Lord," either in express terms or approved precedent. It considers the sad divisions then existing, and the baleful effects in angry contentions, enmities, excommunications and persecutions. It sets forth the object of the Association "To come firmly and fairly to original ground and take up things just as the apostles left them, that, disentangled from accruing embarrassments of intervening ages, they might stand upon the same ground on which the church stood at the beginning." That is, the proposition was to begin anew at the beginning, to ascend at once to the pure fountain of truth, disregarding all declarations of popes, councils, synods, assemblies, traditions, perversions and corruptions, and work not a reformation of the church as sought by Luther, Calvin or Wesley, but the complete restoration to its original ideal purity, perfectness and power. "The cause we advocate is not our own peculiar cause," declares the paper, "nor the cause of any party, considered as such; it is a common cause, the cause of Christ, and our brethren of all denominations," and asks: "Dearly beloved brethren, why should we deem it a thing incredible that the church of Christ, in this highly favored country, should resume that original unity, peace and purity which belongs to its constitution and constitutes its glory?"

The handful of people that constituted "The Christian Association of Washington" have grown to 1,300,000 and have thousands of churches in this land and other lands, and missions in all the regions of the earth to-day. They stand for the same things as in the beginning.

1. They make a plea for the restoration of primitive Christianity. Others have sought a reformation. The Campbells and their co-workers aimed to restore in faith, spirit and practice the Christianity of Christ and the apostles as found on the pages of the New Testament; not to recast any existing creed, or reform any existing religious body, but to go back of all creeds and councils, sects and schools since the days of the apostles, and take up the work left by inspired men and carry it forward. For existing evils they claimed the remedy is to return to the beginning and build anew upon divine New Testament foundations. To believe and to do none other things than those enjoined by Jesus and the apostles they felt must be infallibly safe. The word of Christ, the body of Christ, the spirit of Christ as in the beginning—this is the plea of the Disciples of Christ.

2. They plead for the union of Christians upon original apostolic foundations. They believe that as in the primitive days there was one spiritual brotherhood, "one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all," there should be one to-day; and as nothing was the basis of that primitive union but the common teaching of Christ and the apostles, so nothing is essential to the union of Christians to-day but the apostles' teaching; and nothing is essential to the conversion of the world but such union and co-operation of the people of God. They believe that sectarianism is the curse of the church; that the millennium will never dawn on a divided Christendom; that the kingdoms of this world will never become the kingdom of our Lord so long as our sinful and foolish divisions prevail; that millions of money are wasted and thousands of souls lost and the heathen made to stumble, and God's name to be blasphemed by the differences, controversies and conflicts among the Lord's people; that the teaching of the apostles is the only and all-sufficient means of uniting all the people of God; and that the union of Christians with the apostles' testimony is all-sufficient and alone sufficient to the conversion of the world to Christ; and with the restoration of original, evangelical, apostolic, New Testament Christianity, its doctrine, its ordinances and its fruits—they humbly and confidently believe will come the answer of the Redeemer's prayer that his people may be one that the world may believe.

3. They make a plea for the rejection of human creeds and restoration of the original creed in place of all human substitutes. They would stand strictly upon the original Protestant platform, "the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible." They affirm the sacred scriptures as given by God answer all purposes of a rule of faith and practice and a law for the government of the church, and human creeds and confessions springing out of controversy, instead of being bonds of union, tend to division and strife. Bible names for Bible things. "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent." The divine creed for all human creeds.

Peter confessed, "Thou art the Christ the son of the living God," and Jesus declared: "On this rock I will build my church." Peter's declaration is the only apostles' creed, the divine New Testament creed, the statement that must ultimately be the universal creed of the universal church. Greatest proposition in the universe is this proposition, one that shall stand when the heavens and the earth shall pass away. Martha said: "I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God that should come into the world." John declares: "These things are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, and that believing you might have life through his name." Paul commands: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ"; "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." The apostles preached "Christ," earnestly testified "that Jesus is the Christ," determined not to know anything but "Christ and him crucified," and when men heard, believed and would confess faith, they said: "I believe that Jesus is the Christ." Upon a person, not a system, faith centers. Upon a divine person, not on a body of human speculations, the church is founded. "What think you of Christ?" is the great question. "Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God" is the great answer. "On this rock I will build my church," is the great oracle. Upon a divine Being, not upon a book, statement or series of propositions, but himself, Christ established his church. Jesus is the creed of Christianity, the creed of the churches in Judea, Samaria, Corinth, Ephesus, Rome; the only article of faith in the creed of inspired men and of churches established by inspired men. All other creeds stand in the way of the peace, union, co-operation and triumph of the followers of the Son of God.

4. This is a plea also for the original names for the church and the followers of Christ. "The disciples were called Christians first at Antioch." Not only is it scriptural and right that the Lord's people should be known by his name, but human names are divisive and wrong. "Every one saith, I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you, or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." 'If any man suffer as a Christian let him not be ashamed, but let him glorify God in this name."

Only under the names found in the New Testament will the great body of believers become united. "I pray you leave my name alone," said Luther, "and do not call yourselves Lutherans but Christians." "Would to God all sectarian names were done away," exclaimed Wesley, "and that we all might, as humble, loving disciples, sit down at the Master's feet to read his word, imbibe his spirit and transcribe his life into our own!" As the bride of Christ, the church should wear the Bridegroom's name, not the name of the Bridegroom's friend, John the Baptist, nor that of the Bridegroom's servants, Luther, Calvin, Wesley or Campbell. Party names perpetuate party strife. Enough it is to be a Christian, and the only name in death, in judgment, in eternity will be the name Christian. "His name shall be in their foreheads." So we would persuade men to be Christians, simply Christians, and have all the King's people wear the King's name.

5. These people plead for the primitive method of making Christians. They would give to inquirers scriptural answers to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" Sinners in time of revival are bidden to pray, to stand up to be prayed for, to sign cards expressing their willingness to become Christians, and are often kept waiting, seeking, in doubt as to their acceptance. Disciples say to the unbeliever, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved," and preach the word of the Lord unto him that he may believe. They tell believers crying under conviction, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." They instruct penitent believers: "Arise and be baptized, calling on the name of the Lord." They assure those who thus believe, repent and obey that their past sins are pardoned, as our Lord promised, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." They exhort those who have entered the Kingdom to "continue steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, and fellowship, the breaking of bread and in prayers"; to add to their faith, to grow in grace.

6. Disciples stand for the ordinances in their original and unquestioned New Testament integrity. They read the word and do the thing. Concerning baptism: "Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee and was baptized of John in the Jordan," and straightway "coming up out of the water the Spirit descended upon him." John was baptizing at Enon, "because there was much water there." "They went down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptized him, and when they came up out of the water," etc. "We are buried with Christ, planted in the likeness of his death and raised in the likeness of his resurrection." So we go to the water, go where there is much water, go down into and come up out of the water, are born of water and of the Spirit." And this is done not to unconscious little ones, but intelligent, believing men and women who would become subjects of the King. And they exhort men to obey this commandment, as Peter commanded on Pentecost, "for the remission of sins." The Lord's Supper they celebrate on every first day of the week, according to the practice of the primitive church. "On the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them."

Great changes have come in these one hundred years. Old doctrines have shifted. Strongholds of error have surrendered to the onward sweep of Christian thought. Creed authority is no longer paramount. Assent to a human system of opinion is no longer essential to admission to the churches. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes. Vices of sectarianism are deplored; the union sentiment has grown. The great central truth of the Messiahship and Sonship of Jesus; faith in him as a divine person over against faith in human systems; obedience to him as King and Lord over against obedience to human authority; trust in him, love toward him and loyalty to him as the bond of fellowship among the people of God, we see recognized more and more in all lands. How much has the Declaration and Address to do with these things?

HEART'S DESIRE.

By William A. Quayle.

As for me,
May I be sung to
By the sea;
And my soul,
Let it be clung to
By life's whole.

For my brain,
Let it be talked to
By God's rain.
My life's mart,
Let it be walked through
By God's heart.

And for me,
Let me be sung to
By God's sea.
Still for me,
Let me be clung to,
Lord, by thee.

OUR WORK IN THE SOUTH

HOW CAN WE MAKE IT MORE EFFECTIVE?

By J. T. Boone.

Send preachers—the best—both evangelists and pastors, thoroughly equipped, supported.

Jacksonville, Fla.

By R. M. Giddens.

Give it a fair chance and it will succeed well in the South. South of Tennessee our cause is very weak. We have few churches and they are generally small and poor. The churches are not able to support preachers like the states do further north, and our preachers have but little of the pioneer spirit in them. Preachers like a large salary better than a small one. Preaching has become a profession rather than a calling. We can become much more effective if our preachers go pioneering. Till then our cause will not grow. How to restore that spirit is what I hope you will teach us. If we had enough money to support preachers in the South as they are supported in the states where we are numerous we would flourish equally well here.

Chattanooga, Tenn.

By Howard T. Cree.

Let missionary boards pour their strength into the growing towns, all cooperating to establish the work and put it on a permanent basis. A closer articulation of our various boards will make this program feasible.

The towns of the South are growing rapidly, but much of our effort has been spent in the rural districts leaving the towns and cities untouched. Now is the time to capture these centers. Better ten hundred dollars in one town than ten dollars in a hundred towns.

Our need of broad-minded, spiritually-cultured, well educated men is greater than our need for money. With the right kind of men the other things will be forthcoming. Give us more strong men and men who will stick.

Augusta, Ga.

By Richard W. Wallace.

"How can we make more effective our work in the South?" I wish I knew! I have been asking myself that question for a number of years.

However, I offer one or two suggestions.

1. We can make our work effective by getting more of our able evangelists to come south and conduct revivals in the more prominent churches. They greatly strengthen our cause. The work of Allen Wilson and Herbert Yeuell in Atlanta confirms this statement.

2. Our work will be made more effective by getting more Disciples in the South to take "The Christian-Evangelist!" I do not say this because I am writing to you. I sincerely wish this great paper went into every home in my congregation. It enriches the spiritual life, gives a wider outlook, cultivates the missionary spirit.

Valdosta, Ga.

By James T. McKissick.

There are four things I could emphasize:

1. Co-operation. Congregational independency has gone to seed in some sections of the South. There should be a closer alliance, an increasing fellowship in the Lord's work.

2. Consecration. One reason why the church is like Samson with his locks shorn, powerless and poverty-stricken, is because of the lack of personal purity, brotherly love and ardent zeal, characteristic of the early church.

3. Concentration. Often we storm a citadel, capture it, then abandon it. Our victories should be followed with permanent possession.

4. Preaching the Word. The gospel should be proclaimed fully, lovingly, skillfully and constantly.

These are among the necessary things for the conquest of the South and, in fact, of the world.

Nashville, Tenn.

By J. J. Castleberry.

While a magnificent work, in the face of adverse conditions, has already been accomplished in the South, it is yet true that to the earnest observer there is great need for increased effectiveness.

By what means may this result be brought about?

First, by encouraging and developing a native ministry.

It is true many of our noblest and most successful workers came from other sections. But it remains an indisputable fact that for permanence and real effectiveness we must depend in the main upon those who are bound by blood and tradition to the South. Ordinarily the imported preacher does not come to stay. And if he does the offer of larger material support as also larger visible results from his labors in other sections, prove so fascinating as to win him away from us. Thus many churches are left shepherdless each year. On the contrary when young men of our own soil consecrate their lives to the ministry, and then are educated here, the ties are so strong as almost to preclude their emigrating to other and more inviting fields. They say with Ruth, "Entreat me not to leave thee . . . thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; where thou diest I will die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if ought but death part thee and me." This emphasizes the imperative demand for a better maintenance of our own educational institutions. We must equip and sustain these schools of our own section.

Second, by concentrating our efforts in strategic centers.

While it is, of course, right to evangelize, as we have done, the rural communities, yet is it not wrong, both in principle and policy, to leave the work in these places to scatter and die? It is ever after harder to get a sympathetic and responsive hearing in these communities than if we had never entered. Should we not enter central and populous points, establish churches and then maintain them? These churches would thus become radiating centers of gospel light and truth to all the regions round. This seems to me to be more sane and practical than so much promiscuous and scattered effort.

Thirdly, by a closer and more genuine co-operation of the churches in given sections.

The integrity of the congregation, like that of the individual, should certainly be maintained, but have we not become too individualistic? In getting away from ecclesiasticism have we not swung to the opposite extreme and thus become ultra-congregational? This I believe has been a serious hindrance to our work in the South. It has tended to isolation and, therefore, prevented the truest and most vital fellowship among the churches and workers.

These things, it seems to me, practically applied, would contribute to a larger effectiveness of our work in the South.

Union City, Tenn.

By Claude E. Hill.

The Editor of "The Christian-Evangelist" has requested me to answer briefly the above question. I shall begin by saying that, perhaps, in no section of the country, all things considered, is our cause making more satisfactory progress than in the South. But while this is true and a matter of great satisfaction, it is also a fact that our work can be done more effectively and on a larger scale if those who have it in hand will give more attention to the evangelization of the cities, the growing towns and centers of influence and population. Our brethren of the South have in the past directed their efforts mainly to the planting and sustaining of churches in the country. The cities either have not been entered, or the work has ben undertaken on a too meager basis. The result, inevitably, has been that as a people our influence is quite limited.

The most successful, the quickest and most profitable method of establishing ourselves in any state or territory is to plant churches and sustain them in the cities. In the South, particularly, we began at the wrong end. The old policy is gradually being given up, but by some rather reluctantly. Our work could be made more effective if all over the South efforts were made to plant churches in the towns and cities.

2. We need a college located at some point accessible to the states of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi. To evangelize the South we need well equipped men and our best chance to get men lies in training them in a school of our own, and in the territory where their work is to be done. If we had a distinctly Southern college two young men would enter the ministry where one enters now. It matters a great deal if a man is thoroughly acquainted with the people with whom he labors. While it is true that sectional feeling and differences are passing away, still it is unquestionably a fact that any man can only be and do his best when he is in sympathy and feels himself on common and familiar terms with those to whom his message is delivered. Some will deny that this is true, but I have seen some good men fail in certain localities simply because they either did not know, or knowing, did not care for the ideals and ideas of the people.

3. Our work can be made more effective in the South by putting more effort into distinctively evangelistic work. Our Southern churches are just beginning to learn the value of well planned and persistently conducted evangelistic campaigns. We have too long suffered from the pumped up, five-day protracted meeting habits. It is safe to say that a great deal of time and money has been squandered, both by churches, and by state missionary societies, in holding those meetings, poorly planned, and closing about the time interest begins to develop. Our folks in the South—and a more loyal and liberal people do not live—are breaking away from these customs and we are coming now to number some of our greatest churches as among those of the South. It was a Southern church that this year broke all records in the offering for home missions. The South is all right, brethren, even if a little slow and conservative. Give us a few more years and a little more money and we will make the entire brotherhood feel like singing, "I wish I was in Dixie land."

By Howard J. Brazelton.

It is understood that what is said in answer is from the standpoint of one whose sympathies are with this work and who is earnestly laboring for its advancement.

1. More capable preachers and fewer revivals. This is not to say that the preachers we now have are not capable and loyal; for, as a class they will measure up in ability and consecration with any in the brotherhood. Some of them could be occupying larger places. But we need more such men who are willing to become fixtures in this Southland, and with patience develop the work. At present it can not be said they would preach for the largest and wealthiest church in the place, or that theirs would be the greatest audiences. They can not roll up reports of great meetings, Sunday-schools and missionary offerings. Their names and pictures could not for a while be published as pastors of living link churches. But ability, leadership and patient toil are as much rewarded here as anywhere. Our people in the South have as keen appreciation of the right sort of preachers as they do anywhere. "God give us men!" and let them be "uncrowned men."

2. Greater loyalty on the part of Disciples moving from our strong centers.

It is often as hard to enlist the sympathies of such Disciples as it is to gain a convert from the world or an addition from the denominations. They come from states where we are the people; where it requires little sacrifice to be a member of the Christian Church; where we have elegant church houses, pipe organs, choirs and large audiences. Here they find us "the sect spoken against." Conditions are necessarily more modest and unpretentious. Compared with our religious neighbors we are insignificant. It is not so popular to be known as a member of the Christian Church. It will not help them socially nor financially. Instead of lining up and going to work many of them smother whatever convictions they have and are caught in the current of popular favor. There are more "disappearing brethren" in this than in any other way down here.

3. Less conservatism on the part of the churches would put us far in advance of what we are. Reared in a conservative atmosphere, and trained as many of them have been to look with suspicion upon every new thing, it is often the case that our churches are slow to adopt advanced methods. Then because even such methods yield at first meagre results as compared with places where forces are stronger, and conditions more favorable, they often refuse to adopt methods that would ally them with advancing forces. It is not saying too much to say this is a lack of faith in God, and in the forces we already have. Often it is the case of "we have toiled all night and caught nothing." What we need is the simple faith of the apostle who said, "Nevertheless at thy command we will let down the net."

WHAT HAVE BEEN THE HINDRANCES TO THE PROGRESS OF OUR PLEA IN THE SOUTH? TO WHAT EXTENT DO THEY STILL PREVAIL?

By W. P. Crouch.

In my judgment, the hindrances to the progress of our plea in the south are the lack of a missionary conscience and an extreme conservatism among the majority of our people, and strong prejudice against us on the part of the denominations.

I feel sure, however, that conditions are improving rapidly in some localities, and slowly in others. The plea, tactfully, wisely and lovingly presented, always wins in the south, as elsewhere, but often more slowly in the south, for the reasons stated.

Athens, Ala.

By Preston Bell Hall.

In the section of the south best known to me the hindrances have been conservatism, traditionalism, the lack of elementary education among the masses, the unfavorable opinion against us created by denominational leaders, and the uneducated and uncultured condition of many of our ministers. Conservatism has been modified by commercial conditions, education is more general in rural districts as well as in centers of population, emotional religion is less popular, our own churches are beginning to desire educated preachers, and the denominations are more cordial, especially where our churches have numbers and influence.

Kinston, N. C.

By T. M. Foster.

One hindrance to the progress of our plea in the south is found in the fact that the southern people are opposed to new things. Thy have been satisfied with the old, and don't want them disturbed. This causes them to cling to the old Book, and hence there is less infidelity in the south than anywhere else in this country. When our plea is presented and proposes to change old practices, they oppose it. Then there is, of course, much religious ignorance and prejudice among the masses of the people and among the preachers.

But I am satisfied that a better day has come. The south will now hear this plea gladly, and many of the people will accept it, if presented in the right spirit. In my opinion, there is no part of our country where the faithful preaching of this plea will bring better results.

In response to the questions I feel like saying: "Ask me something easy!" The situation is so complicated and so strained that a treatise is needed to explain and then it would not explain. Briefly: In the southeast, where we are abjectly weak, the Baptists and Methodists were so early on the ground and have taken so deep a hold that none others need apply. In many instances we have been badly represented by the rag-tag and bob-tail of our ministry, men spiritually and morally bankrupt, who have left the north for the north's good, and struck the south for that section's evil. As the better element of our ministry, supported by the C. W. B. M. and the Home Society, enter, there is some hope—the only hope—for the removal of hindrances. Among southern Disciples there are some choice spirits in the ministry and out who have toiled nobly and suffered bravely. Anti-ism is a terrible plague that has pre-empted the land. It is strongly entrenched. It stands in deadly defiance; unable to do much itself, it refuses to give us any show. It has virtually ceased to fight sectarianism, and all its guns are trained on "progressivism."

By many we are regarded as a "Yankee Church," and sectional prejudice prevails against us. The "Holy Spirit" is the center of worship and thought, and anything that does not seem to exalt him is regarded as the rankest heresy.

Strict construction rules the south, or at least has ruled it, and this has meant swift destruction to progress along most lines, especially theological. There are changes, but they are provokingly slow. Medieval theology, superstition and ecclesiasticism are so rampant and are so much the established order that we are up against the hardest proposition in the United States, if not in the civilized world. Our greatest hope is in new countries, like Oklahoma, where we have a nucleus of brethren from sections where we are strong, and yet we must help our brethren everywhere, in spite of "fightings within and fears without."

Briefly told, the hindrances, as handed down to us by our pioneers, are:

1. Sectarian mottoes, such as "there's nothing in a name"; "divisions are right; God never intended for us all to see alike"; "human creeds are taken from the Bible and are necessary"; "we have as smart men as anybody"; "father and mother were good people, and they went to heaven, and their religion is good enough for us"; "stick to your bush, and let the Campbellites alone."

The result was deep-seated prejudice.

2. Ignorance of the Scriptures. But few people read the Scriptures; fewer study the Scriptures. No sectarian knows and teaches the plan of salvation as recorded in Acts. All one has to do to satisfy himself on this point is to test an audience with Bible questions.

3. Ignorance of our mission to make Christ the head over all things to the church which is his body. They have been taught from their pulpit and pew and through their literature that we are a branch of the church like themselves, and bushwhackers and proselyters and dangerous and hence wilfully ignorant of our true mission.

These hindrances still prevail beyond the limit of our success. That our success, under the circumstances, has been remarkable, no one will deny. Part of our preparatory success for a greater prosperity is found in our creation of the present desire for the more intimate relations among all Protestant churches. This will increase Bible study, Bible knowledge and Christian love and decrease the ignorance and party spirit referred to above. Our advantages over our early pioneers are great and the south is fast becoming the most inviting mission field in the United States. We need more men to preach "the gospel of Christ" in love, and we need money to support them.

1. "The field is plenteous but the laborers are few."

2. A better preparation upon the part of many of the laborers.

3. Sectarianism and its misrepresentations.

What is needed is a greater consecration upon the part of those already enlisted in the army of the Lord. The south is comparatively a mission field, and like all other mission fields has its many hindrances.

Some of the hindrances to our plea in the south, as I see it, have been a scarcity of ministers, inefficiency of some of the ministry, need of Christian schools in some states, need of conviction on the part of many Christians that something depends on them, and need of money to support the ministry. In addition to these is the influence of the opposition to organized missionary work. The growing Christian colleges are helping the situation, but the conditions named still exist to a great extent.

ALABAMA—Historical Sketch

The history of the Churches of Christ in Alabama in the nineteenth century is interesting because of the character of the men who were preachers. They were truth seekers. They were men who had begun to study the Bible to know the truth. They cared not to know something about the truth but the truth itself. Dissatisfied with certain doctrines in the various religious bodies, as with John "Raccoon" Smith, who preached that there were infants in hell a span long, they were searching for truth. When in conference in Butler convention in 1841 men from the southern portion of the state, and men from the northern, found they thought the same identical things and that without the knowledge, the one of the other, they materially decided they had found the truth. Truth makes bold, and these men believing they had it were fearless and faithful in its advocacy. Like Paul they said, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," and they went everywhere preaching it. The denominations hated them for it, and refused them admission to their church houses; strong prejudice in many of their own families lost them friends, and made them foes, but they preached. Many of them walked for miles to fill appointments, and nothing prevented them from doing what they believed to be their duty. Of William Kirkpatrick it is said, and the same is no doubt true of many others, "He would rise at 4 o'clock on Sunday morning, walk from twenty to thirty miles to an appointment, preach from 11 until 2 o'clock, and never dampen his collar." They labored "almost without money and without price;" were called "Whiteites," "Campbellites," "Water Dogs," etc., to no purpose; for they continued firm in their course, baptizing hundreds and thousands, and establishing congregations in valley and on hill, so that before 1860 there were churches organized in every inhabited portion of the state.

Their fearlessness, faithfulness, and in many cases eloquence, brought the people out, the truth they preached touched hard-hearted hearers, and they had "big meetings." One meager report in 1837 says: "Carroll Hendricks had 150 additions in three months in Lowndes county." Dr. Wharton and Talbott Fanning in 1842 organized a church at Russellville, Franklin county, after a great meeting of 74 additions. Four years after its organization the congregation numbered 200 members. W. H. Hooker held a meeting with Alex Graham at Marion, in 1846, with 36 additions, and Fanning Hall and Judge Ligon held another soon after with 20, closing on account of much rain. Nathan W. Smith, after a great meeting, organized a congregation in Randolph county with 57 members; and in 1847 W. H. Hooker closed successfully at Clinton, Green county, with 80 additions. Such reports show that these men are to be listed with our greatest evangelists. Working in a new field, where prejudice was at its highest, shut out of meeting houses, schoolhouses and homes, in groves and under arbors, by the power of God, the gospel of the Lord, they broke down hatred and malice and won thousands of souls. Speaking of its effect on the denominations, J. Waller Henry says: "A sweet spirit of union was abroad in the land. It permeated all the work in Alabama and several congregations and many individuals came out from sectarianism to accept the Bible and the Bible alone. It really seemed for a time that the Protestant world would be speedily brought back to the simple gospel of Christ."

Prior Reeves and T. Cantrill, both powerful men, preaching in East Alabama, won nine out of sixteen congregations, composing the Freewill Baptist Association.

The names of the men who did this work can not be mentioned in the short space allotted. But from Cyrus White, McGahee and their associates, who labored in the very beginning of the century, whose converts were called "Whiteites," to Barnes, Pickens, Curtis, Henry and their colleagues, were fearless, sacrificing men who laid the foundation of the great work that is yet to be accomplished.

Among the first churches were those at Moulton, Marion, Mt. Hebron, Selma, Shady Grove and Huntsville. The church at Mt. Hebron during the forties and fifties paid as much as $1,500 a year for a preacher's support. Alexander Graham built the first church house at Marion principally from his personal funds for $2,500. He was an educated man and one of the vice-presidents of the A. C. M. S., when it was organized in Cincinnati in 1849. At Moulton "the meeting house was a model of neatness and simplicity, inside and out, and the congregation was composed of the wealth and intelligence of the community."

Mt. Pleasant church, on Poplar creek, near Athens, in 1834, had a membership of over 100 members. "When the second house was built in the forties, it was constructed with twelve corners, instead of four, and built in a circle on account of the logs, and the site where it stands is called 'Old Twelve Corners' until this day."

Many of the churches established in those first days were not permanent. The flocks were left to care for themselves and soon perished.

We hope we have learned a lesson and will build with permanency in view from now on. It can never be said the preachers are more powerful, magnetic, eloquent, sacrificing, than those early men. But learning from them we can bring about a closer relationship between individual churches working together, a missionary spirit in pew and pulpit that sustains and makes permanent. As we build up this sympathy, love and copartnership among ourselves, the ranks will grow from hundreds to thousands and tens of thousands in this one of the greatest of all the states, and we can rejoice over a blessed union in heart and life of those whose one aim is labor for the salvation of the race.

ALABAMA—The Work To-Day

It has been Alabama's misfortune to have had many traveling evangelists in years past who preached a few sermons, perfected a temporary organization and passed on; in many cases much harm was done to the cause of Christ by allowing the new half-organized congregations to die. This continued for more than fifty years; and added to this plan of work was the erroneous teaching that it was not right to pay the preacher.

Some twenty years ago the work was organized but owing to the feebleness of the membership the organization was very imperfect, and very feebly carried on; in recent years, within the last decade, a more perfect organization has been perfected and practically all of the permanent work has been accomplished. Neat and substantial houses have been built in many of the cities and villages, and some in the rural districts. In some places like Birmingham, Mobile, Selma, Jasper, Eutaw, West Point, Athens and Talladeja neat, commodious and substantial brick or stone houses have been built. Most of these houses have been built upon the most modern plans; with special arrangements for Bible school teaching. In addition to the main auditorium many neat and smaller rooms have been built for class teaching.

I might name many other places in which during this decade neat frame buildings have been built or repaired; some of these with the modern workshop plan, where much good teaching can be done in the Bible school; I might name Anniston, Oxford, Hartsell, Ensley, Bessemer, Woodlawn, North Birmingham, Roanoke, Mt. Willing and a number of others.

Our people are especially interested in the teacher training movement; as an evidence of the work that is being done the state superintendent, Mrs. S. B. Moore, of Birmingham, is a member of the Church of Christ, and so in many of the churches the superintendents are being chosen from among the Churches of Christ because they are the best material to be found.

We now have a state evangelist and some five or six located evangelists who are doing fine work; it is the custom of our organized workers to establish new churches and then to supplement the work till these new places become self-supporting, or able to combine with some other nearby church and support a preacher for all the time.

With the great industrial wave that is now sweeping over this state it seems a sin not to go into the new towns as they spring up and establish church houses for the scattered Disciples and begin with the building of the cities. There are considerably less than 10,000 Disciples of Christ in the state and not exceeding one-third of that number have any part in the organized work; but on the other hand do all that they can in many instances to prevent the work from being done. But I am proud to say that the few who are at work are pressing forward and doing a grand work.

I do not know the exact amount of the work that has been done by those who oppose organization, but I feel that I shall be safe in saying that the one-third of the total membership who are organized have done fully ten times as much work as the two-thirds who are opposed to organization during the past ten years; for practically all of the visible work done has been done by this method.

There was a movement at the last convention for the establishing of a college where our young men may be taught, but after perfecting an organization it was thought best on account of the financial depression to postpone it for a while. So much are our people interested in this educational feature that it has been coming up at two or three of our last conventions; and as some one expressed it, "the matter will not drown."

Our next annual convention meets in the beautiful new church which has just been completed at Eutaw; the convention meets November 4-6. A splendid program is now being prepared for that occasion.

We have millions of the very best cement rock, nearer tidewater than is found in most places; Birmingham is able to manufacture iron cheaper than any place in the world, really setting the prices for all other places; with coal to supply the world for centuries to come, and the finest cotton lands to be found, and these things all being developed, new towns are springing up all over the state. We feel that we must say aloud to all to come over and help us.

We have recently entered Montgomery, our capital city, and organized a church and together with the A. C. M. S. we are supplementing that work so that a preacher gives all of his time to it.

We feel that we are just entering upon the great work of evangelizing Alabama; the door stands wide open and all that we shall have to do is to enter into and plant churches in these many new and prosperous cities that are springing up especially all over the great and rich mineral belt.

GEORGIA—In the Beginning

It was in the northeastern part of the state that the simple gospel plea took first and deepest root in Georgia. But the sources of the work are found in three springs: First in Antioch, in Savannah and Augusta. Each appears to have arisen independently of the other except Augusta perhaps, independently of any direct influence of either Thomas or Alexander Campbell. Originally the membership of Antioch was the emigrants from North Carolina, known as O'Kelleyites. They built a little church not far from Scull Shoal, which they named Old Republican, after the year 1807. Reading after Barton Stone, by 1822 they were ready to organize as Bible Christians. A decade later, under Nathan W. Smith, who had learned of the great Restoration principles taught by Mr. Campbell, they were induced to build a new house, naming it Antioch, and dropping all their previous names and nicknames. As of old at Antioch the Disciples were first called Christians. During all this time the work was developing at Savannah. S. C. Dunning and Christian Dasher, with one old colored woman, sat down regularly at the Lord's table. Before very long Dasher returned to his home at Ebenezer, leading a colony of 30 or more people whom he had induced to accept the simple faith to Lowndes county. In 1835 Dr. Daniel Hook, an eminent physician, having after much difficulty found a Baptist preacher who would immerse him, moved from Louisville, Georgia, to Augusta, and organized the few Disciples he found there (two besides himself) into a church. These three little movements finally came into union. As James Lamar has put it, "Dr. Hook visits Savannah; Hook and Dunning go to Antioch and join hearts and hopes with Nathan Smith and the Jacksons, the Elders and the Lowes; the current led out by Hook and Smith flows abroad, ever growing and swelling as it goes, while Mrs. Tubman prays and pays in Augusta. They go to Sandersville, and T. M. Harris, the eloquent and powerful evangelist, is enlisted; they go to Griffin, and Philip F. Lamar is discovered and sent out to preach, and to suffer everywhere for the truth, and finally to live, to suffer and to die for it in northeast Georgia; the accomplished scholar and able preacher, Dr. A. G. Thomas, arouses himself and contributes his mighty influence to the work; W. S. and A. B. Fears are in it; Dr. Hooker, second to none, shakes mightily the dry bones around Valdosta; now and then an angel from Kentucky or elsewhere, visits and preaches a while; the beloved T. M. Foster organizes the Northeast Georgia Convention; A. G. Thomas, and others, call together and organize the whole state brotherhood, and the Georgia State Convention is afloat upon the swelling current. Holy women get on board to cheer and bless with their presence and their prayers, and to help with their most efficient labors."

Though Georgia is the Empire State of the South yet the Disciples of Christ are comparatively few here. There is one disciple to every 200 of the population. There are about 13,000 members, 60 preachers, 100 Sunday-schools and 131 churches in the state. Nearly half of the counties of the state have no Christian church in them and these counties have more than one million inhabitants. More than 600 villages, towns and cities in this state have no Christian church in them. You see we have a great field for Home Missions.

Our State Board, assisted by the American Board, is doing all it can to build up the work in the state. Our policy for several years has been to build up the weak places rather than start new ones. But evangelistic work has been carried on, too. Volunteer meetings and regular work by men employed by the Board have won hundreds to the cause. The churches are becoming more evangelistic. Seven large meetings by national evangelists were held in the state this last year. The churches are also growing some in the grace of giving and our organized work is becoming stronger each year.

The women are helping greatly in the state. The C. W. B. M. has a number of auxiliaries and had an organizer in the field this summer. They help the work at Rome. The Woman's Society for Georgia missions has an evangelist in the field and several churches have been organized. This society also helps support the work in several fields.

We need more good preachers in Georgia and could get them if our churches would give enough for a comfortable living. May the time soon come when our churches shall realize their stewardship and bring the tithes into the storehouse that good men of God may no longer need to do secular work but may give themselves wholly to the ministry of the word.

Conditions in Florida

The Disciples in Florida form but a very small per cent of the population—less than one-half of one per cent. As nearly as we can establish it, we have about one member in 260 of the population. In 260 of its population, Indiana, or Kentucky, or Missouri, has about 18 or 20 members. This small membership is scattered all over the state. In almost every village and town and community there are a few members, one or two, at least.

We have but little wealth. The soil of Florida is generally poor. It does not make its cultivators rich. The fertilizer bill is enormous. When there is any failure in crops the loss is correspondingly great. A country church of well-to-do farmers is seldom met with in this state, and especially among the Disciples of Christ. I would say we do not have one in the state. We have but one strong church, the First Christian Church of Jacksonville, of which J. T. Boone is pastor. It has 1,000 members and church property valued at $65,000. But one other church in the state supports a minister for full time with the aid of mission funds. This is the church at DeLand, the seat of Stetson University, a Baptist college. We have small congregations at Tampa, St. Petersburg and Pensacola, with ministers for full time by the aid of the A. C. M. S. The work at all these points is growing, and there is good ground to hope that in a few years they will become strong, self-supporting churches. We have no church at Tallahassee, the state capital, and one of the most beautiful inland towns of the state, and having a population of seven or eight thousand. We have made no effort as yet to establish a church there. There is no hope of doing so without putting a minister there and keeping him there. This we are not yet able to do. A meeting there by one of our great evangelists during the session of the Legislature next April or May, would be a revelation to Florida. But how are we to get it? Who will answer? There are many other important, growing towns, many of them county seats, in which we have no churches, but a few members in nearly all, if not in every one.

For a few members in a good town to establish a church is a difficult, if not an impossible task, without help. Other churches are established. The long, hard struggle is past with them. Some of our members would rather attach themselves to some one of the churches already strong, than to undertake what seems to them very difficult, if not impossible. We have lost many members in this way. They take a mistaken view. A few weak people, with a great conviction, can achieve the apparently impossible, if they will put their hearts and lives into their undertaking—have done so over and over again. And then, to take the only position upon which the Lord's people can get together in answer to his prayer, and abandon it now for ground upon which union can never be, is to retreat when the signs of victory are in sight. All over the state we have those who are not doing this, but are holding their ground, and praying for help to come.

The churches that are able to afford preaching only once or twice a month, are often so far apart, that it takes all they are able to raise to pay a minister's traveling expenses. This is a hard condition to remedy. It can not be remedied by grouping. After a while it may be remedied by planting more churches in reach of the isolated ones. It is a condition that calls loudly for more churches.

Florida is a tourists' state. Its population increases immensely in winter and decreases in the same ratio in summer. This affects the churches very much. The contrast between winter and summer is so very great. Church houses that are well filled in winter are discouraging to look in on in summer, especially in tourists' towns. It is hard to keep churches from becoming discouraged in summer. And sometimes the minister comes and goes with the tourists. This ebb and flow of the population is probably more marked in Florida than in any other state. It is one of the unusual conditions with which we have to deal.

In a later article I hope to say something on "Our Needs in Florida."

The Cause in Tennessee

The present condition of the cause of Christ in Tennessee is the resultant of forces, some of which have been operating here for more than a hundred years. To rightly understand the present status it becomes necessary to consider some historic facts connected with the cause here. These can not be minutely stated in this paper, but may be merely mentioned to indicate their relation to the present condition. The first of these, and perhaps the most important, are the characteristics of the people here, to which the new, old gospel was presented nearly a century ago. These characteristics have been transmitted to the present generation. Therefore, what was true in our early history here is essentially true of our people now. Our population was and is almost purely Anglo-Saxon, therefore liberty-loving, independent and deeply religious, having an abiding confidence in local religious leaders. This tends to make us easily satisfied with present forms of religious activity. To those in other states where the Christian Church is more dominant, who think our progress not rapid, these and other facts may offer a partial explanation. Almost a century ago the message whose heart was the supremacy of Christ and the union of believers in him, was presented to the people here by the Brothers Mulkey and others. People believed this message and small congregations were organized in the country. Among the first of there were Post Oak Springs, in Roane county, and Wilson Hill, in Marshall county. Through the able and self-sacrificing ministry of the pioneers who counted not their lives dear unto themselves, the word of God grew, disciples were multiplied and churches sprang up in all sections of the state, especially in Middle Tennessee, which section was and is the most populous and wealthy. About 1848 the brethren, especially the ministers, seeing the necessity for a more efficient method of co-operation in extending the gospel in Tennessee and strengthening the churches, met at Franklin College and formed the Tennessee Christian Missionary Society. Through this agency very efficient work was done for several years, until the organization lapsed on account of opposition. Unfortunately a controversy arose between a member of the faculty of Bethany College and the president of Franklin College. It grew very bitter. Before this the American Christian Missionary Society was organized with Alexander Campbell as its president, and Talbot Fanning as one of its vice-presidents; but after the controversy referred to above, opposition to organized missionary work developed in Tennessee and has continued, as we think, unbrotherly in its method and hurtful to the cause, to the present day. These facts, the organization of the Tennessee Christian Missionary Society, the controversy between Dr. Richardson and Brother Fanning, the growing opposition to missionary work after the controversy, have an important bearing upon the present status of the cause in Tennessee as well as throughout our whole Southland. This opposition continued practically undisturbed until 1889, when the writer was invited to the state to take up the work of co-operation. We are now closing the nineteenth year of co-operative work, the net results of which God only can tabulate and disclose. So far as we have been able to get the facts there have been about one hundred and fifteen churches organized and reorganized, about 13,000 members added to the churches, over $300,000 secured for religious work. In addition to this we have secured a permanent fund of $33,000, which we hope to make $50,000 by our centennial. The board of management is composed of business men (except the writer), who love the plea for the supremacy of Christ and his authority, whose character and conduct will compare favorably with those of the best citizens of our state. They stand for all that is best in citizenship and highest in religion. There are at present about 550 churches in Tennessee. Of these there are 100 in East Tennessee, 150 in West Tennessee and 300 in Middle Tennessee. Many of these are small bands of brethren who meet occasionally in schoolhouses for worship and preaching. They are without a regular ministry, save as a missionary or an itinerant minister may chance along and speak the word of life to them. There are about 200 ministers of the Christian Church in Tennessee. Thirty-five of these minister to one church their full time. A few churches have preaching one-half time. Perhaps 200 churches have preaching only one-fourth the time. The Sunday-school idea is growing rapidly with us. We have just secured a Sunday-school evangelist, who will give his whole time to this special work. From this special department we expect great results. Our largest school is Johnson City, with Lincoln street and Mississippi avenue, Memphis; Vine street, Nashville, and Walnut street, Chattanooga, as close seconds. A vigorous missionary sentiment has been developed in the last two decades. Sixty per cent of all offerings to general missionary enterprises, such as American and Foreign missions, are made by churches that have been organized, built up or assisted by our state co-operation. The Disciples of Christ in Tennessee, if united, have the wealth, culture and Christian influence to multiply our membership many times in the next few years. Our colleges are doing a commendable work in view of their facilities and equipment. We are just beginning to take up the question of education in connection with our missionary work. The missionary ministry in Tennessee sustains a fellowship in service as intimate, loyal and beautiful as any man could wish. We have never had any jealousies. "In honor preferring one another" may rightly be the motto of this fellowship. Out of the growing missionary sentiment conserved, fostered and directed by vigorous missionary organization, managed by wise Christian men, churches observing C. W. B. M. day, 63;

will grow a large, united and loyal brotherhood in Tennessee, whose faith shall be commensurate with the word of God whose loyalty to the Master shall be attested and whose liberty in him shall be guaranteed by its life.

North Carolina.

The Restoration movement began in North Carolina prior to 1841. A conference was held at Piney Grove Church, in Sampson Co., when its principles were publicly advocated. James J. Latham read a circular letter, and at the annual conference in 1843 of the Free Will Baptist ministers, offered resolutions setting forth in greater detail the principles now advocated by us. Two years later a convention was held at Hookerton, and a definite and permanent union among many churches favorable to religious restoration and the union of all Christians, was effected. In 1845 there were reported 30 churches, 26 ministers, and 1,800 members. From the Free Will Baptist Conference, and later the Bethel Conference, and Union Meeting of the Disciples of Christ, by 1857 the meeting was known as the Annual Conference of the Disciples of Christ. At this meeting a constitution for its government was adopted. By 1860 we had about 3,000 members.

Mississippi.

The beginning of the Restoration Movement in Mississippi was made by Dr. William E. Matthews between the years 1828 and 1830, when two churches in Wilkerson Co., and one in Franklin took their stand on the apostolic preaching and practice. From 1830 to 1860 the work was almost wholly evangelistic. Evangelists going up and down the country holding meetings for a few days, baptizing a number of people, exhorting them to meet regularly for instruction and edification, then leaving them to live or die. Some of these causes developed into strong churches, and almost without exception they were the ones that had men in them, who soon were able to teach the others, and thus developed into preachers, of whom T. W. Caskey is the most striking example.

In December, 1868, a corporation meeting was held in Jackson, when B. F. Manire, whose portrait appears on another page, was chosen to visit the churches in order to enlist them in a general state corporation. So hearty was the response that at the end of six months three assistant evangelists were employed for the remainder of the year. This continued for eight years with much success. The annual meetings were all held with the church at Jackson, and the semi-annual meetings with some other church. This corporation ceased in 1876, but in 1884 the Mississippi Christian Missionary Convention was organized. Among the men who have successfully associated in this work were Dr. B. B. Hill, James Sharp, Dr. Phares, A. C. Smither and John A. Stevens, while a number of other brethren did good work, though for short periods.

The Church in all lands is making ready for the national convention. Gifts and reports of work are coming from India, Jamaica, South America, Porto Rico, Mexico, New Zealand, Africa and from all our missions in the United States.

The delegates and all who can attend are studying the program and in thought and prayer are making ready for the feast of days. A great host who can not attend are aiding in the gathering of funds and the compiling of reports, and even now are looking in hopeful anticipation toward the annual convention.

The receipts for September, 1907, were $55,849.91. If we can make our receipts $60,000 for September, 1908, we shall reach our financial aim. Tell this out to the friends and encourage the very best effort possible. We believe it can be done. You perhaps have noted that the June, July and August receipts for 1908 have exceeded the receipts for the corresponding months for 1907.

Our speakers feel the burden of responsibility. This sense of obligation will yield masterful messages. Leaders in the council chambers are searching the field of methods, that in the convention conferences the newest and best agencies may be evolved.

State Centennial Aim — "Three Hundred Mission Study Classes in Missouri by June, 1909." Will you be one of those three hundred? You can not afford not to be. Christian Endeavor believes in training for work. Mission study is a good index showing up the work that Christ has given us. Organize a class right away, and don't be a "?" mark to us any longer. We are wondering why you don't organize. We will furnish all help upon application to this office.

October, the Rally Month for Christian Endeavor in Missouri. Everybody get wide awake. What county will be the first to make it unanimous—that is, every church in the county having a Christian Endeavor Society? What society will be the first to report having organized a new Christian Endeavor Society, or revived an old one? We wish to be the leaders among all the people in the United States in the number of Christian Endeavor Societies, by June, 1909. Missouri must do her part.

Now is the time—October, 1908. N-o-w. spelled backwards, is W-o-n. Let's make this the best month in 1908 in Christian Endeavor.

An Advanced Movement.

The Foreign Society hopes to make an advanced movement this new year, the Centennial year. The first step in this direction is to secure at least $25,000 for a new Bible College property at Vigan, province of Luzon, Philippine Islands. This is one of the most pressing needs of the society at this time.

J. W. Hardy, of Nashville, Tenn., has been asked to represent the Society in this special task and will begin his services October 1. He needs no introduction to our people in Tennessee and South Kentucky, where he has served as pastor and evangelist for many years; and where he has also been eminently successful as a financial representative of South Kentucky College, recently newly christened "McLean College," Hopkinsville, Ky., and West Kentucky College, Mayfield. The funds of these two institutions have been increased no less than $50,000 through his special effort. To any other community where his lot may be cast, we can most cordially commend him to the fullest confidence of the friends of the Foreign Society. We have no doubt he will be gladly received and promptly seconded in his efforts to found a great institution of learning in Luzon, one of the most important mission fields in the world.

His permanent address is 308 17th St., Nashville, Tenn.

Comparative Statement.

Church Extension Receipts for first twenty-three days of September:

	Churches.	Individuals.
For last year	$4,914 56	$7,531 46
For this year	3,891 50	4,230 56
A falling off of	$1,023 06	$3,300 90

It will be noted for the first twenty-three days of September there was a falling off of $4,323.96 in the receipts as compared with the first twenty-three days of September, 1907. Thus far 265 churches have sent contributions, which is a falling behind in the number of contributing churches of 104. This is a serious loss to be accounted for probably on account of the stringent times; the falling off in receipts is due to the fact that but few of our strong churches have been heard from, and that last year during this same period we received a personal gift of $6,000.

The Board earnestly beseeches the churches to remember Church Extension in October if the offering has not been taken in September. There are now on file more than $100,000 of applications which are very worthy and ought to be answered. Make remittances to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 500 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

A Double Surprise.

Miss Jones, one of those particular women, on the shady side of the unmentionable age, was horrified to discover her colored Chloe standing over the kitchen range making her toilet, one cold winter morning.

On demanding why the cook was dressing her hair in the kitchen instead of her own room, Chloe replied: "Bitter cold dis yer mornin' in mah room, an' I'se des usin' de stove fo' mah lookin'-glass. I done used the X-Ray Stove Polish on de range las' night, an' yo' can see fo' yerse'f how it shines—de bes' lookin'-glass in dis house fo' 'rangin' mah ha'r."

Miss Jones praised the shining surface, but added: "Do not let it occur again; I am surprised that you should do such a thing in my kitchen." Then Chloe beamed and replied: "I'se done 'sprised mah se'f at the way de X-Ray Stove Polish made dis ole range look like it was new." When Mrs. Jones repeated: "Do not let it occur again," Chloe beamed again and answered: "Shore's yer born, Missus, dis ole range'll never git rusty no mo' if yo' keep X-Ray Stove Polish in de house."

Some Work and Workers in the Southland

(1) Richard W. Wallace left Cameron, Mo., four years ago, owing to a throat trouble, and located with the First Christian Church at Valdosta, Ga., where there are now 200 members. Not many months ago we gave an illustration of the splendid church building which has been completed since he went there. The church and Sunday-school have both grown rapidly during the last year. There is a good teacher training class; the missionary offerings are increasing. During the present pastorate Howard Cree, R. G. Frank, W. N. Briney and Allen Wilson have all aided the work in revival meetings.

(2) W. P. Crouch has just taken up the work at Athens, Ala. During the last five years he has been located at Bristol, Tenn., with the Central Church, which was organized in the courthouse in 1903, with about 40 charter members, where the work was carried on for eighteen months. In the meantime a loan was secured and a Sunday-school room erected at a cost of about $5,000. Two years ago last March President T. E. Cramblett dedicated the completed building, money enough being raised to pay all debts. The membership when Brother Crouch left at the end of August was 275. From the very beginning of the congregation's history it has had fellowship in all missionary enterprises. The state board was a factor in the support of the work. On the Virginia side of the town there is an old church which dates back 50 years. The congregation on the Tennessee side owes its success to getting out of the ruts hampered by the anti-missionary brethren.

(3) E. J. Shelnutt is a Georgia boy, educated at Lexington Bible College. Since 1895 he has organized more than 20 churches in the cities, towns and country throughout his native state, and revived a number of almost lifeless ones. In addition to this he has organized one church and reorganized another in North Carolina, and evangelized in several other states. He has been in the editorial work, and is now located at Acworth. He is a valued correspondent of "The Christian-Evangelist."

(4) J. T. McKissick is one of the young evangelist preachers of the South, who is now engaged in the task of church building, having been called in January, 1907, to the ministry of the Seventeenth Street Christian Church of Nashville, Tenn. It was about three years ago that cottage prayer-meetings were instituted by a few brethren living in Lockeland, near Nashville. Later a Sunday-school was inaugurated in an unused stable on Seventeenth street. A lot having been donated on the condition that a church should be built, this offer was accepted by the Woodland Street Church, and a neat house erected at a cost of $12,000. The Sunday-school was removed to the new building and a brief meeting held by W. Ross Lloyd, at that time pastor at Woodland street. The congregation was organized in 1897, several brethren serving as pastor for very brief periods. Since Brother McKissick took the work the congregation has grown rapidly, the additions numbering about 150. The Sunday-school has an enrollment also of about 200. About the first of February an effort was made to erect a substantial building, and more than $9,000 in cash and pledges was secured. By the time the convention assembles it is expected that the roof will be on. Brother McKissick is allowed two months to hold meetings, and has had a large number of additions recently.

(5) Howard J. Brazelton is at Macon, the fourth city in point of size and importance in Georgia. Our church began there some twenty-two years ago when half a dozen Disciples, led by L. M. Erwin, met in Masonic Hall to observe the Lord's supper, and conduct a Sunday-school. The outcome of this was the present attractive edifice occupying one of the most accessible corners in the city, and completed in 1899. Some of the most substantial people in the city are among the 225 members. The work is well organized, in co-operation with all missionary enterprises, and the Bible school is full of life. This pulpit has been filled by such men as V. W. Dorris, W. O. Harp, H. C. Combs, A. B. Moore, S. R. Maxwell, J. P. Rowlison and J. H. Hughes. The present minister has just completed his first year's service, and is to remain indefinitely. The work has prospered, there having been added 38, while more money has been contributed than in any previous year. Plans are being laid for larger things.

(6) J. T. Boone holds up the cause in Florida. He began his work in Jacksonville in 1899 with less than 100 members, in a small building, not in a very desirable portion of the city. It was destroyed by fire in 1901. The first meeting after the fire was attended by many whose homes and business had been burned out, but under the trees in a suburban part these loyalists raised $25 for foreign missions, and decided to erect a building. This is of solid stone, modern in every way, and seating a thousand people. It is downtown, a block from the government building, and the doors are kept open every day so that passerbys may rest, read and pray. The membership is over a thousand, the Centennial aim for the Sunday-school is a thousand and for the C. W. B. M. 200. The relief committee and employment bureau are important features. Under its direction there are four mission Bible schools. F. M. Rains recently inaugurated a forward movement and $1,500 was raised, and put the church in a position for further and broader evangelistic work, which will include suburban churches and a living link missionary. Brother Boone is a shepherd of the sheep. Sweet in spirit and assiduous in the labor, he is the leader in this great winter resort, and this is practical demonstration of what can be done in many of our Southern cities. Elizabeth D. Woodruff is the assistant pastor.

(7) G. A. Reynolds was born in Marshall county, Mississippi, was educated at Bible College, Lexington, and has since labored in Mississippi, Tennessee, Alabama and North Carolina. He is now employed by the Mississippi Christian missionary convention for evangelistic work, and with the Chapel congregation at Copiah county. His labors are largely confined to this county and Newton. During this year he has held meetings at Hazelhurst, Newton, Crystal Springs, Brackston, Pinola, Taylorsville, Lake Hazel Church, Antioch, near Hickory Christian Chapel, and Dentville.

(8) Howard T. Cree is in his fifth year at Augusta, Ga., where we have one of the handsomest church buildings in the state, together with a parsonage costing originally more than $100,000. This is one of the works of Mrs. Tubman. During the past few years there has been development along missionary lines, and of the $4,000 raised annually about one-fourth goes to this purpose. The membership is 325, about 40 of whom were added during the year in a meeting held by home forces. In the recent flood our church was above water, though most of the central churches were damaged. Brother Cree is active in the state university work, and just now is interested in the flood sufferers.

(9) George F. Chapline was formerly in the work in Arkansas in charge of the church at Clarendon, where he had practiced law for more than seven or eight years. Thence he went to Los Angeles, as assistant pastor of the First Christian Church, where A. C. Smither has been for so many years. He gave up that work by reason of the serious illness of his wife, and is now located with the First Church at Jackson, Miss., which was started by M. F. Harmon. The membership there now is about 185, and everything points to a great success. Both congregations at Jackson are planning for a meeting next year under some prominent evangelist. Brother Chapline succeeded W. W. Phares, who resigned by reason of a breakdown in health.

(10) Belt White is a Kentuckian by birth and education, but has spent most of his ministerial life in Georgia and Alabama. He is one of the strong workers of the South, and is now in charge of the church at Anniston, Ala.

(11) John H. Wood is located at Winder, in the northeast district of Georgia, some fifty miles from Atlanta. Our membership in the district is about 4,000 in thirty-six churches. Of this number we have but one church that has preaching every Lord's day. Brother Wood is a member of the state mission board, chairman of the Northeast District Board, corresponding secretary of the Georgia Christian Education Society, and preaches for three churches—Mt. Vernon, Christian Chapel and Winder. These are good churches, with a combined membership of about 635. Christian Chapel has recently erected a $5,000 brick building, and at Winder, Brother Wood's home church, a $15,000 structure, which will seat 900 people, is now being erected. In less than two years the work at these places has been doubled, and in the three churches during the past year Brother Wood is able to record 130 additions. He has had also more than 40 additions at other points. The Winder Church has called him for full time next year. He is a type of the men who read "The Christian-Evangelist." After subscribing for it sixteen years he says: "I would not exchange it for any paper I know."

(12) P. H. Duncan was born, educated and worked for some time in Kentucky. He was editor of a series of Sunday-school papers, and for a number of years prepared the children's day exercises for the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. He ministered, also, at Savannah, Ga., and is now doing a fine work at Ensley, Ala.

(13) Lee Jackson is an independent evangelist now engaged in Northern Mississippi in an effort to establish new congregations in new territory. For twenty-five years Brother Jackson has been working the state. In 1894 he established the congregation at McComb City, and has established other congregations and built meeting houses at other places. He has held four debates. His present address is Summitt, Miss.

(14) F. D. Kershner is president of Milligan College, one of our institutions that is doing much for our work in the South. It is entering upon a new era in its history, and has now for the first time an equipment in some measure adequate to its needs. It has graduated 185 students, many of whom have responsible positions in the ministerial or teaching work. From it have gone out S. T. Willis, George P. Rutledge, B. A. Abbott, J. E. Stuart, George E. Lyons and men of this type. T. B. McCartney, recently acting president of Kentucky University, and Daniel E. Motley, of Washington Christian College, represent its men in the educational work. The school is under the control of the Tennessee Christian Missionary Society, and its outlook for the coming year is the brightest in its history.

(15) William M. Baker has spent most of his life in Kentucky, where he was born and educated, and served several churches. For some time he has been in the ministry at Meridian, Miss., where he has accomplished a fine work. He will leave it after the convention to take charge of our church at Poplar Bluff, Mo.

(16) Dr. E. C. Anderson, one of the worthies to whom our work in Alabama owes so much.

(17) M. F. Harmon is a Kentuckian by birth and early education, and has made his own way. After a newspaper experience he was called to the presidency of Columbia Christian College, his alma mater. Having preached for country churches he was called to the pastorate in Louisville, subsequently going to Bowling Green. Later he held pastorates in a number of prominent Southern cities in Alabama, Georgia and Texas. In 1904 he settled for the second time in Jackson, Miss. A year was spent as living link evangelist of the state, during which he built a beautiful frame building at Sandersville, and another church—a splendid stone one, in the west end, Jackson. During the year he had 40 additions by baptism, 44 by letter, organized a church and a Sunday-school, and raised outside of his salary nearly $4,700. He has always had an interest in newspaper work, and is now managing the Harmon Publishing Company, has revived the "Christian Messenger," and is also pastor of the West End Church.

(18) A. R. Moore has one of the most important places in the South. He has been in Birmingham, Ala., for five and one-half years, during which time the new building was erected

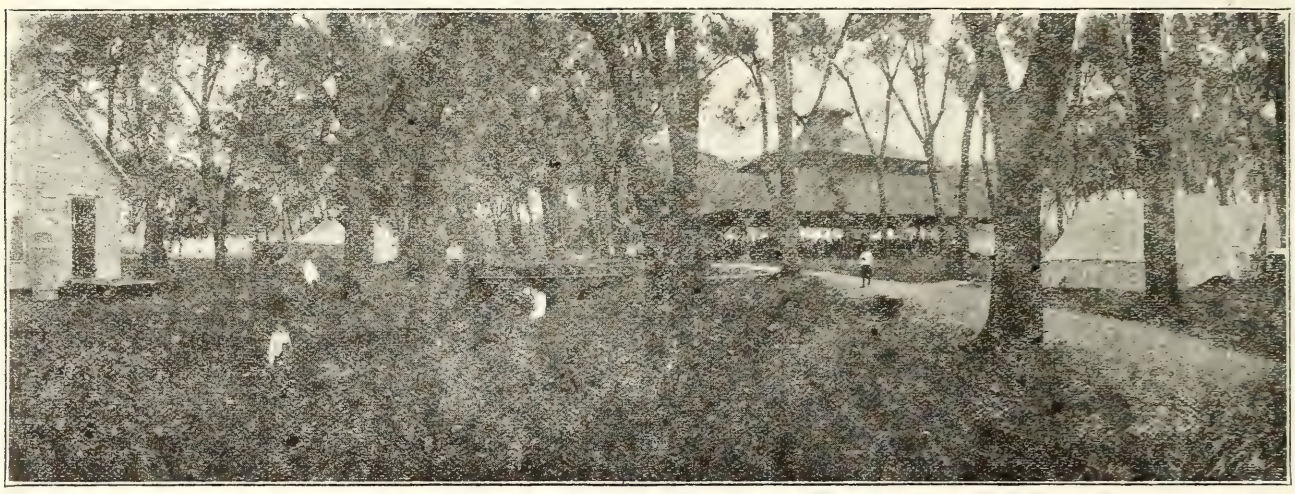
THE NEBRASKA STATE CONVENTION

Nebraska has had many good conventions and several truly great ones, but the 1908 convention in many ways exceeded them all. It was no larger in numbers attending, perhaps, but it was larger in its grasp on the possibilities of the state and our ability to do the work demanded. We have not lacked courage hitherto, but we coined more courage into concrete plans than ever before.



The Assembly Grounds, Bethany, Nebraska, where the Convention is held.

We have always had faith in the future of the work, and have not been wanting in vision; but this year faith is to be shown by works in a larger degree and vision is clearer and the goal seems nearer at hand.

We undertook to hold the convention over two Lord's days and it was a success beyond our hopes. Not many came in from over the state the first day, but enough to make a comfortable little colony in the tents and the brethren nearby filled up the seating capacity of the pavilion to hear C. C. Smith deliver a loving message that warmed our souls. The communion was a delightful service. The afternoon fellowship, led by H. H. Harmon, opened the hearts of the brethren and the evening service concluded with a splendid and thought-provoking sermon by S. D. Dutcher. On Monday the brethren began to arrive and by afternoon the grounds were filling up. Good audiences greeted the speakers in the Ministerial Association program, one of the best that has been given by that association. The evening opened with a sermon by I. H. Fuller, of Fremont, and was followed by Mrs. M. R. Ford, of Porto Rico, in an illustrated lecture.

From this time forward the program was followed almost without a break. President Davis was unable to be present until Wednesday morning, but Vice-President Harmon took charge and the convention was handled with skill and grace. Just a few of the many things of value can be mentioned, leaving the details for the imagination. However, these given are indicative of the high quality of the whole program.

On Tuesday and Wednesday mornings H. A. Denton, of Cincinnati, conducted a Christian Endeavor school of methods for an hour, from 8 to 9 o'clock. On Thursday morning this hour was taken for a Bible school institute, conducted by Marion Stevenson, of St. Louis, and continuing for three mornings.

The remaining hours of Tuesday, with the exception of from 11 to 12, were taken up by the C. W. B. M. Their program was complete and, as it always is, well attended and most interesting. There was no lack of attention at any time. The report showed a large return financially and an increase in every way. This organization is doing a splendid work in the state.

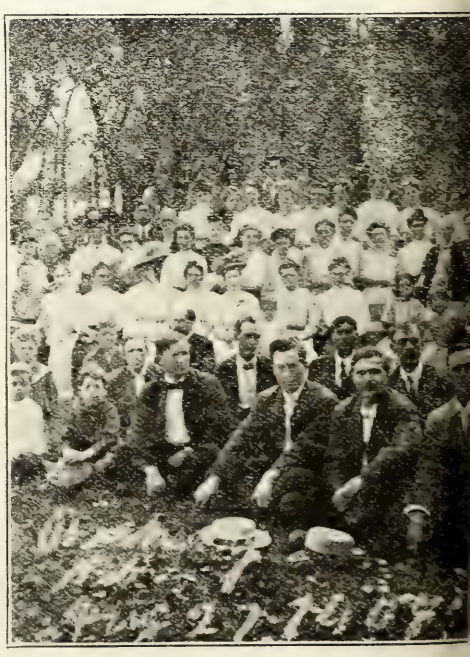
"The Resurrection Monograph," by N. K. Griggs, was a great production, and call was made many times for its circulation in tract form. An address by Mrs. M. R. Ford and a message from the Boys' Orphanage in Porto Rico, by Miss Nora Siler, were features of the afternoon program. C. C. Smith gave the evening address for the C. W. B. M., which closed their part of the program. The address of the evening, by C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, Mo., was listened to with great satisfaction.

Wednesday the N. C. M. S. had a session, including a short address by Samuel Gregg, state evangelist, and the distribution of the annual report. This was followed by H. A. Denton in a presentation of the home mission work, and the address of C. M. Chilton closed the morning session. The afternoon was taken by the Y. P. S. C. E. program, under the leadership of Superintendent F. Ellsworth Day. The work in this department has grown during the year and the report showed material progress. The addresses were all of the directly practical kind. A plan for a forward movement was elaborated and agreed upon, and was afterward approved by the state board. We will hear more from this work the current year.

In the evening H. A. Denton delivered the Christian Endeavor address, and this was followed by the first of a series of sermons coming every evening thereafter by H. O. Pritchard, pastor of the Bethany church.

Thursday morning was given to the N. C. M. S. meeting. The reports of committees introduced practically all the business, as is the general custom in Nebraska. The constitution was amended, on recommendation of the state board, to provide two new officers, a chairman and vice chairman of the board, to be chosen by the board. The offices of president and vice-president are made to cover the convention sessions only, though both are members of the board. R. A. Schell was chosen as president of the convention, with C. S. Paine, vice. C. S. Paine was elected chairman of the board and S. D. Dutcher, vice. Other officers are: E. M. Johnson, recording secretary; T. F. A. Williams, treasurer; F. Ellsworth Day, superintendent Christian Endeavor; Geo. W. Darner, superintendent Bible schools. W. A. Baldwin was chosen by the board for the twelfth year of service as corresponding secretary. The other members of the board, chosen by their respective organizations, are Chancellor W. P. Aylsworth, of Cotner University; Thomas A. Maxwell, president ministerial association; Mrs. J. S. McCleery, president C. W. B. M.; Mrs. Rose B. Wilkinson, junior superintendent; Louis R. Smith, president men's association; H. C. Armstrong, president Nebraska Christian Educational Association. These, with the district secretaries, make up the governing board.

The annual report showed an increase in apportionment receipts from all departments. Though we had one less evangelist in the field, and one other a shorter time than the previous year, there was a creditable increase in additions. Over 700 were added to the churches by our missionaries.



The Bible school work was given a decided impetus by the offer of L. C. Oberlies to be one of three to be responsible for the salary and expenses of a Bible school evangelist. R. F. Whiston immediately agreed to be the second and a little later George Childs, of Wakefield, filled out the number. This is a forward movement for Nebraska to which we have been looking for two years. The convention decided to raise $5,000 in Nebraska for state missions, directly from the churches, Bible schools, Christian Endeavor societies and individuals. This will be nearly doubling the receipts and yet it is in the realm of our abilities. The year was closed practically without debt, there being some grounds improvements to be provided for. This was done later. Two short addresses on state missionary topics, by Bert Wilson and R. F. Whiston, closed the forenoon.

The afternoon was devoted to the business men and Oliver W. Stewart, of Chicago, made the principal address. It was a splendid uncovering of the inconsistencies of our liquor traffic and the laws governing.

The special features of the Friday afternoon were a paper by W. E. M. Hackleman and an address on the foreign work, by F. M. Rains, of Cincinnati. Friday afternoon was devoted to our educational interests, under the presidency of Chancellor Aylsworth, of Cotner University, with a special address in the evening by L. C. Oberlies. W. R. Warren, of Pittsburg, and Dr. G. H. Schleh, of Omaha, were the principal speakers Saturday forenoon, and the Bible school program came in the afternoon, I. A. Downey, presiding. This was a most practical and interesting program, including an address by Marion Stevenson. The first part of the evening was also given to this department.

The closing Lord's day was a great day. The great Bible school at 9:30 exceeded all former records. The sermon by Mr. Stevenson following reached a climax in the splendid work of this talented man in the convention. In the afternoon the great feature was the communion service presided over by two veterans, R. A. Hawley and R. Coryell. The great pavilion was crowded and a large number were seated on the grass at the sides. All were served and the holy hush of this sweet memory feast fell like the peace of God. No part of the convention program seems to enlist so nearly every one on the grounds as this communion of the body and blood of our Lord.—— The Juniors, the C. W. B. M. hour of prayer, the Senior Christian Endeavor prayer-meeting, led up to the closing sermon by H. O. Pritchard. And it was a fitting close. In its power and heart-searching qualities, in its devotional uplift, as well as its faultless presentation, the sermon was ideal.——Then the brief fellowship meeting, in which many took part, and the closing hymn and benediction, brought this truly great gathering to a close.

W. E. M. Hackleman, of Indianapolis, was the musical director all through and he did his work most delightfully. He is dearly beloved in Nebraska. Another feature that contributed to the happiness and success of the convention was the splendid dining hall service given by the ladies of the Bethany church.

The Lord was with us. It is evidenced by the fine Christian spirit that characterized the whole convention. Brethren differed, but it was in love, and when matters were agreed to it became the voice of all. W. A. Baldwin.

C. W. B. M. Session.

Nebraska's forty-first missionary convention, held in Bethany Grove, near Lincoln, August 22-30, was graced by the presence of hundreds of C. W. B. M'ers, representing many parts of our great state. Five C. W. B. M. sessions were held in the large tabernacle—four conferences in the large tent, with eight special meetings for the Juniors and Junior workers.

Superlatives are in order in describing this convention. Favorable weather, large attendance, excellent meal service (the dining hall being managed by the Bethany Aid Society) a full program of high order, of talent and the sweetest Christian fellowship, all combined to entitle this convention to be pronounced a little in advance of the very best ever held in Nebraska.

C. C. Smith won many warm personal friends, and kindled many generous impulses in those who had hitherto been indifferent to or opposed to the negro work. His genial personality, his warm sympathy, his tenderness of appeal, as manifested in his three addresses, four shorter talks and personal conversation, awakened deep interest in the Lord's work as undertaken by the C. W. B. M.; and, although no public offering was called for, $45 was laid in his hands by individuals, most of this in $1 gifts. By special request Brother Smith remained in Nebraska two weeks after the convention visiting twelve different churches.

Mrs. Maria Reynolds Ford and Miss Nora Siler brought bright messages from our orphanage work in Porto Rico. So appealing was their vivid portrayal that over $300 was raised in pledges and cash for the Missionary Home, which Nebraska is trying to build in Porto Rico. The special music by cultured singers was noticeably free from operatic or classical effort. They were sweet, soulful gospel messages in song. Mrs. Wurth, of Fairbury; Mrs. Cain, of Stella; Mrs. Raymond Aylsworth, and J. W. Hilton, of Bethany, were the soloists. Choice "Readings," by Mrs. Harris, of Auburn, and Miss Goss, of Bethany, were entertaining and more. They deepened conviction and awakened desire to do something for Christ. Three of the leading workers from our colored church, Lincoln, were represented on the program the evening Brother Smith spoke—Pastor Vandeizer, in prayer; his daughter Ruth, in a piano solo, exquisitely rendered, and Mrs. McWilliams in scripture readings.

The Junior and Centennial work received special recognition. In a most beautiful address, by Mrs. McCans, of Beatrice, the value of enlisting the Little Light Bearers, was illustrated in songs by the "wee tots" and a gilded candelabra made after the fashion of that used in the ancient tabernacle—the seven candles, representing the completeness of the pure light of childhood—and how the children may be used in enlightening the world, through their offerings and training as light bearers and junior mission workers.

The annual reports cause Nebraska C. W. B. M'ers to rejoice in the striking growth of the missionary spirit during this past year. Our many strong missionary pastors and newly discovered gifted workers are God's instruments in bringing about this result. Our state president, Mrs. J. S. McCleery, will represent us at New Orleans. The following figures give only a few of the visible results in our C. W. B. M. work for the year just closing:

and furnished at a cost of $2,300, the entire amount having been paid for. He has received into the church 356 members, and by this work there have been planted two mission churches, Woodlawn and North Birmingham, both of which flourish under the care of pastors of their own. This is the living link work of the First Church. This year more than $1,300 has been raised, the largest amount ever given by one of our churches for home missions. The First Church is, also, the mother of churches in Bessemer and Ensley, which gives her four vigorous children to her credit. Brother Moore in addition to his work as pastor is editor of the "Alabama Christian," and president of the Alabama Christian Missionary Co-operation. He has held pastorates at Anniston, Ala.; Richmond, Va.; St. Paul, Minn.; Memphis, Tenn., and Lancaster, Ky. He believes the outlook for the work in the South was never brighter than it is to-day.

(19) D. W. Arnold is nearing the close of a second year of a good ministry at Greenville, N. C. During his period in charge the church debt has been cleared off and pews worth $1,000 installed. The membership has been greatly increased and the audiences quadrupled. All mission collections have been largely met, an orphan girl provided for at Baldwin, Ga., and there are bright prospects for another good year. New Orleans is the next thing on the program.

(20) L. M. Omer is located at Sandersville, Ga., where the work moves on encouragingly. The congregation has been occupying the lecture room in the new building during the past three months. All the work is finished now, and the dedication is to take place this month by George L. Snively, who will follow with a two-weeeks' meeting.

(21) Ira E. Cowling received his training under Ashley Johnson at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn. He has preached for a number of churches, but getting interested in orphanage work, started something of this kind at Dewdrop, which was afterwards united with the work at Baldwin, of which Brother Cowling is now superintendent.

(22) A. Robert Miller heads a work which has come through tribulation. Some of the resident preachers of the First Christian Church in Atlanta, Ga., began preaching at West Point some thirty or more years ago. From meetings in private homes there came to be services in a hall. Finally through the energy of S. P. Spiegel, and the loyalty of a few members, plans for the present beautiful church edifice were completed and this was dedicated in June, 1907. A. R. Moore, of Birmingham, preached in the morning, the present pastor giving his first sermon in his new field in the evening. While the difficulties of the work still exist there is a feeling of confidence that they will grow less. Beginning with 42 at the time of dedication, the membership, counting removals and deaths, has increased to 47, but they have a building acknowledged to be the most beautiful and attractive in the South, for the money expended. The church is loyal to all our organized work. It has the best attended prayer service in the town. In a word, here is a church at work.

(23) H. G. Sedinger identified himself with the cause in Alabama in November, 1901, and is located now at Greenville. Before this he preached for the churches at Athens, New Decatur and Fairhope, and was for a time special evangelist under the direction of the state board. Brother Sedinger was raised under Methodist teaching, but was baptized by J. Z. Tyler in the Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, O. But believing that the united brethren in Christ represented the truth, he entered the ministry of this body. When he became convinced that his position was unscriptural on some points he asked for, and obtained, an honorable dismissal from that church and the conference to which he belonged. Coming in contact with the Church of Christ and learning its position and plea, he identified himself with the First Christian Church at Findlay, O.

(24) Preston Bell Hall will, by the middle of November, have been six years pastor of the church at Kinston, N. C. That his work has been successful is attested by a membership nearly doubled, finances more than doubled, a greatly improved order of service, and a marked increase in spirituality. The various departments of the church have all been active. The auxiliary of the Kinston church leads the state in numbers and in work, and the officers are members of this church. Here there is happy co-operation with all missionary and educational work. There is care for the poor and needy at home, and the regular missionary days are faithfully observed. The work throughout the whole state owes much to this preacher. He stands for the better order of things. The state convention will meet with Brother Hall and the Kinston church on November 18.

(25) J. C. McReynolds is one of the older men whose services are not now so much in demand as formerly, but men who have done the work deserve the recognition of the men of to-day. Fortunately Brother McReynolds is not dependent merely on what he may receive from preaching, but with a couple of acres of ground he is able to raise vegetables and poultry, and provide a living for himself and wife. He frequently supplies for pulpits of Baptist and Methodist churches, and recently a few scattered Disciples of Avery's Creek and Tuckaseigee invited him to hold a series of meetings. A number of Baptist brethren attended, and the prospects are good for a union movement to which we must give larger space in a subsequent issue of "The Christian-Evangelist."

(26) B. F. Manire is one of the pioneers of our work in the South, and is still interested in it, although only a few months short of 80 years of age. His home is now with the younger of two daughters in Palmetto, Fla., and he has not regular work, but preaches as he has opportunity, pay or no pay, and generally without pay. When at home he remembers the Lord's death every Lord's day, even though none but his own family be present. Since the middle of July he has been visiting home churches in Mississippi, for which he labored sometimes regularly and sometimes occasionally from the time he began to preach until nearly four years ago. It was 55 years ago last February that he entered upon the work of proclaiming the gospel. His work has been mainly that of an evangelist. In this recent visit to scenes of former labors he has had a warm greeting at every place. It is Brother Manire's daily desire to wear out rather than rust out in the work of the Lord.

(27) Louis D. Riddell is in the process of leading his congregation in a great building enterprise. He began his work in Memphis, Tenn., with the Mississippi Avenue Church, in November, 1900. There has been growth along all lines. The church is thoroughly missionary, having the past five years given over $4,000 for this purpose. It supports an evangelist in state missions. The new building which is expected will be completed about the first of the year, will be modern in every way. It is located in a fine residence section and will cost about $40,000. Brother Riddell has a pleasant work with a most excellent people, and when the present undertaking is completed this will, no doubt, become the mother of many other congregations.

(28) Phillip F. King is located at Park avenue, the oldest and the largest of our three churches in the city of Knoxville, Tenn., with its 80,000 people. Beginning his work there in January, 1906, he has met with success. Forty-six persons have been received into the church, the missionary offerings have increased, and the audiences have been the largest in years. Brother King has received a unanimous call for his third year.

(29) J. W. Harris is located at Rich, Miss., where the brethren are hopeful of collecting in a band the members who live within ten miles of that point. These sisters have united with others in a Ladies' Aid Society incorporated under state law for fifty years. The chief object is to build a union church. Over half the money is in sight, and it is hoped that a comfortable building costing over $1,200 may soon be erected. Brother Harris writes: "Many of our brethren in Mississippi delta are from the Middle West, and are here on special business for a few months, hence permanent work is very difficult. I call to mind several places where we once had nice little churches, but now none, or but few members, can be found."

(30) L. O. Herrold became minister of the church at Jasper, Ala., January 1, 1905. Four years prior to this R. E. McCorkle had been preaching there. At Jasper several of the pioneers had held meetings and there had been some preaching for many years before. During the present pastorate the congregation has moved from an old shabby worn-out Baptist meeting house into a modern $10,000 brick church. The congregation stands for progressive work and appreciates its opportunity both at home and abroad. It is located in the county seat of Walker county, and has a great ambition to be the mother of many churches, and is working to this end.

(31) D. P. Taylor labors at Bessemer, Ala., where the work was begun in April, 1902. While worshipping in a hall for several months a lot was secured, and by the aid of the church extension board a good frame building was erected. One of the causes operating against rapid growth is the fact that the congregation is made up of employes of the various industries, and much demoralization has followed the frequent changes and removals, but it is coming to a firmer basis. Many of the people are now building homes, and it is expected that in a few more years a suitable church building can be erected. The field is a great one, and Brother Taylor believes that the simple gospel is finding a lodging place in the hearts of the people, and the reaping time is not far distant.

(32) Jesse C. Caldwell received his education at Warrensburg, Mo.; Lexington, Ky., and Yale. For a time he did ministerial work, but recently was called into an important educational sphere, as president of Atlantic Christian College at Wilson, N. C. This institution promises to do much for the work in the South. A great effort has been made to endow the college, but we have no late particulars which we can give of what it is accomplishing.

(33) L. E. Lakin is located at Greenville, Miss., in the heart of a great neglected field. There is not a place within 150 miles of him that is able to support a minister, and only two or three small congregations within this radius. The nearest located minister to the north is at Memphis; to the south at New Orleans; to the east at West Point; to the west at Little Rock. The cause at Greenville is due to three Disciples who decided upon the building of a church. Taken as a jest by the community, the offer of a nickel by one donor was accepted and the work begun. John A. Stevens came to the field with a tent. The result was only two additions, but an organization and a Sunday-school. How the work was organized deserves a much fuller statement than we can give here. Sister Rabb, of Wayside, walked up the levee a distance of ten miles to attend this meeting, bringing her savings amounting to $5. She had not heard a Christian preacher for twenty years. In 1894, during the ministry of John Tally, a lot was bought and a church building erected, which will seat about 100 people. The church was both helped by and burdened by some of the men who served it as preachers or evangelists. But in 1901 J. A. Bennett held a meeting in the courthouse, and the membership was increased from 13 to 25, and George A. Weaver was called for full time. Then came growth of the town and the church, and in 1903 a $7,000 building was erected. Ground was lost after the resignation of Brother Weaver. Finally L. E. Lakin took up the work among a membership numbering 60 and with a debt of $3,000. Since March, two years ago, the membership has been increased to 90, and the debt reduced to $800. The outlook now is bright.

(34) E. Everett Hollingworth, who has been with the church at Conyers for two and one-half years, and has served a number of our larger churches for shorter periods, has just taken charge of the Central Christian Church at Fitzgerald, Ga. This is a united congregation, comprising the former First and Central churches. It has a beautiful new stone building valued at about $1,300, and seating over 500 people in the main auditorium. There is a membership of about 220. Brother Hollingworth has had large experience in Bible school and young people's work, and will, doubtless, do much for this church, whose former pastor, George A. Maldoon, left the field in good condition.

(35) Ira M. Boswell is pastor of the Walnut Street Christian Church, Chattanooga, Tenn. This congregation has sold its present building to the Knights of Pythias, they getting possession January 1, 1910. To house them our brethren have bought the property of the First Presbyterian Church, which is the finest church site in the city, and they will get possession of this not later than this same date. The building and lot have all been deeded. The purchase includes the furniture and pipe organ. Brother Boswell was born in Mississippi, and received his college education at Lexington, Ky. At one time he was state evangelist of Mississippi. He was one of the speakers before the Foreign Society at Norfolk. He has been located at Chattanooga for five years, and under him the church has prospered. The Sunday-school has grown from less than 100 to over 300. Brother Boswell has averaged one sermon a week in the shops of the city since he went there.

(36) H. K. Pendleton preaches for one of our best churches in the South. On January 1, 1905, the First Christian Church of Atlanta consisted of between 500 and 600 members, but these were scattered over a territory of ten miles square. They had an old building seating about 300 people and in a very bad location, but they now have a house of worship which for capacity, completeness of equipment and perfection in its various adaptations, is the best in Atlanta, if not in all the South. Each of 1,500 people can hear every word of a speaker in its auditorium when this is fully opened up. Between January, 1907 and 1908, there were 385 additions; from July 28, 1907, which was dedication day, to July 26, 1908, there were only three Lord's days when there were not additions. The Bible school is doubled since the new building was used. Its "Delta Alpha" class of young ladies enrolls 300, while the "Royal Guards," a young men's class, has 150. From a cause almost without repute this is now one of the most aggressive and popular churches in the city. E. E. Violett is to lead a great meeting beginning October 16. Just now a special feature of the work is the equipment of a gymnasium for the young men, who keep open house Monday nights for the other men of the city. Another special feature is a nursery for the children of mothers, who are unable to leave their children at home. Brother Pendleton is a wise director of the forces. The church has few members of considerable financial ability, but there is courage, faith and consecration.

(37) A. M. Chisholm graduated at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., preached in Michigan during his vacations, and later worked a year in Pennsylvania. For the past four years he has been preaching in Florida, his native state, serving as evangelist under the state board the first year, and being located at Miami in the employ of the C. W. B. M. during the past three years, which work he started while evangelist.

(38) Roger L. Clark, one of the bright young men of the South, doing a good work at Savannah, Ga. His article on "The Religious Needs of the South." shows his worth.

(39) Claude E. Hill is a Missouri boy, but has done a splendid work at Mobile, Ala. The church there shows what can be accomplished when there is the right kind of a man with some co-operation of the general brotherhood behind him. The American Christian Missionary Society and Board of Church Extension, we believe, has a share in the success of this work.

Ministerial Exchange.

"Churches in Southeast Kansas needing preaching address me at Osweko, Kan."—T. W. Cottingham.

Della F. Cheney, Hoopeston, Ill., is available for meetings as singer in October and December.

L. Willard Ogle is to be in Iowa in November in a meeting. Churches or evangelists needing a chorus leader and soloist any time between now and Christmas, in that part of the country, may write him at Paris, Texas.

D. D. Dich and wife, evangelists, still have December of this year not taken. Terms, free-will offering and entertainment. Address Cuyahoga Fall, Ohio.

Miss Maude Brunk has a few open dates for fall and winter as singing evangelist. Address 3515 University avenue, Des Moines, Ia.

S. J. Vance, of Carthage, Mo., has gone to Blackfoot, Idaho, where he spent last July, to secure a home and do what he can toward locating a colony of our people and building a Christian Church. There are 8,000 acres of choice land, segregated and reclaimed by the state and opened to settlement under the Carey act on the Big Lost River, in Southeastern Idaho. These lands will furnish 500 choice homes, and an opportunity to our people to do excellent missionary work. What preacher among us has a good tent that he will donate, or sell right cheap to be used on these lands as a place of worship until we get able to build a church house? Brother Vance wants to get a tent on these lands early next spring and then wants a good singing evangelist to help him hold a meeting and establish a church. He would like to hear from those who want a part in this work.

"I would like to make a date with some good country, or country village church for October, so that I may enjoy the fields and woods. Will make the terms very reasonable. Who will be the first to answer?"—C. M. Hughes, singing evangelist, 144 Carlisle avenue, Lexington, Ky.

Down Hill All the Way.

It has become proverbial that everything good is up hill work. But we have reached an exception. It is down hill all the way to the great international convention at New Orleans, October 9-15. For a million members of our churches, all that is necessary to do to reach New Orleans is to jump into the nearest stream and float. The Father of Waters will bring them to the Crescent City. And indeed half of the rest of our membership could float down into the Gulf of Mexico and drift around to New Orleans by observing a few simple rules of navigation. But, easy as this is, most of us will find it still more convenient to go by rail!

The convention will offer a record of victories won in all fields of Christian activity, will afford such uplifting fellowship with the best people on earth, and will bring such inspiring messages from the princes of God's house, that before the adjournment all will find themselves on a very Mount of Transfiguration. From its heights all roads will lead down hill to Pittsburg, in 1909. And no Disciple needs to be told that the great Centennial in Pittsburg will be an eminence at whose feet the whole world will lie outspread as an inviting field for triumphant Christian progress. On to Pittsburg, by way of New Orleans!

History is to be made at New Orleans, this fall. Every minister of the brotherhood ought to be there to have a share in the organization of the American Christian Ministerial Association, and to help inaugurate its great campaign for the enlistment of four thousand new preachers in 1909. Every Bible school superintendent and teacher ought to be there to share in shaping and forwarding the great enterprise of enlisting one hundred thousand women and one hundred thousand men in ten thousand organized adult classes. Every elder and deacon ought to be there to give and to get suggestions as to how we may, in this closing year of the century, outstrip all previous records in restoring the Christianity of Christ in its life and products, as well as in its doctrines and ordinances. Every C. W. B. M. woman ought to be there and get a fair start in the great membership campaign for a hundred thousand. Every Endeavor officer should be present, for all must bear a part if we are to rank first in 1909. On to a greater century by way of New Orleans, 1908, and Pittsburg, 1909!

The Nebraska State Convention.

bers in C. W. B. M., 123; number of the offerings raised during the year, $6,988.51. Beatrice church and auxiliary supports Dr. Mary Longdon; Mr. and Mrs. Dillon and Miss Guendolyn Jeffers support native helpers, and thirteen orphans are supported by Nebraskans; 120 pledged to devote two half days in September visiting unenlisted women, with a view to winning them to our C. W. B. M. Our Centennial slogan is resonant with the number nine. It runs as follows: Ninety auxiliaries; 199 in home department; 2,999 membership; 1909 "Tidings" and $9,000. "Personal Work!" is our watchword. Our state C. W. B. M. colors are white, lavender and gold. Badges of the first are worn by those in auxiliaries having less than 50 members. Of lavender those belonging to societies having between 50 and 100 members, and societies having 100 or more wear the gold badges. Cozad, Lincoln, First, Bethany and Beatrice are gold badge societies; the last named is next to the largest society in the sisterhood (as far as heard from), having 240 members, 140 "Tidings" and it was on the honor roll. Nine lavender badge societies.

Our Budget

—On to New Orleans!

—"The Christian-Evangelist" Special starts Wednesday, October 7. Those intending to join it should send in their names at once.

—We issue another special number in the interest of our work in the South.

—We are indebted to many brethren throughout the South for their co-operation in helping us to give to the wider brotherhood some knowledge of the conditions which our Cause in the South has to face.

—We are sorry that one or two brethren upon whom we relied for some special work failed us, but there may have been some good excuses, and we hold nothing against them.

—Next week we hope to publish a special number dealing with the work in Kansas. Our brethren are to celebrate, on October 22-28, at Topeka, the fiftieth year of our work in that great state.

—Those wanting extra copies of these special numbers should let us know at once. Frequently a demand comes in when there is not a single copy, other than for our files, in the office.

—We call particular attention to our special offer on page 1273 of this issue, relating to trial subscriptions extending over the three remaining months of this year. If our good friends and subscribers want to see the influence of "The Christian-Evangelist" multiplied, they can help in the matter by inducing some friend or friends to send us a quarter of a dollar, which will pay for three months' subscription to this paper. Do it now!

—We are glad to report a decided improvement in the condition of Brother Garrison. This first manifested itself about the time our paper was beginning to be circulated last week. The abscess began to be more active, and the result was considerable relief of the tension in the face. Since that time it has been a case of now a little better, and now a little worse, but, on the whole, an improvement. There is a personal statement from him in the Editor's Easy Chair. We think our readers will be interested in the illustration which appears on that page, for it was the last snapshot made of the Editor, taken about a week before he became ill. The Assistant Editor and his father were guests of Brother Garrison on a fishing trip.

—"The Christian-Evangelist" has, by its acts and not its words, been showing what its interest is in the cause of state missions. No newspaper in the brotherhood has given anything like the space or prominence to the work in the various states that "The Christian-Evangelist" has in the last four or five years. Not only have we been publishing special state issues, but no paper has published such full reports of state conventions. Witness within the past few months the reports of Missouri, Iowa, Ohio, Indiana, Oklahoma and Illinois. This week we have a very full report of the fine Nebraska convention. We just go ahead and furnish the readers of "The Christian-Evangelist" with the great things the brotherhood is doing, and we are not seeking to array one missionary society against another, or state workers against other brethren. It is all the glorious work of a great brotherhood. Every worthy cause has a claim on "The Christian-Evangelist."

—The Tennessee state convention is changed from Rockwood to Chattanooga, October 26-29.

—Joseph C. Todd takes the work at Bloomington, Ind.

—W. L. Ennefer has closed his third year at Clifton, and takes charge at once at Canton and Salina, Kan.

—C. A. Watkins has resigned at East Palestine, Ohio.

—R. A. Adamson, of Cherokee, Kan., preached at Caney on September 20.

—Edward Clutter is in a meeting at Blue Hill, Neb., where N. F. Horne is minister.

—A joint congress of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples will be held at Chicago November 10, 11, 12.

—W. T. Brooks has just closed a successful meeting at Calhoun, Ky., as announced in our evangelistic columns.

—A. W. Henry will be able to give part of his time this winter to evangelistic work. Norcatur, Kan., will be his headquarters.

—J. W. Carpenter filled the pulpit at Cherryvale, Kan., September 20. His home church at Neodesha is being transformed into a new building.

—The church at Milestone, Sask., Canada, doubled its Church Extension apportionment. The Sunday-school has set aside one day to be known as Church Extension Day.

—Clay T. Runyan is giving up his work at La Junta, Colo., to enter the evangelistic field, October 1. He has a few open dates and can be addressed at his present field of work.

—The church at Winnipeg, Manitoba, increased its Church Extension offering from $27 last year to $77.50, with more to follow, this year. Ernest C. Mobley is the pastor.

—Charles E. Shultz will begin his evangelistic campaign October 6, at the Fairfield Church, Vincent, Ohio, then at Garfield, Lima, Ohio, which is a return date. He has moved to New Castle, which will now be his permanent address.

—Some young man who has already begun to preach, or one who wishes to preach and has no money to spend for school work now, can find a field, for the way will be made as easy as possible for him. He is needed at Dean, Iowa, and can learn particulars by addressing the Dean Trading Co.

—H. G. Dilling has closed his work at Houston, Mo. He was presented in the farewell reception with a Bible and a number of presents as token of good will. He contemplates entering the evangelistic field and for his remuneration will be content with his expenses and collections.

—George L. Snively has recently changed his residence from St. Louis to Greenville, Ill., where he will have with him his father and mother. Brother Snively is now engaging successfully in evangelistic work, while he will continue to dedicate churches as opportunity offers.

—Marion Stevenson will stop off at Washington, D. C., on his way to the Maryland Convention, and speak on Rally Day at the Ninth St. Church, lecturing at the same church on October 2 on "Bible School Ideals," and at the Vermont Avenue Church on Lord's day evening, October 4.

—A. R. Adams has closed two and one-half years of service as pastor of the church at Milestone, Sask., Canada, and will soon leave this field. He was the first of our brethren to take pastoral work in Saskatchewan. He built up from the ground there and established the Cause in two other places. He is commended by J. L. Romig and W. J. Wright, and leaves against the wishes of his congregation. His successor has not been chosen. Edwin Jones is the church clerk.

—E. H. Peters, a former Congregational minister, has united with our church at Saginaw, Mich., and preached a very acceptable and thoughtful sermon to the brethren there. S. W. Pearcy writes us that he is willing to accept a call to work with one or two churches, and Brother Pearcy heartily commends him.

—New Mexico has just held a very good convention. A number of men of national reputation were present. The outlook for the progress of our Cause in this great territory are good. F. F. Grim is the corresponding secretary. One of the decisions just reached was to bring this work and that of West Texas into closer union.

STATE COMPETITION

Is waxing warm in the contest for first place in the observance of Children's Day for Home Missions, November 22nd. Kentucky has led the states heretofore. But Illinois and Kansas are pushing up close to first place.

All the State Bible School Superintendents have thrown themselves without reserve into the campaign to line up every school. Home Missions and State Missions lie at the base of all our missionary future.

Let every Bible School Superintendent in the brotherhood wheel his school

In every quality necessary to make A PERFECT INSTRUMENT. Call or send for catalogues and full particulars.

THE ESTEY CO.,
1116 Olive St. - - ST. LOUIS, MO.

—Mrs. John Poorman formerly a member of the Hamilton Avenue Christian Church, a teacher of the primary class, who is now living at Maplewood, has become assistant pastor to F. A. Mayhall and head of the deaconesses. Her work will be entirely voluntary. A vigorous campaign is being planned to reach every home in the vicinity.

—J. A. Roberts preached at Big Flat Rock Church, in Rush Co., Ind., on September 20, from the same pulpit where he began his ministry forty-five years ago on that date. He is still hale and vigorous, and is ready to hold meetings, or supply for other ministers. He can be addressed at 244 West Franklin St., Shelbyville, Ind.

—The church building at Olney, Ill., has just been beautifully decorated and repaired at an expense of about $700. D. W. Conner and his congregation now have the most beautiful house in the city. The work is gaining, and the prospects bright for a larger church. J. Fred Jones recently visited there to the delight of the brethren.

—E. J. Lampton has closed his labors for the church in Center, Mo. Many improvements have just been made upon the house. There is a fair Sunday-school, good Endeavors under the direction of Prof. Mothersead, and a training class of twenty-nine. Brother Lampton will hold a meeting with the church at Stillwell, Ill., October 1. Floyd Taylor is the minister there.

—H. T. Burgess has just closed his first year with the church at Texas, Ill. The record is a successful one. Above the current expenses of the church, $211 was raised for missions, Sunday-school work and repairs. Every missionary offering has more than trebled itself, and some days in the church calendar not formally observed were this year. The little church has a bright prospect. A. T. Huff just closed a meeting.

—All Missourians should remember that October is the great rally month in Christian Endeavor, with two special aims: First, a mission study class in every society; second, every society vitalized into greater works, and another society organized wherever possible. Keep in touch with State Superintendent H. W. Hunter, at Mt. Washington, Mo.

—The indebtedness of Shelbyville, Ind., has been reduced by $2,500 in the eight months of ministry of J. P. Meyers. By the first of October, at least $1,000 will be paid. A liberal gentleman has given a check for $1,350 to clear the indebtedness on a choice corner lot in the southeast part of the city, and dedication service was held last Lord's day. It is hoped that a second church will be formed before very long.

—Christian University entered upon its fifty-first session with the largest attendance there has been in the past twenty-five years. Comparing the registration at the end of the first week with the same period last year there was an increase of 67 per cent. About sixty of the students are preparing for the ministry. This is very gratifying, but as Brother Johann says, there ought to be twice as many to supply the constantly growing demand for consecrated and educated ministers.

—L. N. D. Wells reports that the new Centennial church at East Orange, N. J., is nearing completion. The cut glass is being placed, the contracts for seats and heating have been let, and arrangements are now being closed for the dedication of the first church building representing our Cause in this state. Z. T. Sweeney will lead on this occasion. Brother Wells has returned from his vacation, which was spent in Pittsburg, Central Ohio and on the Great Lakes. He was privileged to preach each Lord's day for Wallace Tharp, in the historic old church at Allegheny.

—J. W. Walker is doing a good work at Miller, Neb. He looks after two mission points besides his regular field. Last winter Evangelist E. Van Forell held a few meetings, with 24 additions. Mrs. Ella Gibson writes that this was remarkable, from the fact that for ten years the people had hardened themselves against all religious influence. Since the meeting other churches have taken on new life. The saloon had to go as well as the public dance hall. Brother Forell is to hold a meeting again this winter, following the one he is now holding at Grand View, a mission point.

—The brethren need not usually go to the expense of sending telegrams reporting meetings, except on Saturdays, Sundays or early Monday morning. Our "As We Go to Press" columns are for late messages that can not be handled through the mails. They are not intended to give any special prominence to news, but merely to bring our news as nearly up to date as is possible. He who is represented in the regular evangelistic or other news columns has just as much honor among the brotherhood as he would have were his message placed under "As We Go to Press." It is not a question of merit; it is a question of newspaper "make-up."

—There is joy in the congregation of the Marshall Street Church, Richmond, Va., where a mortgage of long standing has just been cancelled. When B. H. Melton, the pastor, held the mortgage in his hand, announcing that the last dollar had been paid, as one person the audience rose, singing, "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow." For more than four months the membership have been making every effort to pay off the debt on the building and property. Now there is a small balance on hand, which will be held as a nucleus for the new building fund. The success of Brother Melton is witnessed in the doubling of the membership of his church, as well as in the paying off of the debt.

—John Ray Ewers closes three years of service with the church at Youngstown, O., October 1. He has accepted a cordial invitation to remain indefinitely. During this pastorate 240 people have united with the church—168 by primary obedience. The Bible school enrolls 360, a mission circle for young men and women numbers 150, there is a men's club of 100, while other departments of the work are in proportion. The total membership is now 900. Great numbers of young people attend the church, for it is a social center. In the three years 55 men, from the age of 18 to 40, have united with the church. The old debt has been paid off and many improvements made on the property. We have three strong churches in Youngstown, all of them prospering.

—Ernest C. Mobley, taking F. D. Power's thirty-third anniversary as a text, prays that this record may encourage many of the younger men to strive after long pastorates. He writes: "Hundreds of fields, equally inviting, are beckoning us to similar records. Are we willing to pay the price? All ages, countries, and movements, have beacon lights to lead lesser lights to the summit of the highest endeavor. Wise are they who deserve to profit. God speaks in the record of great deeds. I have followed Brother Power many years through his weekly contributions to our papers, and now study his long ministry for every secret spring of success. May God add many prosperous years to his golden record, and may this be a precursor to many long pastorates in strategic centers."

—E. J. Fenstermacher has, for several weeks, been settled with the church at Bowling Green, Ky., which field had been awaiting him since June. He would not leave Poplar Bluff, Mo., however, until his successor had been selected. This is William M. Baker, of Meridian, Miss., who will go North immediately after the New Orleans Convention. He is a man of fine character and a preacher of ability. He was, we believe, a classmate of Graham Frank, W. A. Fite, M. A. Hart, and other preachers in the state to which he now comes. Brother Fenstermacher deserves much credit for carrying on a difficult work in Southeast Missouri, a part of the state where we are not strong. He leaves the work at Poplar Bluff in a good condition, with a new church building, and considerable addition to the membership.

Beautify Your Complexion

Drive Away Liver Spots, Blotches, Pimples and Make Your Skin Clear and White.

Trial Package Sent Free.

If you want a beautiful complexion, free from liver spots, pimples and freckles and other discolorations, purify your blood.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers cleanse and clear the blood, remove all poisonous and irritating influences and permit it to flow gently and uniformly all through the veins. These little wafers are famous for their beautifying effects, and every lady may use them with perfect freedom.

They do their good work remarkably fast owing to the wonderful power of the ingredients which they contain. Here they are: Calcium Sulphide, Quassia, Eucalyptus, Golden Seal and an alterative and laxative. Ask your doctor what he thinks of these as blood purifiers. He prescribes them many times every year.

The popularity of Stuart's Calcium Wafers is great and growing constantly every year. They do a wonderful work with apparently little effort and do not necessitate suffering and expense as so many complexion cures occasion.

You may enjoy a fair complexion if you will use these little wafers. They are taken after each meal and go into your blood, just like food. They do your entire system a great good. They help your intestines and relieve constipation, thereby giving the system the power to remove and exclude poisonous gases and fluids which filter through the intestines into the system and contaminate it.

Don't despair if your complexion is muddy. Write today for a free trial package of Stuart's Calcium Wafers or go to your druggist and buy a box. Price 50c. Simply write your name and address and a trial package will be sent you by mail without cost. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

California.

Ukiah, Sept. 19.—We are in a union meeting with Bulgin and Gates. Bulgin is a preacher of power, especially on Christian evidences and the divinity of Christ. Gates has a remarkable gift as a soloist. We hope to accomplish much good for Ukiah. I was voted a month vacation, but the interest has been kept up to such an extent that I thought it best not to be away but one Sunday.—O. Wilkinson.

Illinois.

Findlay, Sept. 22.—I have just closed a two-weeks' meeting at Pleasant Hill, near Kansas, Ill., with the following results: Three by obedience, four reclaimed, two by statement and one by letter, making a total of ten in two weeks. The church is wide awake and active. The work here at Findlay is going nicely. The foundation of our new church building is now laid and the work of construction is going on rapidly.—J. J. Bare, minister.

Rossville, Sept. 21.—Two more confessions at the morning service and three baptisms.—M. S. Metzle.

Carbondale, Sept. 21.—We have had nine additions to the church here the past two Lord's days. We are getting ready for a great Bible school rally October 4. We begin a revival meeting the second Lord's day of November.—J. W. K.

LeRoy, Sept. 21.—Evangelists Monser and Haley are in a promising meeting with me.—L. E. Chase.

Olney, Sept. 22.—Our work is gaining. We have had six added since last report.—D. W. Conner, pastor.

Flanagan, Sept. 24.—John R. Golden, assisted by Charles E. McVay, singer, just closed a successful meeting here. Brother McVay is now at Fremont, Neb., assisting I. H. Fuller, the minister, in a meeting for the third time.

Texas, Sept. 20.—We have just closed a meeting with three additions. A. T. Huff preached the last week of the meeting. This little church has a very bright prospect for the future.—H. T. Burgess, pastor.

Kansas.

Canton, Sept. 21.—There were six received into the church here yesterday at the close of my second year of work with this church.—J. F. Hay.

Kensington, Sept. 22.—We had five added here last Lord's day in regular work. One added a few weeks ago not previously reported.—Nelson Gardner.

Cherryvale, Sept. 24.—Closed a short meeting at Montgomery City, Mo., September 13, with four additions—two of them confessions, both men.—B. D. Gillispie.

Kansas City, Sept. 22.—In a short meeting conducted by home forces of the Quindaro boulevard mission, there were 20 accessions—three by confession, one from another body, others by letter and reinstatement. Shall organize with about 50 members soon. Outlook very promising.—William M. Mayfield, pastor.

Kentucky.

Beard, Sept. 21.—Prof. H. L. Calhoun, of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., closed a ten-days' meeting here with 23 added to the church.—Harvey Baker Smith.

Louisiana.

Lake Charles, Sept. 21.—There was one confession at the evening service yesterday—a lady whose husband united by statement last Sunday.—Otis Hawkins.

Nebraska.

Elmwood, Sept. 21.—Two added here by letter recently. Our Endeavor has been reorganized—26 having signed the constitution last night. Our normal training class numbers 41 and we are already one-third of the way through "training for service."—L. A. Chapman.

Oklahoma.

Guthrie, Sept. 21.—Eight added September 20. On September 27 we open a meeting under the leadership of John L. Brandt. Our church seats but 700, hence will use a tabernacle 80x100 feet.—J. L. Noblitt.

Oklahoma City, Sept. 20.—Our rally day a great success. Eleven added to the church. We are praying for Brother Garrison's recovery.—Mrs. H. S. Gilliam.

Missouri.

Fulton, Sept. 21.—Closed a meeting at Corder, Mo., Sept. 14, with 27 baptisms, two by letter and one reclaimed. Also church differences adjusted. Meeting closed with intense interest, and everything seemed to indicate that it should have continued. Hence we hope many will yet come to the Lord. Have been here resting last few days. Worshipped last Lord's day with my old fellow student, W. A. Fite. Preached for him in the morning on "The Blessing of Giving." The church extension offering was taken. Already nearly $80 has come in. Brother Fite expects $100. September 27 my old partner, D. G. Dungan, joins me, beginning a meeting at Cowgill, Mo.—R. Tibbs Maxey, general evangelist.

Minden Mines, Sept. 22.—Just closed a three-weeks' meeting at Leesville with 13 additions—11 by baptism and two by letter. W. S. Hood, of Clinton, did the preaching. There was delivered no mutilated gospel and the people heard it gladly.—H. E. Carpenter, pastor.

Golden City, Aug. 17.—Our work continues to grow. Six received the right hand of Christian fellowship yesterday. Our Bible school is growing very interesting. Elder Stacy Phillips, of Ponca, Okla., preached for me last evening.—J. Quincy Biggs.

Canton, Sept. 22.—I have closed my meetings at Hester, Mo., with 20 additions. The church was very poor spiritually, but we have regenerated the whole community, and expect several more additions. The work here has taken on a new life. I was assisted by my wife and daughter.—J. E. Teaney, minister.

Osceola, Sept. 23.—We have just closed an 18-days' meeting with E. H. Williamson as evangelist. There were 11 added—seven by primary obedience, four by statement. Sister Williamson's personal work and her singing were much appreciated. Local conditions prevented the meeting from being what it should have been. We are expecting harvest from the seed sown. Brother and Sister Williamson will do any church good and strengthen the pastor.—Frank Jalageas, minister.

Prosperity, Sept. 25.—The meeting held in the skating rink here by H. F. King, pastor of the Carterville Christian Church, was a success. There were 47 additions—all adults, and 45 of them were heads of families. A church, Sunday-school and prayer-meeting are to be organized at once, and the people seem very earnest and enthusiastic. Only those who have labored in the mining districts know how very difficult it is to awaken an interest in the cause of Christ. Brother King is a power in the pulpit and is being designated as "The Walking Bible." The church at Carterville is taking on new life and the Sunday-school is steadily increasing.—A Member.

Williamstown, Sept. 21.—I closed my seventh meeting with the church at Steffensville, Mo., September 19, with 40 additions—34 baptisms, two from the Baptists and four by statement. In this number are included thirteen young men and twelve heads of families, two of whom are above 60 years. I preached at Lewistown, Mo., yesterday. Had one confession last night. I began at Williamstown, Mo., to-night.—C. L. Harbord, evangelist.

Ridgway, Sept. 21.—My meeting is progressing

Do You Hear Well?

The Stolz Electrophone—A New, Scientific and Practical Invention for Those Who Are Deaf or Partially Deaf—May Now be Tested in Your Own Home.

Deaf or partially deaf people may now make a month's trial of the Stolz Electrophone at home. This is unusually important news for the deaf, for by this plan the final selection of the one completely satisfactory hearing aid is made easy and inexpensive for everyone.

Mrs. C. Lideeks, 238 12th Ave., Maywood, Ill., wears an Electrophone. Less conspicuous than eyeglasses.

This new invention (U. S. Patent No. 763,575) renders unnecessary such clumsy, unsightly and frequently harmful devices as trumpets, horns, tubes, ear drums, fans, etc. It is a tiny electric telephone that fits on the ear, and which, the instant it is applied, magnifies the sound waves in such manner as to cause an astonishing increase in the clearness of all sounds. It overcomes the buzzing and rearing ear noises, and also so constantly and electrically exercises the vital parts of the ear that, usually, the natural, unaided hearing itself is gradually restored.

What Three Business Men Say

The Electrophone is very satisfactory. Being small in size and great in hearing qualities makes it preferable to any I have tried and, I believe, I have tried all of them. M. W. HOYT, Wholesale Grocer, Michigan Ave. & River St., Chicago.

I got so deaf I could not hear with my speaking tube and was advised to try the Electrophone. After fifteen years of deafness, discomfort and worry, I now hear perfectly at church and at concerts. W. R. UTLEY, Sales Manager, S. A. Maxwell & Co., Chicago.

I have now used your Electrophone over a year, and know that it is a first-class, scientific hearing device. Without it people have to shout directly in my ear to make me hear. With it, I can hear distinctly when spoken to in an ordinary tone. Best of all, it has stopped my head noises, which were a terrible aggravation. LEWIS W. MAY, Cashier, 100 Washington Street, Chicago.

Write or call at our Chicago office for particulars of our personal home test offer and list of prominent endorsers who will answer inquiries. Physicians cordially invited to investigate. Address or call (all if you can).

nicely with Evangelist Luther Moore. He is a good, clean-hearted minister, and any church in need of such a man will make no mistake in securing his services. We have 13 confessions to date, mostly grown people. The attendance is good.—W. H. Hobbs.

Texas.

Abilene, Sept. 21.—One accession by statement to the South Side Christian Church at prayer-meeting Wednesday night. Also one addition Sunday from the Methodists. We will raise more than our apportionment for church extension.—J. H. Shepard.

Bryan, Sept. 21.—Yesterday evening I went out to Rock Prairie and preached—one baptism—a man 60 years old. At Bible school yesterday morning the school elected J. J. Ray superintendent, as representative to New Orleans convention. At 11 a. m. the church elected me. The work is moving along nicely and we face the third year with a good deal of hope.—James A. Challener, pastor.

Laredo, Sept. 21.—There were six additions yesterday—three of them converted Catholics.—D. D. Boyle, minister.

Ladonia, Sept. 22.—Brother Douthit and I have just closed a meeting with J. W. Gates at Weimar, Texas, with 17 additions. We go next to Ladonia, Mo.—E. V. Spicer.

Washington.

Colfax, Sept. 13.—This has been a day of much rejoicing. There were 17 accessions to the church and more to follow. An advisory board of six men and six women was elected to-day. Forward now in the name of Christ.—L. W. M.

The Centennial Session at New Orleans.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 14.

In addition to the address of Hugh McLellan, of Richmond, Ky., there will be a rapid fire presentation of the Centennial from every angle. These speeches of from two to five minutes each will not be a few impromptu remarks, but thoroughly prepared, concentrated and electrical messages from men who count in the Kingdom of God. C. S. Brooks, New Castle, Pa.; J. N. Jessup, Little Rock, Ark.; W. E. Ellis, Cynthiana, Ky.; J. T. Ogle, Paris, Tex.; C. H. Winders, Indianapolis, Ind.; L. W. McCreary, St. Louis, Mo.; O. W. ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

International Teacher Training Conference.

AT WILLIAMS BAY, WIS., AUGUST 27-29, 1908.

I. CONFERENCE REPRESENTATION.

Seven members of the committee on education.

Five general secretaries of state associations.

Eight teacher training superintendents of state associations.

Three international officers.

Eleven denominational leaders representing the following denominations: Baptist, Baptist South, Christian, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal South, Reformed Episcopal.

In addition a number of pastors, teachers of teacher training classes, teachers of adult classes, superintendents and officers of Sunday-schools.

Total number of states represented—eighteen.

II. DIGEST OF THE GENERAL DISCUSSION.

That the state and other undenominational schools and colleges be urged to furnish to pupils the whole of the teacher training course.

That in the enrollment of students and the issuing of diplomas in co-operation with the denominations, the international association conform to the wishes of the various denominations so far as these denominations have voted to conform to the standardized courses agreed on at the Philadelphia conference.

That the International Association secure and print suitable examination questions for all the various approved teacher training courses. That the questions be furnished only when requested, and that details be referred to the committee on education with power to act.

Under lead of Dr. Hamill as to the number of questions desired on the first standard course, the largest number preferred fifty questions.

III. RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

That inasmuch as it is the sense of the conference that greater care should be exercised to secure an accurate enrollment of teacher training students, we ask that the international committee on education advise as follows:

That every teacher training class shall keep an accurate enrollment and record of attendance from date of organization.

That after the fourth meeting after organization a bona fide enrollment shall be reported without delay to the state or provincial office.

That, in so far as the teacher can judge, only students who give fair indication of continuing in the work shall be included in this report to the state or provincial office.

That it is the sense of the conference that examinations on specialization for teachers of the elementary grades be sent to the state or provincial teacher training superintendent.

That it is the sense of this conference that the standard for specialization for teachers of the elementary grades, for this triennium, be the ground covered by the material on pages 2-7, and 19-36, inclusive, of Booklet F of the international series, plus suitable and appropriate additional material in story telling and hand work. Credit to be given for the satisfactory completion of this work in the form of a suitable seal affixed to either the first standard or advanced standard teacher training diploma.

That it is the sense of this conference that a fee of 50 cents be charged for the first standard course, and $1 for the advanced standard course. The same to be paid as an enrollment fee, or as an examination fee, or divided between them.

That it is the sense of this conference that at all state, provincial, county, or denominational conventions there should be a teacher training hour, at which time, at least, the teacher training work accomplished should be reported and recognition granted to all teacher training graduates.

It was unanimously voted that the conference send a telegram of sympathy to Rev. Charles A. Oliver, superintendent of teacher training for Pennsylvania Association, whose wife died suddenly on Sunday, August 16, 1908.

That this conference warmly appreciates and thanks the Sunday-school Camp Association for their generous and sympathetic hospitality in providing this hall and these beautiful grounds for our meetings, in furnishing the delightful sail, and the splendid banquet.

IV. ACTION OF THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.—It was voted:

That reports to denominational authorities be made quarterly, and include (a) location of class, (b) number of members, (c) name and postoffice address of teacher, (d) course of study.

That where either of the standard courses is pursued by students in residence in an institution of learning the minimum of time may be one-half of that established for ordinary classes.

That the international teacher training superintendent prepare at least, annually, lists of questions on all approved courses of study, the same to be approved by this committee, and printed by the International Association for the use of state and provincial associations as called for; that the co-operation of denominational superintendents be invited to the end of securing and maintaining uniform standards; that every list of questions contain the rules of the committee for the conduct of examination.

That the special order for the next meeting, to be held in Chicago during the month of February, 1909, be the approval of courses of study.

That the standard for specialization for elementary grades be the material in Booklet F, excluding the section for pupils on supplemental work, and including in addition suggestions on hand work and story work to be submitted by the elementary committee to the committee on education at its next meeting.

That specialization for the intermediate grades be referred to the intermediate committee to report if possible at the next meeting of this committee.

That a special leaflet be prepared on the international reading circle work. Such leaflet to be suitable for the use of the various state and provincial associations.

That denominations be requested to make selection of reading books for their own Sunday-school workers, and that whenever they make such selection and the same is approved by this committee announcement of same shall be included in the international reading circle leaflet.

That the International Teacher Training Leaflet No. 1 be revised and made to include the names of all approved courses of study, in addition to the standards for courses; also all rules established in regard to the issuance of the international diploma.

That a leaflet be prepared including the rules governing summer schools for Sunday-school workers. The leaflet to include the rules whereby international recognition may be secured, a suggestive enrollment blank, and other helpful information relating to the conduct and management of these schools.

That a blank be prepared for the use of summer schools in making report to the International Association.

That the teacher training superintendent be instructed to confer with the denominational and other Sunday-school publishers, and secure their help in advertising the schools which comply with the international requirements and request international recognition.

That the official certificate of any institution of learning testifying to an examination on any of the topics covered by our standard courses, should be accepted for proper credits by supervisors of examinations.

That in parting company, officially, with our beloved executive secretary, the retiring international teacher training superintendent, Mr. W. C. Pearce, we place on record our appreciation of the vigor, faithfulness and ability of his administration, the courtesy and consideration that has governed all his dealings with us, and the signal success that, with the blessing of God, has attended his efforts for the development and extension of the teacher training work in the international field.

A Model Mission Study Class at New Orleans Convention.

Prof. C. T. Paul, of Hiram College, is to conduct a convention mission study class during the national convention session this year. Prof. Paul has for years taught the largest mission study class in the world. This last year the enrollment was about 200. His class is the most popular in the college. Many classes are being organized all over the brotherhood. The great question is is "How may I teach missions in the most successful way?" Those who attend the New Orleans convention may have an exhibition of the real thing. Prof. Paul will use a text book on home missions and one on foreign missions. A large hall in the same building with the convention auditorium has been secured. The class will meet from 8:30 to 9:30 each morning. This will be before the regular program begins, and will not interfere with it in the least. The text books used will be "The Why and How of Foreign Missions" and "The Frontier." We believe that hundreds of strong mission study classes will result from this class.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

TRIFLERS.

Topic October 7.—Luke 9:57-62.

Three classes of individuals are indicated in this passage in the ninth chapter of Luke. "And it came to pass as they went on their way, a certain man said unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest. And Jesus said unto him, Foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." Strange that the Master should speak thus to any one who expressed a willingness to follow him? This fellow represents a certain class of folks who are always willing to join anybody or anything that comes along. They are known as "jiners"—in the church and also in the lodges. They have an overflowing zeal—while it lasts. But the trouble is their zeal not only overflows on occasion, but seems to run out at the bottom also. In the expressive, if not elegant phrase of the farm, they simply "peter out." We have a large lot of this sort of folks, good in their way as long as it lasts; but they don't last. That's the trouble. And Jesus, who knew what was in men, understood the character of the individual who was so ready to proffer himself, without reservation, as willing to follow him anywhere and everywhere. Now it's a beautiful thing to be willing to follow the Christ; but something more than willingness is needful. We need to have a just consideration of what it means to be a disciple of Christ. It meant everything then. It does not mean less to-day. We must be not only willing but dead in earnest about it.

"And he said unto another, Follow me. But he said, Lord, suffer me first to go bury my father. Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury the dead; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God." This man represents another class to be found in every community. They are men and women of good characters, excellent abilities, good families, with much to commend them to the Master and to the church. The trouble with them is they are wrapped up in their own affairs, entirely devoted to their own families. They have one scripture, which does them service on any and all occasions: "He that provideth not for his own hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." A splendid sentiment that; but like "Charity begins at home" (which is chimney-corner scripture) it surely covers a multitude of sins. However it's a mighty flimsy covering, which the Master sweeps aside with a gesture and the startling words, "Let the dead bury the dead; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God." Which means that it is more urgent to look after the living than the dead. Ordinarily, there are always plenty to go to funerals. And many of these rarely or never go to the Lord's house on other occasions. It's a fact that our funerals are the biggest thing about a good many of us. The biggest event in the life of lots of folks is their funeral. But the life is more than death. God wants workers. To preach the kingdom of God is better than to preach funerals. The average funeral sermon is a miserable makeshift. "Get busy" is the Master's message to men.

The man who was willing to follow Christ but wanted first to go bid them farewell who were in his house, represents that large class who are "almost persuaded," but who never quite come to the point where they are really willing to come out squarely for Christ; or the ones, who having confessed their faith in him, are forever looking back and wondering, after all, whether it pays.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

New Mexico Convention.

The second annual convention of the Disciples of Christ of New Mexico was held in Roswell. Over thirty delegates were present. In the absence of President J. M. Kindred, J. T. Webb, of Melrose, delivered the president's address, and later was elected president of the convention. J. A. Stout, of Artesia, was elected recording secretary.

The program was far above the average. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, Mo., delivered two inspiring addresses. J. C. Mason, of Texas; W. J. Wright, of Cincinnati; Mrs. Louise Kelley, of Kansas City; H. B. Robison, of El Paso, Texas, and S. T. Shore, of Hereford, Texas, all came to us with a feast of good things. We were disappointed in not having W. E. Garrison, E. M. Haile and B. S. Gowan with us.

The following executive board, with headquarters at El Paso, Texas, was elected for the ensuing year: President, W. E. Garrison, of Las Cruces; vice-president, H. B. Robison, of El Paso; secretary, Dr. R. B. Homan, of El Paso; treasurer, W. H. Bryan, of El Paso; B. S. Gowan, of El Paso, Texas; C. C. Hill, of Roswell; J. W. Van Cleave, of Albuquerque. F. F. Grim, our corresponding secretary, is doing a permanent work. Under his wise management we are looking forward to another year of not inflated reports of not what I did, but of sure, steady, enduring progress for Christ's cause in New Mexico.

The officers elected by the C. W. B. M. were: President, Mrs. George Fowler, wife of our beloved minister at Roswell; vice-president, Mrs. J. W. Van Cleave, of Albuquerque; secretary, Mrs. Beck, of Roswell; treasurer, Mrs. W. F. Schwartz, of Artesia; superintendent of Young People's work, Mrs. H. B. Robison, of El Paso, Texas.

We hold our next convention at El Paso, Texas, the last of May, 1909. We hope at this time to arrange with the brethren of West Texas to co-operate with us in missionary work. Arthur Stout.

Artesia, N. M.

Akron, O., and Vincinity.

Preachers and people are now trying to make the fall work in the churches boom. September 13 was a happy day at High Street. It was the occasion of a union service between the South Akron mission and the "mother church." W. G. Loucks, the pastor in South Akron, gave a report of the work since January 1 and preached a brief sermon. Both congregations voted the morning one of the happiest occasions of the year. George Darsie is doing a most excellent work at High Street. The Broad Street Church is progressing nicely under the wise leadership of Lloyd H. Miller. There have been a number of additions to the church, and its growth otherwise has been gratifying to both the pastors and congregation. Herbert Moninger was with this congregation September 21, stirring up things in the interest of teacher training. A. F. Stahl, of the Wabash Avenue church, was away a month during the summer on account of his health. He is back, much improved. During his absence the church was newly decorated and beautified. The congregation tendered a reception to him and Mrs. Stahl.——A. M. Bird, the missionary of the O. C. M. S. at Barberton, reports that mission in a most hopeful condition and that it will soon be in possession of a good house of worship, which is being purchased from one of the denominational churches.——We are busy planning for our meeting in the South end, which begins November 1. The pastor will teach a class in personal work during October, which will serve as an immediate preparation for the meeting and as a supplemental course to the teacher training course, which will be organized September 30. William Kraft, of Cleveland, will occupy the pulpit at the morning service October 4, in the interest of the orphanage work. F. M. Green keeps a fatherly watch over all of us. His presence is always welcomed in all our churches. We are all going to be in line for state missions, teacher training, Children's day for home missions and a campaign for lost souls.—W. G. Loucks.

The Meeting at Grand Island.

For many months the Commercial club, of Grand Island, Neb., has been working for a greater city. The church took up the watchword, "The best and quickest way to a better and greater Grand Island is through the religious awakening." We secured the services of William J. Lockhart and John P. Garmong. Systematic and constant advertising and personal work was done. There were one hundred confessions and thirty by letter and statement, fifteen of these from other churches. There were forty-two men and eighty-eight women, and sixty-one new families were reached. Eleven whole families came into the church together and many other families were united in the church. Two-thirds of the new members pledged over three hundred dollars per year to the church work, and the people asked the officers to increase the minister's salary to the amount of $150 per year. Our Bible school has had about 140 in attendance, but last Sunday there were 283, and we will go beyond the 300.

Grand Island is in line for many great victories, and I know of no one we would rather have lead us in a future campaign than W. J. Lockhart and J. P. Garmong.

James R. McIntire, minister.

Joel Brown at Queen City, Mo.

I closed here one of the best meetings I ever held. The preparation was complete; the brethren arranged to have the meeting in the park situated in the center of the town; the ladies procured heavy muslin, and sewing it together, made the top canvass of a tent which was stretched so as to form a shelter for about 800 seats, and outside of that we had all the park; as a consequence our average audience was about 1,200. I was enabled to preach to the whole country; men sat in their store doors and some of them in that way heard enough to cause them to yield themselves to God. I wish to commend this method of preparation for meetings in the summer. Professor Swanson, who has charge of the public schools at Green Top, directed the chorus of 30 or 40 voices accompanied by an orchestra of 6 pieces, like a veteran. Having such large and diversified audiences, I dealt largely in apologetics, and later in the meeting much on the Christian life. I dealt sledge hammer blows against sin in the church and out. The results are, stronger church, more unified and industrious, a higher appreciation of the church by the community in general, and 68 additions, including 30 of the strongest business men and farmers. Joel Brown.

Wilmington, N. C.

The church at Wilmington, North Carolina is less than two years old, yet it now owns a church property valued at $10,000. J. E. Erwin is the hard-working and very successful pastor of the congregation, and to his wise management, hard work, and his ability to enlist every member of the church to do his utmost, is due, in a large degree, their success. Never have I met with a more heroic and self-sacrificing band of disciples. It was a great pleasure to preach to them and provide for the indebtedness. During the day and night service about $200 more than we asked for was given.

Brother Erwin and his devoted and faithful wife are greatly beloved by the people, both in and out of the church, at Wilmington. He was a fine lawyer and a judge of the court, with a salary of $3,000 a year. He resigned this that he might preach, and is willing to preach for a small congregation at a small salary.

This was my first dedication in North Carolina. I greatly enjoyed the visit.

ACCURSED.

BY EBENEZER KEES.

"Leave me go!"

"I can not."

"Let the devil take me!"

"You are too good for him."

It was but a small room, humble, but homely, in which one saw and felt the presence of a gentler nature than this massive ruin of the sacred image standing there beside the fire with the eerie light of madness in his eye, his tangled and dishevelled hair swaying to and fro quite six feet from the floor. There he trembled like a tower shivered by a flash of lightning—like it, did I say? He was that tower, and the lightning was still there, as some accursed torch of Hinnom burning and branding and reveling within him with Satanic glee. But I had seen him on his knees, and heard his soul cry out in prayer in one of those rare hours of contrition, when a purer ray pours in upon the heart, humbling its possessor, yea, torturing its possessor as in its light he sees himself. Yet with the pain there came a peace, and as he rose I saw another vision in those eyes, a restful calm upon that fevered face.

But it was terrible to-day.

"Leave me go—let the dev—"

"You must not say that."

"What am I to you?"

"My brother; that is all."

We eyed each other in silence. Someone crept into the room, on whose face Patience had laid her laurel. In the movement of her hands, in the calmness of her voice, one saw and heard the word "submission." A little child clung to her gown, with long hair and cheerful countenance, happy in that ignorance which gives childhood much of its joy. And when he saw them, he wept.

I took his hand. "Try once more. Be true to the best that is in you, and lean hard on Him to whom we have so often called. He pities us like as a father, and forgives; He gives us grace to help in time of need."

The little one stretched out its arms and nestled to his side, and I left them together.

On a balmy morn of April I walked in a grove where God was clothing His world with grandeur. Two trees grew side by side, the one a sycamore, crowned with a thousand buds, glad and wonderful to see; the other an ash, I think a weeping-ash, one of those trees whose branches bend toward the earth, as if loth to leave the soil from which they spring, and this ash was dark and barren, and dead. The contrast was pathetic. They grew in the same ground, the same morning beamed upon them, the same sweet night dews christened their brows, and yet—! And I thought of the two I have pictured to you. Then I broke a twig of the barren tree and found it soft and green and full of sap. And I said to the tree: "Take heart, poor tree, there is life in thee; little by little the sun is finding thee out, and ere long thou too, shalt be garlanded with green." And again I remembered him with whose soul it was wintertide, yet he, like us all, has his roots in the one Great Heart, in whom we live and move and have our being. Oh! were he out to open his windows to the dawn, would he, too, not be clothed with the resurrection glory?

Sometimes it seems that his winter is over, and that the singing of birds is at hand; a new light illumines his face and the new face illumines his home. But anon its light burns low, and the perilous dark returns. Then I remember the patient figure and the little cherub face, and see the self-inflicted scar which disfigures a troubled and tortured soul that longs to be clean and can not. So he stands and falls, surrounded by snares and perilous pitfalls prepared for him by his brethren, while governments trifle and worldly ones wax fat on the accursed thing. Lord of the whirlwind and the fire, have mercy upon us!

HELP US FORGET.

By Bishop Warren.

O God, most merciful and kind,
The principles that are behind,
Mere tunings, not Thy key-notes set
For making manhood's perfect peans yet,
Help us forget, help us forget.

The sins of youth, the unclean word,
The things that sudden anger stirred,
The jest unseemly, all the debt
And sin that Thou hast promised to forget,
Help us forget, help us forget.

The words of sland'rous men, the taunt
That clings and stings as demons haunt
The soul, and into fury fret—
Things we forgave ere we could pardon get,
Help us forget, help us forget.

The good we've done, the kind words said,
The men we've helped, the causes pled
When none besides their souls have set
To help—lest we vain, proud and boastful get,
Help us forget, help us forget.

Sunlight Christians.

Being lighted is never the end of the Christian life—not even being lighted from above. Being "lights"—that is the end. The moon is bright when it happens to be in a bright place; when the earth comes between it and the sun it is dark. There are moonlight Christians, who are bright enough when lighted by God's manifest favor, but if the darkness of earth—a sorrow or burden—rises between them and God, they are black and dark. Christ enjoined upon his disciples that their "whole body" should be "full of light." Their oneness with the brightness of God was to be such that they should become "lights," not merely lighted. No earth-shadow then could ever come between them and their light. Christ would have us so "dwell in the light" that we may become "children of the light," in whom there is "no darkness at all."—Sunday School Times.

The Hoodoo in Everyday Life.

"Do you carry a rabbit's foot?" "No, but I've got a buckeye in my pocket."

"There's a new moon to-night, did you see it over your right shoulder?" "No. I happened to see it over my left, and I know that I'll have bad luck all the rest of the month. It's just my luck."

"Hold on there! Why, man, don't you know any better than that? Don't pick up that pin with the point towards you."

"Yes, we were to have been married on the eleventh of the month, but this year it came on Friday, so we had to change it." "Well, I don't wonder. Of course, I don't believe there's anything in it, but then I wouldn't be married on Friday, either. Why, do you know last Christmas at grandpa's there were thirteen sat down to the table, and I've been expecting to hear of the death of some of them ever since."

"That always was an unlucky boat. Caught fire you remember the year she was launched, then she collided with the Queen City next year, and I was just reading about her going ashore at Rocky Inlet. I guess she must have been launched on Friday."

"There, you have spilled the salt again; throw some of it in the fire quick, or over your shoulder. I don't want to get in any trouble to-day."

"No, sah, you don't git me to carry dat ar' lookin' glass. You bet, I wouldn't tech dat fo' sebenty dollah. Break a lookin' glass an' it's de wuss luck, the wuss sort ob luck. Jest obscuse ol' Jake."

"Oh, Edith, do you know that when we were walking home last night Sam shut two gates. I was awfully scared. He laughed at it, but I told him about my brother when he was paying attentions to Jennie Siddall, he used to shut gates that way, and he slipped an a banana skin and broke his limb. I just made him stop."

"No, I'm not superstitious; but then, well, really, I wouldn't cut out a dress on Friday. I'd never expect to finish it."

And so on, and on, we hear such remarks in civilized America, in Christian society too often. Who governs this world, anyway? Are we under the power of a multitude of mean little demons and are we any better than the ancients of the days of mythology if we lend ourselves to such superstitions? Are we not really worse in view of our enlightenment, than the hoodoo cursed Africans? Is one twenty-four hours any better than another? Really, there is quite enough of the foolish thinking and speaking for every ine of us to take every opportunity to reason or laugh the tendency away, and renewedly, practically assert, "The Lord reigneth, let the earth rejoice, and this Lord is my Shepherd."

A little friend of mine whose father is a physician was administering shoe buttons to her doll, calling them pills, "Here," said she, "take one every five years, and if you don't feel better in an hour, come back."—Boys and Girls.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE

A Summer Appetizer

A teaspoonful in a glass of water stimulates appetite and quenches thirst. An excellent Tonic.

The Truth About New Orleans

There is a legend which runs in this wise: If a stranger in this new-old city of history and romance should go to the shores of this big, mysterious river, and, in a rusty cup, dip for himself a drink of the opaque water, he will never leave New Orleans! The menace lures me to an oppo ite route, for the sun is hot, and, in an unwary moment, I might fall into the snare.

New Orleans is very well to look at, but to abide in permanently would be sorrow and desolation to the Northern-born and bred; and, yet, if one wants "atmosphere," the true flavor of New Orleans, it is hard to find unless one comes with introduction to the creole circles, for every third person you meet in ordinary life in New Orleans will be a Yankee! They come for a season only, then the intangible charm of this quaint old city winds about their hearts, and they stay on, and on, only going North for a cooling off in midsummer.

New Orleans is not unbearably hot. The houses, with their tiers of "galleries," vine-draped, tree-shaded, are big and cool, and pleasant on the hottest day, and by four-of-the-clock a breeze comes blowing up from the Gulf, and the nights are delightfully cool; so are the early mornings, the streets as wet with the heavy dews as if they had been sprinkled—every rose, every leaf, every palm empearled with glistening drops—everything as fresh as if from a spring shower.

Six o'clock—and New Orleans! No one abroad but the working classes, the newsboys, and me! It lies, a dream-city, hardly discernible in a soft, roseate haze—a misty message from the river.

Sleepy, shivery, the little newsboy at my elbow brags of his sales; tells me he sold 125 papers yesterday, takes care of his "kid" brother (his own years are ten!), and has always lived in Louisiana.

"Then you never saw an apple-tree?"

"Uh, gee! Bet yer I did—once 't—down to Shreveport!"

"Well," I ask, "do you think these palms and oleanders beside us are worth one real pink apple-blossom?"

He laughs and shrugs his ragged shoulders.

"Gee! I never looks at 'em! But ye kin climb an apple-tree!"

Climb it, look at it, smell its flowers, and watch the robins nest in its crotches—a gnarly, gray, lichened old tree, but the heart quickens its beat at thought of it—its home and sweetness and changing seasons—winter, spring—and here in New Orleans it's always summer and "always afternoon"—unless you get up at dawn!

A bird-woman, with one great hope of New Orleans—a mocking-bird in nest-building time—queried my neighbor of the Pullman:

"Why to New Orleans? 'Mardi Gras' is over."

"I do not care for 'Mardi Gras.'"

After much meditation:

"The races are over!"

No answer.

"Well—any way—New Orleans—the dirtiest city you ever saw! Why, fish swim in the gutters!"

It seemed a statement to take with a "pinch of salt," but on the road to the beautiful "Metairie" Cemetery this morning I proved its verity. Many urchins were fishing in the gutters for minnows within the city limits! One would think its gutters would be the city's undoing, but they are not. Ooze and slime and stagnant water even in the streets lined with the finest residences, and throwing out an odor almost intolerable. Notwithstanding this, the city is considered one of the healthiest in the Union. Yellow fever wipes out those who do not take care of themselves, mostly; Northerners remain through the epidemic, and keep well by living their lives in the same even routine, sanely, quietly, and without apprehension. The city lies below the level of that mighty river, and the embankments look all too weak to keep out the flood. It's a "fearsome" thing—the Mississippi—with its silent, swirling waters, and the story of "Chita" and the story of "The River's Children" are living reality as one looks upon the tremendous power. At five in the morning the river lies in mist, but the sun burns it off as a puff of wind blows away smoke, revealing oyster-ledgers at the wharves—no "motor" boats, these, as the fishing-boats of Cape Cod, but tiny, rocking sailboats of one mast. Up against the docks lie huge steamers bound for Porto Rico, for Havana, bringing in sugar; they are loading with rice and other provisions for export.

Across from the docks, and below the river's level snugly hidden by the embankment, lies the French Market. A good cup of French-dripped coffee and two doughnuts are served at the entrance to the market, and among the various stalls you make an interesting way. Between the fish-market stalls to-day and the fruit stands stood a blind old darkey singing a curious humming melody of woe, a bag for alms strapped upon his back, another bag at his feet, and, for a "picayune" he posed for a "snap-shot."

Three tiny schoolboys stood buying apples of a Dutchman, too good-natured by far for his own good, as they demanded "lagniappe, lagniappe," unceasingly, receiving, one an extra apple, one the half of an apple, and the other a handful of plums. At my commiseration the seller shrugged his shoulders: "Das ist de custoom of de French!" With great courtesy he spread for me a newspaper in an old chair that, without soil to my gown, I might sit and eat my breakfast of fruit.

Jackson Park, near by, once the "Place d' Armes," a parade ground for the garrison), guarded by the equestrian statue of General Andrew Jackson, was just opening its flowers to the touch of the sun—roses, oleanders, jasmines—and looking bewildered, homesick, here and there drooped stalks of red hollyhocks, as if ashamed at being caught in such company! Where was the tasseled blue-grass? Where butterflies and clover? I felt sorry for them, for they had to stay, and I could come away! The "Cabildo" fronts on Jackson Park—ancientest of court houses, a scene of shifting power. First the flag of France flew above its walls, then Spain took possession, then France once more, and then the Flag of flags—red, white, blue, then red, white, red, and, at last, in unity of firing red, white, blue!

History is everywhere in New Orleans—history and romance.

Yesterday was Palm Sunday. It is a Catholic city. Every one carried palms and grasses. At the doors of the cathedrals little lads stood selling palms. Every one purchased. At the supreme moment of the blessing of the palms every hand held aloft its tribute. The cathedral was a softly waving garden of greenness!

In an Episcopal church, after "vespers," I stumbled on a bit of history. This Church was the first organized church in New Orleans, in 1805. It seemed hardly to know what to call itself—Methodist, Cotton Landing Levee, New Orleans, La.

Episcopalian, Presbyterian—and solved the problem by vote. At first built on Canal street, it is now on St. Charles street, and is the Cathedral. Beautiful though it is inside, outside it is more beautiful, for the bignonia-vine, with huge, trumpet-like flowers of orange-yellow, almost covers it—a real "cloth-of-gold."

In the vestry-room are historic relics of Church history, the most interesting a picture of the rectors who insisted, in the eventful year of 1862, on keeping allegiance to the Southern flag. Swear allegiance to the United States they would not, nor offer prayer for the good President. Said one Benjamin Butler, in authority: "Swear allegiance, or quit preaching and leave the city."

Leave the city they did, also "quit preaching" until war and its tumult had ceased. "But," said the gray-haired Churchman who told me this in the church, "that's all over long ago—over and forgotten. Abraham Lincoln was a good man!"

Said the boyish young fellow who, also, had shown me much courtesy, "Over—but we don't forget."

Laughingly I laid my hand on his shoulder, "I guess you are too young to know very much about that war, and were not there to be hurt."

"We can't forget," he answered. And who can blame us? Winning is easy to endure; losing is hard, and the South lost hard and bravely.

One of the oldest Churches here is the Carondolet Methodist Church. The first building was erected before the Civil War. It was a brick building, with Ionic portico, and crowned with a cupola modeled after a famous Grecian monument. A new church has just been built by this congregation on St. Charles Street. The church is one of great beauty and convenience. Services were held there for the first time on March 17th.

What strikes me most in this Southern city is the lack of flowers. To be sure, trellis and tree are overhung oftentimes with wisteria and the bignonia and many other vines; the gardens gay with posies, roses reach across the fronts of many old houses, but to buy a flower you must go to the greenhouses or florists, also pay a price! Not a flower have I seen for sale on the streets in any corner of New Orleans—not one! No flower-market, as you of Cincinnati rejoice in, running over with bloom; no little stands snugged away in queer, crooked nooks, as in Boston, where arbutus, violets, roses may be bought for a song. 'Way up there in the land of snow every one wears a flower; here in the land of flowers no one wears them. If a vine leans out lovingly toward me across a stone wall, I'm afraid—I'm very much afraid—I pluck its flower. To-day all of Boston is sniffing over open-air flower-stands. To-day in New Orleans I find few who know the names of what grows in their gardens.

Old black "Philip," crooked, lame, whom I met in the garden of good "Saint Roch" (to whom in time of pestilence the Catholics pin their faith and implore with prayers) told me more of garden-lore than any one here. He was meditating among the graves of the little cemetery, and to my query of why he did not have St. Roch cure him of his lameness, he looked quizzical, shrugged his stooped shoulders, as if that was asking too much.

"I dun had dis lameness, madam, since I war a pickanniny in de cotton-field!"

Within the real city you hear only the chatter of sparrows. Out in beautiful "Metairie" Cemetery a true "city" of the dead, the air is full of bird-song. Mocking-birds were singing the changes of their motley melodies in notes inexpressibly sweet, and many birds I did not know were trilling and calling from among the leaves. "Metairie" is really the most beautiful place in New Orleans. It lies far out to the west, and is bordered by a small canal bridged by arched stone causeways, and surrounded by a privet hedge. The heavy dew kept the grass very green, and the white marble tombs (there are few underground burials) give a strange look to the place of being a "truly" city, with folk living quite cozily behind those doors of snowy whiteness. There are not as many inscriptions here as in the North. Many are in French, and many bear the one word "Pax." Generals Johnston and Beauregard are buried at the entrance to this cemetery in a vault, above which is a monument to the "Army of the Tennessee." It is a city of monuments; I could hardly enumerate them.

The cisterns of New Orleans are unique. They are large, round tanks, or towers, as high as the houses, not any part of them below ground. The water from the soil would seep in.

New Orleans street-car service is of the best, and the courtesy of its inhabitants is something Northerners would do well to copy. From the day-laborers to the cultured creole gentleman, or gentlewoman, any question meets with ready and helpful response. At sunset the gates of the cemeteries are closed, and one evening I reached the entrance of old St. Louis as the old bell clanged. Outside the walls a pretty creole woman told me of the custom, adding, "Me, I have come jus' from a funeral in there. I like to have shown you. I wis' there was a funeral to-morrow, then you come!" Could courtesy go further?

The parks are very beautiful. Audubon Park, with its palms; City Park, with its greenhouses, and all shaded with live oaks, moss-draped.

Along the roadside, within the city limits, grew wild blue iris and buttercups and daisies, and only one bush of the wild sweet-brier rose.

Saved a Child.

"There is nothing in all the world," says David Starr Jordan, "so important as children, nothing so interesting. If you wish to go in for some philanthropy, if you ever wish to be of any real use to the world, do something for children. If you ever yearn to be truly wise, study children. We can not all dress the sore, bandage the wounded, imprison the criminal, heal the sick and bury the dead; but there is always a chance that we can save a child."

He—"Isn't your hat a little large for church, my dear?"

She—"O no; I know the width of the door, and it will go through easily."—Exchange.

Hard Coughs

We publish the complete formulas of all our medicines. We are proud of them. We have nothing to conceal; no secrets to hide.

If your doctor fully endorses your taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for your hard cough, then buy it and use it. If he does not, then do not take a single dose of it. He knows all about this splendid medicine for coughs and colds. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Oh, the soft little cheek that is pressed close to mine,
And the large eyes so limpid and blue;
The pink rose leaf fingers and dimpled fat hands
Belong, my dear baby, to you.

We'll not mind the storm that goes raging outside,
But I'll rock and I'll rock you away,
To that quaint, dainty fairyland, dreamland we know,
Where the dear little dream babies play.

I'll clasp, clasp you close, as we drift, drift along,
So safe from all fears and alarms.
Ah, baby, my love, see how strong mother is,
Why, she holds the whole world in her arms.

ALL ABOARD!
FOR NEW ORLEANS.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST SPECIAL, over the Illinois Central Railroad, for the New Orleans Convention of the Disciples of Christ, will leave St. Louis Union Station Wednesday afternoon, October 7th, at 1:50, arriving at destination the next morning at 10:55 o'clock.

THE NAT'L BENEVOLENT ASS'N SPECIAL will go with us, making, we hope, a very large party of friends who will enjoy this most interesting trip.

READ THE FOLLOWING PARTICULARS:

"The Christian-Evangelist" will run a special train from St. Louis to New Orleans, leaving St. Louis at 1:50 p. m., on Wednesday, October 7, over the Illinois Central Railroad, and arriving at New Orleans at 10:55 a. m., the next day. The railroad fare from St. Louis to New Orleans and return will be $18.25, and the tickets will be good until October 24; but, upon payment of 50 cents additional, an extension of time will be granted, making the tickets good for return up to November 8, 1908. The sleeping car accommodations on the train will cost $4.50 for a double berth in a standard sleeper to New Orleans, and the same price for return. Berths in a tourist sleeper will be half this price. Where two go together, of course, they can divide this expense.

As the time draws near the matter of reservations is an important one, and all of the friends of "The Christian-Evangelist" who desire to travel with this company, on "The Christian-Evangelist Special," will please send in their names and addresses, together with a remittance of $4.50 on account, and we will make reservations, but these reservations should be made as early as possible, so as to avoid any confusion or mistakes, and also to let us know how many we must provide for.

We would also like to know how many will want us to secure hotel accommodations for them, at the St. Charles Hotel. The charges at this hotel (European plan) will be, for rooms without bath, two or more persons in each room, $1.00 for each person; for rooms with bath, two or more persons in each room, $2.00 for each person. Perhaps some cheaper accommodations can be had, where four or more persons desire to occupy large alcove rooms, but in the matter of hotel accommodations, we request our friends to let us know at once, just what kind of accommodations they want, so that we may reserve them, and these reservations for hotel accommodations should be made without much delay, so that we may secure good accommodations. The convention headquarters will be at the St. Charles Hotel, and we have therefore selected this hotel as the one for our delegates to go to, except some who may desire to go to boarding houses, and if some of our party want to go to these, they will please let us know, so the committee will have time to make reservations for them, in accordance with their wishes.

Our friends will please bear in mind that this train leaves St. Louis Union Station at 1:50 p. m. Wednesday, October 7, and those who desire to take the train from St. Louis will please so state. Our friends from Illinois and the Eastern States, who desire to join our party at St. Louis, Carbondale or Cairo, will please also notify us, so that we can reserve accommodations on the train for them, and when we have ascertained exactly how many people will accompany us on this trip we will then be in position to make definite arrangements with the railroad company, as to the number of cars, etc.

Our special train will go straight through to New Orleans, without stopover; but, in returning, it is quite likely that we will stop at the Vicksburg National Military Park, and some of our party may decide to leave our Special Train at Natchez, and travel from Natchez to Vicksburg on the Mississippi river by boat. This will entail an additional cost of $3.50, for each person, including meals and berth on the boat. The boat will leave Natchez at 12 o'clock, noon, and arrive in Vicksburg the following morning, but these details can be arranged on our way down to New Orleans, the trip there being, as above stated, direct, without any stopover.

Let us impress upon our friends the importance of writing to us at once about this trip, and let us also urge as many as possible to attend. We have some special circulars issued by the Illinois Central Railroad Company, which we will send to those interested, together with other information concerning this delightful trip.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

This week our Advance Society page is devoted to friends and members in Missouri. First, we will speak of our orphan; not because he is a Missouri orphan, for in reality he is a United-States-and-Canada orphan, to say nothing of foreign parts, but because his home is in the Christian Orphans' Home, of St. Louis. On July 7 a letter came from Mrs. Brown, the matron, saying that Charlie's eyes were out of fix (as they say in Boston). "We thought each week there would be some improvement by the next," she wrote, "but the doctor says Charlie's blood is in bad condition, and that prevents rapid recovery. He is not able to resume his studies. He goes each day to the doctor's office for treatment. If you could make it possible for him to go to some place in the country for awhile, and build up his general health, it might be the best thing for his eyes. The doctor thinks this advisable also. Charlie can not see to write; he is very despondent. One eye has always been weak, so that makes it bad."

I at once wrote to Charlie for him to find out if it would be agreeable for him to visit the lady who had adopted his sister. In the meantime, I wrote to Mrs. Margaret Skinner (who entertained Charlie during his last year's vacation). She replied that she has rented her farm out and is living with her sister, Mrs. Smith, at Auburn, Ky. However, she happened to be visiting in the neighborhood where Charlie went last summer, and she wrote: "A man with whom Charlie staid part of his time last year will take him again for a week—Mr. Harry Cooper, Moro, Ill. So send Charlie to Moro, and he will be met."

About this time I heard from Charlie: "Mrs. Henslee" (who has taken Charlie's sister Bessie) "is willing to keep me two weeks, and other friends in Carthage will keep me a week. The doctor says my blood has considerable to do with the disease of my eyes. I thank the Advance Society very much for giving me this vacation. Before the two-cent fare law the ticket to Carthage was $8.05. I have been borrowing money from Mrs. Brown every day for a month to go to the doctor—10 cents a day for car fare. I now owe her $2.30. I wish I could write a letter that did not call for money, but it seems I can't."

On July 27 came a card from Mrs. Brown with the Eads bridge on one side and this on the other: "Charlie left this morning for Carthage to see his sister. Trust the trip will improve his health."

July 30, this from Charlie: "Your letter, enclosing draft for $20, received. I am now at my sister's, having a nice time; all the buttermilk, fruit, etc., that I want. My eyes feel much better. I think in about three weeks I can start back to school. I thank the Av. S. very much for giving me this vacation, and I will study so much the harder when I get back to school. Bessie has grown to be quite a large girl. She is 14. My birthday is August 18, my seventeenth birthday. Bessie has named a cat after our Felix, but he is of the Maltese variety, not old gold." (Too bad! But it isn't his fault.) "My! but it is nice to be out in the country, where you don't have to dress up all the time!"

August 7, from Mrs. Brown, answering a question from me: "The fare to Moro is only 68 cents. I think it would be right for Charlie to go there after he comes back from Carthage, as the expense is not great and he will be benefited by a longer stay out of the city."

Charlie to me, August 10: "As the fare to Moro from St. Louis is only 68 cents, I think I will have enough to take me there and back. I think I will be here in Carthage a week yet. Having a nice time. My eyes are getting along nicely. I bathe them in boracic acid every day. I think the farm has done me a great deal of good."

(In our next page we will give an account of Charlie's vacation, written by himself.)

Let us now return to the subject of our ten-cent shower for Missionary Drusie. J. H. Mohorter, of St. Louis, forwards from Williamstown some drops for the shower from George, Kate and Jean, and the hope from Mrs. George H. Pratt that "the drops may fall thick and fast."

From Warrensburg comes $1, contributed to the shower by Mrs. J. W. and Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Snoddy, Ethel and Lawrence (8 years old), Josephine Conway, 11 years, Mrs. Adcock, Mrs. Simms and others.

Mrs. Harry Reyner, Laplata: "A dollar's worth of dimes for Drusie's shower. I think the shower a fine idea. I am interested in Charlie's welfare, also, and hope to send my mite to him in the near future."

S. E. Woods and Susie Hensley send three dimes from Foster. From Glasgow comes 20 cents. The same from Mrs. H. L. Carter and Mrs. D. M. Scott, Paris. "May showers of dimes and showers of blessings pour upon Drusie," they write, "and upon all members of the Av. S."

Estella and Waverly Baugher send three drops from Bucklin and wish the Av. S. success. Two friends in College Mound send a dime each "to help the shower for Drusie."

"An old lady," Kansas City: "It was indeed a happy thought getting up this shower for Drusie. Here are 20 cents from myself, the same from Mrs. Carrie Odor, ten cents each from Mrs. Byers and Mrs. Mundorf. How can any one read the Av. S. page and Drusie's letters without adding something to the shower? May God bless the Av. S. and the dear girl so full of zeal and faith in the missionary field." (By the way, there was a mistake in our last page, where it said that Drusie's room was 6x19½; it should have been 6x9½. You will remember, Drusie told how she'd divided this space into two apartments, in which she hardly had room to turn around. You must have thought Drusie a very large missionary not to be able to turn around in 19½ feet!)

E. S. S., Union Star: "An old white-haired woman friend of Drusie, who is a member of her church—the Broadway Christian, of Louisville, Ky.,—wants to devote 100 drops to the shower. Possibly she doesn't know that I was one of several who contributed monthly for a while to her support. My absence from home the greater part of three years has caused me to cease doing so."

Paul Hord, Trimble—written Aug. 10th: "I suppose it is raining very fast now. I hope it will be a regular gully-washer. I send ten drops."

Carrie Polk Johnson, Stewartsville, Mo.: "Some drops to the shower from people who contribute to every good thing that comes their way—Mesdames Fanny Creamer, J. D. Stipe, D. B. Cook, M. D. Carey, Jaquith, Capt. Cook and J. T. Wingate. I enclose it in a package to Felix. I thought he might like something from old Missouri, and as a mouse might be barred from the mail, I send his favorite flower."

SECTIONAL CUT OF GENERATOR.

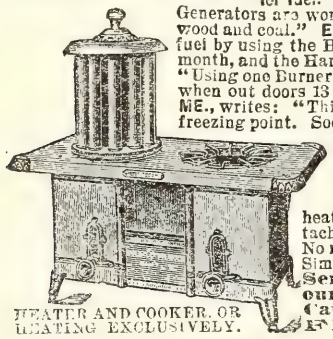
BURNS BARRELS OF AIR NOTHING ELSE LIKE IT.

MOST WONDERFUL COMBINATION HEATING & COOKING STOVE EVER INVENTED—CAUSING GREAT EXCITEMENT WHEREVER EXHIBITED. Fuel drawn principally from atmosphere. Uses 395 barrels of air, while consuming one gallon of oil. Wood, coal and oil cost money. ONLY FREE FUEL IS AIR. Supply unlimited. No trust in control. Air belongs to rich and poor alike.

HARRISON'S VALVELESS WICKLESS, AUTOMATIC OIL-GAS AND AIR BURNER STOVE

Automatically generates gas from kerosene oil, mixing it with air. Burns like gas. Intense hot fire. Combustion perfect. To operate—Turn knob—oil runs into burner—touch a match, it generates gas which passes through air mixer, drawing in about a barrel of air, to every large spoonful of oil consumed. That's all. It is self-regulating, no more attention. Same heat all day, or all night. For more or less heat, simply turn knob. There it remains until you come again. To put fire out, turn knob, raising burner, oil runs back into can, fire's out. As near perfection as anything in this world. No dirt, soot or ashes. No leaks—nothing to clog or close up. No wick—not even a valve, yet heat is under perfect control.

D. CARN, IND., writes: "It costs me only 4½ cents a day for fuel." L. NORRIS, VT., writes: "The Harrison Oil-Gas Generators are wonderful savers of fuel, at least 50% to 75% over wood and coal." E. ARNOLD, NEB., writes: "Saved $4.25 a month for fuel by using the Harrison Oil-Gas Stove. My range cost me $5.50 per month, and the Harrison only $1.25 per month." M. KING, VA., writes: "Using one Burner and Radiator, I kept a 16x18 foot room at 70 degrees, when out doors 13 to 20 degrees were registered." REV. WM. TEARN, ME., writes: "This morning 16 below zero, and my library far below freezing point. Soon after lighting the Harrison Oil-Gas Stove temperature rose to summer heat." WM. BAERING, IND., writes: "We warmed a room 13x14 feet, when it was about 10 below zero with one Radiator." Objectionable features of all other stoves wiped out.



HEATER AND COOKER, OR HEATING EXCLUSIVELY.

Not like those sold in stores. Ideal for heating houses, stores, rooms, etc., with Radiating Attachment; also cooking, roasting, baking, ironing, etc. No more carrying coal, kindling, ashes, soot and dirt. Absolutely safe from explosion. Not dangerous like gasoline. Simple, durable—last for years. Saves expense, drudgery and fuel bills. ALL SIZES. PRICES LOW—$3.25 and up. Sent to any address. Send no money—only send your name and address. Write today for our 30 day trial offer—full description—thousands of testimonials. 1908 Proposition.

EXCITING BUSINESS FOR AGENTS

SALESMEN—MANAGERS—MEN OR WOMEN at home or traveling, all or part time—showing—taking orders—appointing agents. MESSRS. HEAD & FRAZER, TEX., writes: "Enclose order for $81.00. RUSH. Sell like hot cakes. Sold 50 stoves in our own town." B. L. HUESTED, MICH., writes: "Been out one day and sold 11 stoves." This patent new. Nothing like it. Demand enormous. Agents reaping great harvest. Where operated people stop on street, leave their homes, place of business, miss trains to watch this generator—excites curiosity—watch it as though a thing of life. Show a dozen—sell ten. Write today for special agents new plan. Send no money. World unsupplied. Get in early for territory. Write today.

(Namely, a fragrant sprig of catnip, which Felix accepted, I will not say with eagerness, since he seldom shows any gratitude for what he receive , but I think I may use the word toleration. If you expect Felix to show enthusiasm over anything you give him, you are mistaken in your cat. He is like so many people I know, who have put their ideas of what you ought to do for them on a shelf so high that likely as not there's not a ladder on the place long enough to reach 'em.

"S." Moberly: "Here's a rather belated little drop for Drusie's shower. I was once a member of the Av. S., but fell from grace. I have an interest in Drusie and Charlie, but find it difficult to do systematic reading outside of my special work. I have read 'Stork's Nest' and 'Holland Wolves.' I liked them both, but became enthusiastic over 'Holland Wolves.' I once wrote to the Av. S. and signed my name, but have fallen by the wayside, as it were, I prefer to remain inconspicuous." (I know you well, and am glad to see you back with us once more.)

Mrs. Wm. Beeley, Moselle (this is Bertha's mother): "I send $2 to Drusie, and Thos. Johnson sends 50 cents. Thanks to the one that thought of the shower! I hope all the dear children of the Av. S. will think how happy their mites will make some poor little boy or girl when Drusie tells how the children are helping her to tell them the sweet story of old. Dearest love to all the Av. S. and its friends.

Osborn: "Francis Creamer and mother enclose $2 to the Av. S. to be used as you think best."

"A Butter-woman," R. F. D., Springfield: "$1 for Drusie. I am much interested in the Av. S. work."

Mrs. G. C. Harness, Bunceton, Mo.: "About three weeks ago I sent you $4 from 'two sisters,' but you have made no mention of it in the paper. We sent it for our missionary, Drusie." (This amount was duly acknowledged in "The Christian-Evangelist." Every week I have on hand more letters than I can possibly publish on the page. When I received that $4 I said to myself: "If I tell the public that $4 has come in on the shower, some may think it's rained enough, and put the dime they were thinking of sending back into their pocket." That's just what I said to myself. When I get such a deluge as that, I keep mum for a while. They don't come often, but folks might think otherwise. For instance, that $2 from Osborn came June 12, 1906. Drusie has spent it long ago, but I've just got to where I could tell you about it. If you'd known I had got $2 in one mail, not you, but somebody else, might have thought Drusie was getting rich. To relieve your minds about this Bunceton $4, I will say that I sent Drusie $15 for her last monthly draft, so there's no $4 around here now; you needn't think it.)

Fannie Newman, Lexington, Mo.: "Blessings on the head of her who suggested the 10 cent shower! I had to wait for a shower at home before I could send my three dimes. Many good wishes for the Av. S. and all the young folks of the Av. S."

Sadie, Jessie and John Page, Slater. "We are not Av. S. members, and never sent before, but want to help in the dime shower. We hope this great work may continue through ages to come."

Mrs. Warren Power, Platte City: "Success to the Av. S.! 100 drops to Drusie's shower, accompanied by prayer for our missionary. May you have a regular cloud-burst!".

A Friend, Kansas City: "I enclose 5 dimes in the shower for the little missionary. May this be like the rain the colored man said he didn't want, when he prayed for rain, 'a dashing, slashing rain.'" (Inclosed is a picture of Hyde Park Christian Church.)

Lena Beamer, Smithfield: "I send a drop for the shower; mama, another. Since I last wrote—but before I got home—we have had a meeting, conducted by W. G. Willey; 64 additions. Doesn't that do well for a mining town of only 400 or 500? We now have a membership of about 125; 90 to 115 are in the S. S., and about 30 in the Teacher Training Class. All of my S. S. pupils were baptized during the meeting—I was baptized at El Paso." (Where she was traveling at the time of the meeting.) "I am sorry Felix got so lonesome while you were in Missouri. I didn't like those remarks you made about Maltese cats, one bit. Tinker Bell is Maltese and so is my other cat. (But didn't I just say that they can't help it? I don't blame 'em. I just feel sorry for them.) "Anyway, Puss catches from one to three rats a day, and I don't believe that Felix catches anything more than a mouse." (What is more than a mouse? Is a rat more than a mouse? and if so, where would you get if you saw a rat? But, as far as that goes—and it goes a long way—I just wish you could see all the rats Felix has caught!) "Maybe he is like the little girl's hen—he doesn't have to pay his board." (What little girl is that? What's her name?) "Tinker Bell and Puss are too honest, upright cats not to catch rats, so there!" (Where, I couldn't see where you hit. If you were aiming at Felix you must have thrown too high, for I didn't hear him holler.) "Some one asked me how we happened to call our society the 'Advance Society.' Can you say something to tell her, that will probably be satisfactory." (We didn't happen to; we just did it. It was those who named their papers and societies after us that happened to. This answer is mighty satisfactory to me, but of course I don't know how much it takes to satisfy the lady who was asking questions.)

Here is a picture of our Advance Society baby—Maude Mabel Casey, whose mother was Bertha Beesley. Needless to say, we are very proud of the baby and the picture; perhaps that's why we haven't much patience with Tinker—whatsisname and Puss.

Geo. W. Dawson, Kansas City: "Here's the $1 I promised you at the depot—" at Wyandotte, when I passed through on my Missouri visit.

Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada: "I am sending my 17th quarterly report; am on the 8th week of my 18th. It will be five years, September 1, since I became a member of the Av. S.. I certainly have enjoyed it. Yes, indeed, it would be something to be proud of, if we could raise enough to support our missionary. I send drops for the shower from my husband, daughter and her husband and myself; this constitutes our little family circle. One dear sister, at our July C. W. B. M. meeting, one who reads the Av. S. page, came to me and said, "Send this 10 cents when you send yours—taking for granted that I should send mine, in which she was right, of course. Another good sister, on hearing her, did likewise; so did four others, after hearing of the shower. May the good Lord put it into the hearts of the people to help in this good and great cause. I have read the New Testament through since March 21."

S. A. Seat, Hematite: "As the weather is cloudy, there ought to be a shower, so I enclose 25 cents for Drusie's shower." (And I still have ever and ever so many letters from Missouri, for which there is no room on this page. But we'll have them all before we quit, so you can know there's a good time ahead of us, whoever's elected.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

To Our Subscribers,

Many of our friends are with us, and we only wish we had them all. This will be a great convention, but perhaps not so largely attended as others have been.

Last week our Assistant Editor opened his Budget columns with "On for New Orleans!" This week he opens with "Off for New Orleans!" Now with the opening sentence of this letter, which he is welcome to, he, Brother Moore, enters the class of the immortal Mr. Finnegin, who, in reporting to his section boss concerning one of the many derailments on his road, wired:

"Off agin; on agin; gone agin--Finnegin."

Mr. Finnegin had been admonished to "cut out" all unnecessary words. He did it in his report as above. Without wasting words, I conclude with the statement that we have taken "The Christian-Evangelist Special" for the Crescent City.

Handling Vagrants.

At some period of the year nearly every town in the country has the tramp question to solve. A good suggestion has been made recently for the establishment, near every large city, of compulsory farm colonies, where the tramp shall be housed and fed, and made to labor in the fields. The idea is that if he reform he can be graduated to a voluntary neighbor colony. Dr. Cooley, of the Cleveland Department of Charges and Corrections has made some experiments, and it seems that it is rare the men take advantage of the liberty which is given them. It is said that the experiment on a large scale has been successful in Holland.

Georgia has put herself on record by another progressive step. Eradicating rum, it has now repealed the release system for its penitentiary convicts. This system has been in existence since 1865.

A Fisheries Congress.

Hitherto the chief interest in the preservation of fish has concerned itself with the fresh water species. In many of the states much attention has been given to this, and the supply of game fish especially has been largely increased by the restocking of depleted streams with the small fry. One kind of trout, known to exist only in one stream of the country and rapidly becoming extinct, was taken and in due process of time the fry of this, one of the finest of all game fish, has been put in a number of other streams, and will continue to be given a chance to furnish sport and food through many sections of the country. It would seem that so great a space as the sea could never be exhausted of its fish life. But this is not so. The interest must be used, not the capital. Many of the fishery grounds give nothing like the yield they formerly did, so that the matter has become one for consideration by the nations, and a fisheries congress has just been held at Washington. We are glad that our government is the most progressive, and most active, perhaps, of all governments in fish propagation and preservation. Fish that were formerly only procurable on the Pacific have been transplanted to the Atlantic, and vice versa. The fish question has become one for scientific treatment. When we remember that sea food is the sustenance of at least one-fourth of the world's population and that with proper care enough fish could be procured annually to supply twice as many people, the importance of this congress is apparent.

The Ravages of Consumption.

No more important meeting has gathered during the year than that which assembled at Washington to discuss the question of tuberculosis. Distinguished scientists from nearly every country of the civilized world were present. Much of the value of meetings of this kind comes, of course, to the public secondarily. It is the scientific and medical world that is instructed, and the benefits come to the people through these. But a great point is gained by the publicity that reaches large masses of people at once. For instance, the mere statement that 160,000 deaths were caused in this country last year by tuberculosis, whereas in the last 100 years only 100,000 deaths are attributed to yellow fever, at once makes us realize that the "white plague" is infinitely more dangerous and infinitely more widespread in our midst than the disease, one case of which being discovered, will set all America talking. Quarantine is at once put on a case of yellow fever, but consumption goes along in our midst, and until recent years little was done to try to stop it. Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale, estimated that the annual death roll from tuberculosis is equal to all the deaths from typhoid, diphtheria, appendicitis, meningitis, diabetes, smallpox and cancer. Dr. Fisher figures that a billion dollars is the total charge upon this dread disease in one year in America. A Russian physician made the statement that every man over 30 years of age has the remains of a tubercular infection. It seems to be the theory of the experts that the efforts in combatting the disease are to strengthen the body by hygienic and dietetic means, and the access of fresh air, while contagion is to be avoided by the man who is not affected.

Despite the presidential election, which is always a disturbing factor much more than there is any reason for it to be, the signs of a reviving prosperity are in evidence. According to representatives of labor unions it appears that the workers in the various allied trades are going back to work, and that the relations between employers and employes are more friendly than they have been for a long time.

Protestant Bible Victory.

Roman Catholic countries are notorious for their opposition to the sale of biblical literature. This is a matter of inheritance, but Protestantism has won another victory in a Catholic country. The highest court of appeals in Portugal has given a decision which permits Protestantism, and makes persecution under legal process a thing of the past. It appears that one of the colporteurs of the British Foreign Bible Society was arrested on complaint of a priest. The charge was simply that he was selling "Protestant Bibles." Found guilty by the magistrate, when the case was appealed the higher court reversed the decision, declaring that selling the so-called "Protestant Bible" is not a crime, for the following reasons:

"First, the Protestant Bible does not contain a word or passage which is not found in the text of the Catholic Bible; second, the hawking of books does not imply a proselyting propaganda; third, the Protestant religion is permitted in Portugal, and therefore the sale and purchase of the various books necessary to those who profess that religion can not be prohibited; fourth, it is laid down in the constitution that no one can be proscribed on religious grounds." One of the prominent papers of Lisbon spoke of the treatment of the colporteur in the first instance as almost savage.

Bible Study Convention.

There is to be held under the auspices of the international committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, the first international student Bible convention at Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 22-25. The distinctive object will be to promote intelligent, systematic personal study of the English Bible among thinking men, and to secure the active co-operation of the church at large in immediate and concerted effort to win students to genuine Christian living by means of the English Bible. The number of delegates will be limited to 1,200. This is a movement that promises much.

Until recently the island of Mindinao was one of the most out-of-the-way corners of the globe. A striking instance of the progress in science is that the news that the United States naval fleet was on its way from Australia to the Philippines, was first received by wireless telegraphy on a station on the southeast point of this island.

Caring for Newsies.

It is stated that the pastor of an aristocratic church in an eastern city has taken forty newsboys into his choir, and prevailed upon his people to surrender a block of pews in the body of the house to the newsboys who come to church regularly. This is an item of news that is interesting, for the newsies are among the most neglected of all street urchins. In a measure they are able to take care of themselves, yet anyone who is familiar with the life of many of them in great cities has plenty of scope for the largest sympathy. The effect upon the people of his church, it is said, has been noticeably beneficial as upon the boys themselves. And even the pastor's sermons and prayers, it has been noted, are distinctly improved by the infusion of this new blood into his congregation.

Editorial

Our Greatest Centennial Aim.

Although it may not be listed among the things which we are striving to accomplish, as an expression of our gratitude to God for what he has accomplished through us during the past century, we venture to say that there is nothing in the sight of God so important as this—that we seek to illustrate among ourselves the unity which we are urging upon the Christian world. It is not expected that in a single year we can neutralize the seeds of dissension which have been sown for many years. But we ought certainly to arrive at a clear and distinct understanding of the causes which have produced these dissensions and lines of cleavage among us, that we may avoid them in the future. We ought, also, to reach an equally clear understanding of the conditions upon which alone our unity can be conserved and perpetuated.

It may be said that these things are commonplace among us, and that we all understand the principles of unity. If so, we are not practicing them, and our guilt is the greater. It is true, no doubt, that we do not do as well as we know on this as on other questions. We are inclined to think, however, that there has come to be no little confusion of thought among us on the subject of unity. Among other things, there has been an overemphasis of doctrinal agreements and an underemphasis of the value of unity. In other words, there has been more zeal in maintaining certain views and doctrines than there has been in "keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." We have not sufficiently considered how important it is for a people pleading the cause of Christian unity to show the religious world by their own practice how that unity is practicable. Let us repeat that there is no more important task before us, no higher Centennial aim, than to bring ourselves face to face with this problem of internal unity, and to highly resolve in this Centennial year that we shall seek to strengthen the bonds of unity among us, and to utterly discourage all teaching and practice which foment discord and sow seeds of strife among brethren. This is our message to the brethren convening in national convention at New Orleans, that they take counsel together and plan for those things that will make for the peace and unity of the brotherhood. United, we are a great and irresistible force in Christendom, with a sublime mission to accomplish. Divided, we are a contradiction to our own plea, and are utterly incapable of doing the work to which God has called us. A thing that is so valuable, so priceless, indeed, is worth all the sacrifices that are necessary to bring it about. If the brethren who think right and feel right on this subject will join hearts and hands, they can put into operation forces and influences that will make for unity, so that when we come to our Centennial celebration it will be with the conviction that the experiences of the past have taught us wisdom, and that henceforth, under the leadership of Christ, we shall seek to exemplify the unity for which we plead. That this involves a fresh and deeper consecration to Jesus Christ than we have yet known, only indicates the greatness of the task, and how vitally it is related to our future success.

Railroads and Christian Union.

In a recent reported interview in one of the great dailies with Col. William P. Hepburn, whose name is associated with the law against rebates by the railroads, he gives the following interesting reminiscence of an early experience in getting from Iowa to New York:

"Why, sir," he said, "I emigrated from Ohio to Iowa in a steamboat. Think of it! Most persons in those days, however, traveled in wagons. I well remember my first journey from Iowa City to New York. The West was filling up. Civilization was coming forward with a rush. There were wooden pavements in Chicago, a great modern improvement, even if they splashed muddy water on one's boots and trousers when he walked on them.

"Well, I set out with a trunk. I bought a ticket straight through to Davenport, where, claiming my trunk and putting it on a steamboat, I crossed the Mississippi River to Rock Island, in Illinois. My second ticket took me to Chicago. In the meantime I had been drinking awful coffee and eating doleful pie and worse sandwiches at way stations. I slept where I sat. A drayman in Chicago hauled me and my trunk across the city to another depot.

"The third ticket I purchased took me as far as Toledo, in Ohio. There was no drayage at that point, as I remember. Another ticket and another check carried me and the trunk to Erie, Pa. From Erie I went to Buffalo, where I procured a ticket to Albany. The trunk now had become a nuisance, but I didn't realize it.

"There was no change of cars between Albany and New York City, where I and the fool trunk were duly set down, bearing visible evidence of the wear and tear of transportation. Such was travel before railways were joined together and made into continuous systems."

The foregoing is well worth while in itself as a reminder of some of the hardships and inconveniences which we are saved from through the co-operation of the railroads. But we quote it as an illustration of how much more desirable results could be achieved through Christian union than by the present divided and non-co-operative condition of the religious world.

Of course, railroads had to adopt what is known as the standard gauge before they could co-operate as they do now in sending passengers on through trains from one end of the continent to the other. Something like that must take place among our divided churches. That Jesus Christ never established but one Church on this earth, all acknowledge. How may persons be constituted members of that Church? On what terms did the apostles, acting under the authority of the great Commission, receive persons into the fellowship of the saved and count them as members of Christ? When that question is determined we have a standard gauge, and when all the churches have conformed to this standard gauge there is no reason why members should not be received freely from one church into another, and why they should not all co-operate for the universal prevalence of Christ's kingdom.

Think of the new influence which a united church in a city would exert upon the life of that city! Imagine the new increment of power that would come to the Church when it shall present a united front to the world, and instead of each division seeking to build itself up at the expense of others, all will seek to build up the life of God in the community. Are such possibilities beyond our hope? Jesus prayed for it, and every day, despite the opposition of sectarianism, it draws nearer. Let us do what we can to hasten its coming.

Religion in Numbers.

Religious statistics have a real value, when wisely used. A trustworthy record of what is done is essential to any correct history, and the history of religion ought to be worth more than any other history. Statistics form a valuable part of the Bible. The records of the New Testament contain very many important statements in figures. The first result of preaching the gospel is given in round numbers at three thousand converts. Nevertheless, it is a curious and interesting fact that God prohibited the numbering of Israel. There are, therefore, two sides to the statistical question. Perhaps we should judge of these respective sides as we do of other things; that is, we should estimate statistics according as they may be wisely or unwisely used.

Just now we are approaching the time of year when statistics sometimes become a sort of mania with religious workers. At our conventions we are showered with these statistics until the very ground of our religious activities is covered with numbers. We are told just how many converts have been made during the year, just how much money has been raised for each particular object that comes in the range of our religious work. We are also told just how many churches, how many preachers and how many communicants belong to our religious body. Indeed, this mania for statistics is often carried into the minutest details and everything tabulated and added, so as to make as large a display of figures as is possible in the case. Now all this may be well enough, if too much emphasis is not placed upon this statistical display. But the applause is usually expected when these statistics are announced, and it is greatly to be feared that many estimate the progress made in religious matters chiefly, if not entirely, by what these figures declare. Nor is it wise to undervalue what may be legitimately drawn from figures that are truthful as regards work that has been done. Nevertheless, it is possible and, indeed, very probable, that an undue emphasis, placed upon even trustworthy figures, is often very misleading as regards the real progress that has been made. Our views with respect to religious progress are nearly always horizontal, but they ought to be sometimes, at least, perpendicular. We should look up, as well as forward and backward.

This leads us to consider, for a moment, the very beginning of our religious life. It is much to be feared that many religious workers are losing sight of our Lord's statement that "except a man be born from above he can not see the kingdom of God." This statement calls our attention to the origin of the new man in Christ Jesus. He must not only be born anew, but this newness must come from above. It has a divine source, and is, therefore, something more than a transference of a name on the church roll, even when this transference has followed the act of the person in some definite, formal way by which he decided to authorize his name thus to be used. It is this very solemn fact that calls for careful management in our modern evangelistic services. It has been charged that in some of these services statistics have a place altogether too prominent. To use a popular phrase, "counting noses" may take the place of counting souls brought into real newness of life. It is not necessary at all to assume that this is intentionally done. Doubtless those engaged in the work have no such end in view. Perhaps they are just as sincerely striving for true conversions as the apostles were in their day. Nevertheless, the very earnestness and intense religious interests which often permeate a series of evangelistic services may urge on the workers to overdo the matter of persuasion where there is really no conviction, and consequently the result may be a mere "numbering of noses" without any vital turning to the Lord. By all means let us rejoice in all legitimate successes of the gospel, but at the same time, let us carefully avoid a mere formal parade of figures, which mean practically nothing when souls are to be counted on the Lord's side. W. T. M.

On another page we give some particulars about the arrangements for the congress which is to be held by representatives of the Disciples of Christ, the Baptists and the Free Baptists, at Chicago, November 10, 11, 12. The importance of this meeting can not be overestimated, for the question of Christian union is to be discussed. It is, of course, unfortunate that we have to meet with so short notice and following the national convention, but every effort should be made by our churches and ministers to have a good representation in this congress. It ought to be a history making meeting. If we who originated it, by our plea for union, fail in our part of this gathering, it will take us years to overcome the backset.

Notes and Comments

That is a true and timely word that Brother Rutledge, of Philadelphia, speaks in his communication elsewhere concerning the unwisdom of some brethren who, when something goes contrary to their wishes, threaten the missionary societies. What is a missionary society but the method which the brotherhood has adopted for doing mission work? Why threaten to boycott that, even if the board of such society should do some unwise thing? The board can be changed or instructed by the brethren at any annual convention. But these threats frequently occur in relation to matters concerning which the missionary boards, as such, have no responsibility. Let us be done with that method of enforcing our view of things. Let us beware how we take revenge on the Lord's work for some error, real or imaginary, which somebody has committed. If any aggrieved member feels that he must gather up his missionary doll rags and play in his own back yard, it isn't really necessary to advertise that fact in the newspapers.

"We have heard more than one minister in Illinois say recently," writes a friendly correspondent, "that if "The Christian-Evangelist" would only take a more decided stand against such men as Professor Willett, it would sweep the country in view of its other excellencies. What do these men mean, think you?"

They do not mean that we have not taken issue with Professor Willett, for no paper has devoted so much space to a refutation of his position as The Christian-Evangelist. There is but one interpretation we can give to such remarks. We have not felt it to be within the limits of our authority to read such men out of the brotherhood, or even to denounce them as "infidels." We do not believe that course to be Christian or Christlike. That is the head and front of our offending. We have always had a class of religious journals which have claimed the right to pronounce sentence against those whose opinions they could not endorse without the formality of a trial. It has come to be understood by some that the generous exercise of this function is an essential mark of soundness in the faith. But we have not so learned Jesus.

This leads us to say that we have had a number of letters from our scholarly young men, some of whom are still in the universities, thanking us for our answers to Professor Willett's statements. Mere denunciation they would have repudiated, but a rational argument showing the inadequacy of the view taken by Professor Willett has been welcomed by them, and has proved helpful to them. We allow no one to excel us in our zeal for the evangelical faith and for loyalty to the divine Christ, but we can no more ignore Christ's method and spirit than we can his supreme authority. Have we not yet to learn that we can not be wholly loyal to Christ while we ignore his method of dealing with those in error? His attitude toward sin and error in doctrine was indeed that of uncompromising opposition, but his supreme aim was not to condemn the sinner or those in error, but to win them from the error of their way. Is his example not still binding?

Speaking of the authority of Christ, we are glad to call attention to an exceedingly thoughtful article on that subject in the September number of "The Scroll," by Prof. C. M. Sharpe, of the Bible College of Missouri. We should be glad to quote freely from this article by way of showing that not all our young men who brave the dangers to faith that are supposed to lurk in the University of Chicago have suffered an eclipse of their faith in the final authority of Jesus in the realm of religion. Let this brief extract indicate the spirit and robustness of Prof. Sharpe's article:

"In speaking, therefore, of the authority of Jesus, we mean that through him we receive a final revelation of the Truth and Reality of God so far as pertains to our moral life and spiritual destiny. We mean that Jesus determines for us our religious attitude and the principles of our moral conduct. Since these are the supreme considerations of life, it follows that when they are determined, it becomes impossible for one to adopt any critical or philosophical views which he can not adjust to the requirements of those religious and ethical ideals. Thus, while the authority of Jesus is not that of a philosopher enforcing a scheme of thought by process of logic, not that of a lawgiver delivering a code to be externally obeyed, it is, nevertheless, an authority which tests every scheme of thought as to its bearing upon the religious views of the universe, and it does pass upon the relation of every law or precept to the spirit of love and service. It is due to the authority of Jesus that we bring every thought into subjection to the obedience of the Father's will as that will was done by the Son himself. We are not to hold Jesus tentatively and, as it were, subject to revision. Only Jesus better understood can reverse Jesus understood not so well. We pay to the authority of Jesus the highest honor when we most earnestly seek to know his mind and will. We pay slight reverence to him when we are willing to receive his will through the perceptions of others."

All the missionary societies, our own and those of other religious bodies, have felt the stress of a panic year. We are glad to note, however, that while we have failed in some of our aims, things are not as bad as some prognosticators foretold. The Foreign Christian Missionary Society, while it has a loss of $31,000, is able to point with pride to the fact that there has been a gain of 748 offerings—that 42 more churches have contributed this year than last year. The loss has been in annuities which come from people with some means.

Editor's Easy Chair.

In ordinary diseases there are two distinct periods—one in which the disease runs its course, which is followed by a period of convalescence. This kind does not divide itself into such distinct periods. Each day may bring forth some new development, and both physican and patient must wait on these developments. On the whole, however, there is a decided upward trend, and better eating and sleeping are giving increased strength. It is no light affliction to be imprisoned in one's room these glorious October days when the blue skies, the bracing atmosphere, and the bright coloring of the foliage call to the lover of nature to go forth and enjoy the autumnal feast. Few months of the year appeal to us more strongly than October, with its falling leaves, its falling nuts, and its flaming banners of crimson and gold, which autumn unfurls on hillside and along lanes and country roads. "Melancholy days" the poet calls them, but to us it is a kind of melancholy that is good for the soul—a spirit of soberness and of thoughtfulness, that makes one think of the changing vicissitudes of his own life and its brevity. Nature always seemed to us to be working in harmony with revelation, and co-operating with all the spiritual forces in calling man to higher and holier living. Why should it not be so? Is not the God of nature, who speaks to us through all the changing scenes and through all her manifestations of beauty and wisdom and power, the same God who spake to us through the prophets of old, and who gave us his noblest and fullest message in Jesus Christ? We should expect, therefore, that instead of the dualism which some profess to see, there should be unity in the voice by which God speaks to us in nature and in revelation. It is vastly confirmatory of our faith in Jesus Christ and his revelation of grace and truth, to find that it is cosmic in its vast sweep and harmonizes with the laws of God's universe.

During this protracted illness, we have had to look into the face of God, and backward upon our record, and ask the question, How much of it will abide the divine test? When our work, as every other man's work, shall be tried as by fire, will any of it abide, or will it be consumed in smoke and ashes? Every man ought to face this question occasionally with honesty as in the sight of God. It has been a source of no little comfort to feel in these moments of severe self-examination, that our motives have been such as God will approve, and that so far as he has given us to see the truth as it is in Jesus, we have been loyal to it both through good report and through evil report. Of course, it has not been difficult to see many imperfections in our work as editor during these two score years, for our human limitations become more apparent as years go by. But, on the whole, the ideal of journalism which we have sought to realize in some humble measure, we dare to believe has been such as would meet with God's approval. After all, this is the main thing. It is sweet and encouraging to have the approval of all fellow laborers, but it is given to very few men to have such approval. It has certainly not been our lot in life to enjoy freedom from adverse criticism even on the part of those identified with the same cause which we have sought to advance. One of the heaviest crosses we have had to bear has been the opposition of brethren, whose honesty we do not call in question, but who seemed to have utterly misconceived and misrepresented our motives, our principles, and our ideals. This, of course, is no exceptional experience. One of the truest and best friends we ever had, and one of the noblest and ablest advocates this Reformation ever had—the lamented Isaac Errett—carried this same burden on his heart, in addition to all his other burdens, until he laid aside his cross for his crown.

Will the brethren pardon us for giving expression once more from the depths of our affliction, in which we trust our moral vision has been somewhat clarified, to some of the chief things for which we have labored in the past, and for which, if it be God's will that we continue in this work, we hope to labor in the future? We have sought to exalt the Bible as the world's supreme Book, because it contains the inspired record of God's revelation to man. We have, without ceasing or compromising, lifted up Jesus Christ as the Son of God and the divine Saviour of the world—the final authority in all matters of religious faith and duty. His birth introduced a new era in the world's history; his death upon the cross for the sins of the world is the only hope of human salvation, and his resurrection from the dead opens the gate to immortality. Through the cross of Christ men may obtain forgiveness of sins, becoming new creatures in Christ. This Reformation whose Centennial is approaching we embraced in our early young manhood with all the enthusiasm of our nature, and its value as a providential agency of God for meeting the needs of the church in its divided condition has grown upon us with all the passing years. We have never doubted for a moment that God's hand was in the movement, and that it has a great and sublime mission to accomplish. There is not an essential feature of the great plea which our fathers made, that does not meet with our hearty approval. We have sought earnestly to guard it from certain dangers which seemed to us to narrow its scope and meaning, and to lead its advocates away from all legalistic tendencies to a profounder and more spiritual view of the gospel and of our movement, to restore it to its original simplicity and power. No doubt it is in this effort to correct what has seemed to us dangers to our cause that we have incurred the most opposition. But that these dangers have been real, and are real to-day, we submit to the candid judgment of the most thoughtful men among us.

We have had an ideal before us that a great religious movement like ours, pleading for Christian union, should exemplify the spirit of union by seeking to co-operate with all other Christian people just so far as this can be done without the sacrifice of any truth or principle for which we stand. That we have ever advocated any sort of union or co-operation or federation that would involve disloyalty to our own providential mission, can not be shown by any word or sentence we have ever spoken or written. Is there a representative man among us to-day that will deny the truth and the importance of this position and spirit? And yet God only knows how much we have suffered because of our advocacy of this attitude, which is so essential to our future success. We have thought that a religious movement like ours ought to be represented by a religious journal, that while loyal to the faith and to the plea of our fathers, should be courteous in spirit and dignified in its tone, and should seek to win brethren from the error of their way by argument and brotherly love rather than by bitter denunciation. We have been charged with advocating "higher criticism," chiefly by those who do not even know the meaning of the term. The only foundation for this is that we have urged that the grand old Book is able to stand all honest historical investigation, and that all dishonest or false criticism would be overthrown, and that we had nothing to fear as the result. We believe this work belongs to the few scholars who are capable of conducting it, and have never written an article on the subject, nor preached a sermon on it. We believe our business is to preach the gospel as the power of God unto salvation, and leave the work of literary and historical criticism to the experts who are equipped for such business.

Since the foregoing was written we have been under the knife again, and we hope finally for this trouble. This will be sufficient explanation for an abbreviated paragraph. Suffice it, therefore, to say in the midst of this pain that if it be the Lord's will that we continue a little while longer in the work that has occupied so large a part of our life, we shall seek, by all the power we have, and can command, to make "The Christian-Evangelist" serve the noble cause we are pleading, and to bring all its advocates into harmonious co-operation in the delightful fellowship of a varied and manifold Christian service. In this labor of love we invite the earnest co-operation of all who approve these ideals and principles, and upon our joint labors we invoke the blessing and favor of Almighty God.

KANSAS FOR CHRIST

SOMETHING FROM THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE

Jubilee Year.

By George E. Lyon.

"There's a flower that blooms in Kansas,
From the sun it took its hue.
May its gold bring showers of blessings,
Is the message I send to you."

We are closing the best year in the history of the Churches of Christ in Kansas. It has been the best year in the progress and plans for new church building. Many towns have enlarged their old structures and many more have erected new buildings.

This Jubilee year has been the best in the increased attendance in Bible school work, the increased number who have taken a special course in teacher training and the increased number of successful organized classes.

This year surpasses all others in fruitful evangelism. Over six thousand have already been reported as being added to the church in revival meetings, only, during this missionary year. This is double the number of Disciples known to have been living in Kansas at the close of the first ten years of organized work, and double the net gain of any Kansas denomination during the last church year.

The C. W. B. M. closes a prosperous year with about 500 reported as an increase in membership and a splendid diffusion of missionary intelligence.

The Christian Endeavor work is only normal. The only advance we report is the living link evangelist supported by the Topeka Endeavorers. Monthly reports are made to these societies.

This has been our best year in the character of pastoral work accomplished. A number of valuable acquisitions have come to us from the other states.

The Kansas Mission Board's report for the past year is not yet completed. They have aided every department of our church work effectively. They have employed regular evangelists and others for special meetings at different times. They have had in regular employ two department specialists and one negro worker. They have maintained a clearing house of information for the use of the churches and preachers. They have raised several thousand dollars on local indebtedness and provided for pastor's salary and the calling of ministers.

They have arranged a State Jubilee convention program and have sent out invitations inviting the workers in all the churches to be in Topeka October 22-28, where a complete report of the year's work will be given.

Kansas Plan.

By George E. Lyon.

The various departments of the state work in Kansas were united in 1898. In some states the Bible school, Christian Endeavor and C. W. B. M. departments have entirely separate existence. It has now been ten years since the interests of our states were consolidated. The state convention elects seven men to positions on the state board. The departments elect a president that becomes a member of the state board. The eleven districts of our state are represented on the state board by their presidents. The needs of every department and every part of our state can thus be represented in the state board meeting by a capable person. There may be some minor changes made occasionally, but the plan approaches an ideal and will most probably be continued for years to come. All our interests, therefore, occupy the same office, each worker is brought into touch with every interest, and all interests are reported monthly to the same board. This is Christian unity in service.

Kansas Day.

By M. Lee Sorey.

The first Sunday in November ought to be considered a specially sacred day to every Disciple in Kansas. It means so very much to the cause we represent. Kansas is a great state. Her people are of the best, and yet many of them are without Christ. Out of a population of over 1,656,000 we can count but 50,000. So I repeat, the day set for the offering for state missions ought to be precious. There is much to be gained by the appointment of a certain day for the offering. It gives the state superintendent an opportunity to prepare literature and helps of various kinds for the whole state at the same time. This is a great saving of time and expense.

The knowledge of the fact that all the churches in the state are to observe the same day gives an impetus to each one. No one is observing the day alone. All are having fellowship in the cause at the same time. Like the uniform lesson system, it lends enthusiasm.

Then, too, there is nothing like setting a time to do a thing and then doing it on time. We, as preachers and churches, are not bothered about setting the time. That has already been fixed, and we can concentrate our thought and our efforts on the proper observance of the day. Do not allow anything to interfere with the program for the special day. An evangelistic meeting will be helped rather than injured by presenting the claims of Christ on the state as well as on the particular community. It will give the church and her converts a broader vision. Of course, we are interested in the local field. That goes without saying. But we are only a small part of a great state that needs the Gospel of Christ. Do not allow an indifferent preacher to hinder the observance of the right day. If he does not want to prepare for the day, prepare him for his day with "spices," etc. Do not allow a selfish board of officers, "home loving board," to leave the date off the calendar. Give them the tonic of a good missionary sermon and the church will do the rest.

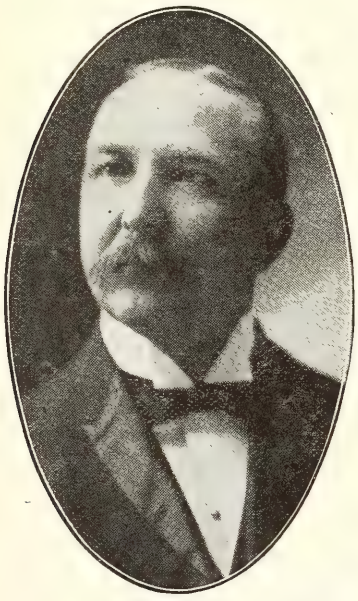
Kansas Missions

By W. S. LOWE

The limited space at our command necessitates a very condensed statement.

The Kansas Christian Missionary Society, in its present form, is only ten years old this October. But the history of co-operative missionary work in the territory and state of Kansas runs back through fifty eventful years, meandering its way like a river as one follows it to its source, running between mountains of adversity, gliding across plains of prosperity, then bounding over rocks of difficulty, until finally as a tiny rivulet the historian traces this stream of missionary activity to its fountain head, where it bubbles from the overflowing hearts of godly men and women filled with the spirit of Him who is the ultimate source of the water of life.



I. W. Gill, President of Bible School Department.

Among the persons who started this movement in the Sunflower State, then a territory, the names of Pardee Butler, Dr. S. G. Moore, Lewis Brockman, Prof. Norman Dunshee, Numeris Humber and wife, Judge Wm. Young, Joseph Potter and wife, Mrs. D. H. Speong, (the last three still living near the spot where the missionary society was organized), Joseph McBride, W. S. Yohe and Dr. S. A. Marshall are recorded.

Pardee Butler was the missionary selected, and seven churches organized was the result of his labors during the first year of grace, 1858.

Soon the great civil war, like a mighty tempest, burst upon the country, being felt first of all in this territory where pro-slavery and anti-slavery men were contending in a life-and-death struggle for the mastery. Yet with only one exception annual meetings or conventions were held during the sixties and seventies, some in towns with churches now extinct. However, it was not until 1870, at the convention held in Emporia, that the work assumed large proportions. At this convention the Kansas Sunday School Association, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and the Ministerial Association were launched. From this date until 1898 each of these organizations maintained a separate and independent existence, except the Ministerial Association, which soon died and was reorganized at another convention, also held at Emporia, in 1897, and is now in a flourishing condition.

During these eighteen years save one, Howard C. Rash was president of the S. S. Association and accomplished a wonderful work, while W. Chenault and J. H. Bauserman were the staunch and influential spirits in the work of the church, the former served as president, and the latter as secretary, for years.

J. M. Kersey, Vice-President K. C. M. S.

Finally, in 1898, at the Wellington convention, the present constitution and form of management was adopted by grouping the several departments under the Board with a "Head" for each department who is called the president. This arrangement has proved the most economical, satisfactory and efficient of any, and the work throughout is in a prosperous condition.

The men and women who have led the hosts in all these lines of work from the beginning to the present time were loyal subjects of the King and devoted servants of their Master and Lord. Space forbids even the mention of their names, save those who are serving in this our Jubilee year. The members of the State Board are as follows:

Frank E. Mallory, President.
J. M. Kersey, Vice President.
W. C. Payne, J. N. Haymaker, S. W. Nay, Charles A. Finch, W. T. McLain.
I. W. Gill, President Bible School.
O. N. Roth, President Christian Endeavor.
Mrs. S. L. Wilson, President C. W. B. M.
Miss Louie Bagley, President Junior C. E.
B. C. Duke, President Negro Work.
Geo. E. Lyon, Superintendent.
A. Rosalea Pendleton, Secretary, now completing her tenth year.
L. P. Bonebrake, Treasurer.

David H. Owen is the Auditor, but not a member of the board.

The state is divided into eleven districts, and the presidents of these are members of the board.

Orwin L. Adams and B. E. Youtz are living link evangelists, and Myron C. Settle is the Bible-school superintendent whose excellent work is attracting the attention of the entire brotherhood, there being over ten thousand persons enrolled in the teacher training movement, while the New Movement Bible Class for Adults is leaping to the front under his skillful management. Miss Bertha E. Moody is completing her third year as Organizer for the C. W. B. M., and has given splendid satisfaction. Brother Lyon, as superintendent of the entire work, is an untiring worker, and his ability and devotion are being recognized by all, while Miss Pendleton's years of service enable her to have a wonderful knowledge of the field and its needs.

The brotherhood of the state is supporting the state work more liberally than ever before, while the large number of churches organized and weak ones strengthened, the increase in the various departments, together with the large number of people brought into the kingdom from year to year through this agency, prove its growing efficiency.

O. N. Roth, President Y. P. S. C. E.

Thus has the small band become a host, and the tiny rivulet a mighty river.

Evangelistic Possibilities.

By W. L. Harris.

These are two great words. Words that few ministers understand; words that should probe us to action, for great results lie just ahead. Jesus said: "Preach the gospel to every creature." Paul said: "Make full proof of the ministry; do the work of an evangelist." Yet we sleep on, thinking that we have done our full duty when we preach twice on Sunday and make a few calls. In the early church they "went everywhere preaching the word." What is the matter with the modern church? Preachers either take it too easy or the church is too selfish, and refuse to let their minister evangelize the surrounding territory. Some preachers are even discharged for going into the country schoolhouse with the message of salvation. Some elders and deacons will have much to answer for in the judgment. Who can measure the "evangelistic possibilities"? Suppose the minister and the church would co-operate and take pride in evangelizing needy fields. The world would soon be taken for Christ. We need more of the ginger and enthusiasm of the early church; more of their faith. Imagine Peter or Paul preaching just two sermons a week in a large church or a county seat town, and refusing to "go out and stir up the brethren in the surrounding starving fields!" Brethren, there would be revivals all around the county seat. The heat from these great central fires would penetrate to the remotest corner. "But," says some one, "suppose the board would instruct the preacher, or compel him to stay at home and leave these needy fields alone?" I believe they would shake the dust off their feet and "go everywhere preaching the Word." But, while supplying and helping needy fields, do not neglect your own pulpit. What can be done is best illustrated by what has been done. It has been suggested that I write of my meetings at Nickerson, Little River and Lakin, so I know you will pardon a personal allusion. The Lyons church gave me a month last year for evangelistic work in needy fields. I spent four weeks at Nickerson, with 82 additions, which doubled the church, and they are now erecting a $10,000 building. This year my church loaned me again, and for nineteen days I was at Little River, where we never had a church. Renting the opera house, I did my own singing, as I did also at Nickerson, and preached, but was greatly assisted by two of my own ministers, Clarence Wikoff and Bishop Hopkins. We had 60 additions, organized a new church, built a tabernacle and employed a minister. They are planning a great meeting for October and erecting a $10,000 building. Suppose I had stayed at home? Then I preached six nights at Lakin, with 27 additions, and they have employed C. F. Bastian as minister. Hard work, the hardest in the world, and the least pay. The work suffers at home? No. The pastor returns for most of the Sundays. The church takes pride in the good seed sown around them. All these people rise up and call you blessed. "Evangelistic possibilities?" Well, I should say! Suppose you try it. Some day you will hear the "Well done."

Early Days of the Church in Kansas

By J. A. SMITH.

In the beginning of things in Kansas the outlook for the Disciples was not a bright one. The fact that the earliest colonies were composed of New Englanders, who were largely of the Congregationalist faith and order, made it a difficult matter to get our plea introduced where an established religion had found a permanent lodgment.

Then the question of the introduction of slavery into the territory was paramount and from the early fifties until the end of the decade, the fight was on and was most bitterly waged, and often at the cost of human life. These conditions were not conducive to the rapid advancement of religious work of any kind and especially one that was almost in its infancy, as was the reformation of that period; the whole membership aggregating less than two hundred thousand in the United States.

Then followed the civil war which was still another check for four long years on the Master's work.

The writer was in the state for three years during the early part of the civil war, not as a preacher of the gospel, but I was in a position to observe the trend of things very closely, visiting most of the towns and villages along the eastern border and at that time I found no Disciple church in Leavenworth, Wyandotte (now Kansas City, Kan.), Olathe, Lawrence, Topeka, Paolo, Osawatomie or Fort Scott. At or near Mound City, in Linn county, we had a few scattered members and the noted Colonel James Montgomery was the minister. From the best information at hand we had a small congregation at or near Atchison and over its destinies presided Pardee Butler, who, during the dark days of the territorial war, achieved a notoriety by his unrelenting advocacy of the free soil doctrine. He was frequently warned by the pro-slavery men to desist from making speeches against slavery, but the stern, unflinching man, believing in the righteousess of his cause, refused to keep silent. His course aggravated his political foes to the extent that on August 16, 1855, he was arrested and threatened with death if he did not leave the territory, which he refused to do. Finally they blackened his face and placed him on a log in the Missouri River and sent him adrift, with the warning not to return or death would be the penalty. He finally made his escape, but in a few weeks returned, and at that time a company of South Carolina pro-slavery men were quartered at Atchison, and they took him out and gave him a coat of tar and feathers and after again threatening his life, sent him on another voyage down the river on a raft. However, he returned to the territory in a short time and was engaged in actively preaching the old Gospel and assisting his free soil associates, and lived to see the state of his adoption under the conditions which he so earnestly sought, at the endangering of his life. (These facts were obtained from Spring's "History of Kansas" and Wilder's "Annals.").

I never met Pardee Butler, but had a personal acquaintance with Col. Montgomery. He figured also prominently as a free state man, and at the breaking out of the war was commissioned colonel of the Third Kansas,but was soon transferred to the command of the First South Carolina Colored Infantry, and served in the South until the close of the war. He returned to his home at Mound City, Kan., where he resided until his death in 1871.

Brother Montgomery was pictured by his enemies as a perfect fiend, without a spark of mercy in his nature, but this is totally incorrect. He was well educated and as gentle and mild in his demeanor as any man I ever met. While as a commander of men and having authority, such as often made men martinents, Col. Montgomery was always kind and considerate of the welfare of his own men, and treated kindly those of his enemies who fell into his hands. After he returned from the war he attended strictly to his work on his farm, and preached occasionally for the Mound City church until his death, and when he died he was loved and greatly respected by his old friends and neighbors.

The lamented Simpson Ely, who recently was killed by a fall from a street car in Joplin, Mo., began his labors in Wilson county, and did much good work in the new state. Knowles Shaw made an evangelistic tour of the state, which did much in giving our plea prominence. At an early date J. V. Updike held several successful meetings in Kansas, which made an epoch of the advancement of our work in the Sunflower State. To go back a little. When the Civil War ended and the soldiers' homestead law was in force, thousands of ex-soldiers of the war and their families went to Kansas, and many of these emigrants were Christians only. In a short time many churches were orgaized, especially in the southern portion of the state—in that part ceded to the state by the Osage Indians. J. W. Shively was another of the Kansas pioneer preachers, and while he was a rough diamond, his work will tell in eternity. He died a few years ago at the ripe old age of nearly 80, full of love and of good works.

The rapid progress of our work in Kansas has been solely due to the missionary spirit which has been the warp and woof of the substantial work done there. This spirit led to a most perfect organization of the active forces of the church, and the state has its county, district and state organizations, all working in perfect harmony and accomplishing a splendid work, as the records show. I took charge of the Independence church in 1895, and in April of that year the county work was organized and put into operation, with S. W. Brown at Coffeyville, J. R. Charlton at Caney, C. C. Atwood at White Post and the writer at Independence, each of our congregations giving us leave to hold revival meetings at destitute points in the country, the home congregations to bear the expenses of said meetings. The program was so effectively carried out, that in six months afterwards, at the county convention, we were able to report something over five hundred accessions to the membership in Montgomery county alone, and this was the plan pursued in most of the counties in the state, all of which accounts for the marvelous growth of the church in the state. Another feature of the work in the state was the plan of holding Sunday-school rallies, the idea originating with Howard Rash, who for many years was the State Sunday-school Superintendent. I believe much of the zeal manifested recently in the grand department of our work is largely due to the early day Sunday-school rallies.

In all of my public ministry I have never

LIFE'S ROAD

Smoothed by Change of Food.

Worry is a big load to carry and an unnecessary one. When accompanied by indigestion it certainly is cause for the blues.

But the whole trouble may be easily thrown off and life's road be made easy and comfortable by proper eating and the cultivation of good cheer. Hear what a Troy woman says:

"Two years ago I made the acquaintance of Grape-Nuts and have used the food once a day and sometimes twice, ever since.

"At the time I began to use it life was a burden. I was for years afflicted with bilious sick headache, caused by indigestion, and nothing seemed to relieve me.

"The trouble became so severe I had to leave my work for days at a time.

"My nerves were in such a state I could not sleep and the doctor said I was on the verge of nervous prostration. I saw an adv. concerning Grape-Nuts and bought a package for trial.

"What Grape-Nuts has done for me is certainly marvelous. I can now sleep like a child, am entirely free from the old trouble and have not had a headache in over a year. I feel like a new person. I have recommended it to others. One man I knew ate nothing but Grape-Nuts, while working on the ice all winter, and said he never felt better in his life."

found a people, both ministers and private members, that manifested as much zeal in the Master's work and pride in the success of the gospel within the borders of their own state, as that of Kansas, and it must not be inferred that the home work is all that they are interested in, for they are fully alive to all departments of the work at home and abroad. It does me good to offer this sincere tribute to the sterling worth of the good people of a state where I once labored with so much pleasure, and while out here on the rim of Uncle Samuel's domains in a climate of perpetual summer and flowers blooming perennially, "where every prospect pleases" (the other part of the couplet omitted), my mind runs back to former scenes and places in Kansas, whose people I shall always love, and my prayers will always be for the success of the gospel within her borders.

Early Kansas Conventions

By C. W. YARD.

Conventions were held in quite obscure places in those days of small things not to be despised: In 1863 at Ottumwa, where later the Christian College ended in ashes; at Tecumseh in 1864, Prairie City in 1865, Grantville in 1869, St. George in 1871, Yates Center in 1878. But in those days, when our wives ate cornbread and prairie chicken at home, and the wedding-suit we brought to this land of promise, though so carefully preserved, was getting threadbare, a journey to these holy convocations was too luxurious to be frequent. In fact, a basket meeting in the woods filled all our temporal and spiritual desires.

It was my privilege to attend conventions at El Dorado, Manhattan, Leavenworth, Wichita, Emporia and Topeka in the eighties, and at Ottawa, Emporia, Kansas City (Kan.), Wichita and Parsons in the early nineties. Later I was present at Topeka, Hutchinson, Newton, El Dorado and Parsons. These conventions were not so largely attended as to be unwieldy and cumbrous, as many now are. At Topeka, as late as 1889, we barely had the 100 tickets demanded by the railroads as a condition to reduced rates—preachers' permits not counted.

The following persons, since deceased, were familiar figures in our early conventions: Pardee Butler, Dr. S. T. Dodd, J. B. McCleery, A. Ellett, J. C. Sevy, J. H. Bauserman, R. L. Lotz, C. C. Deweese, David Nation, E. E. Harvey, E. L. Craig, Ben. H. Smith, W. T. Hunt, J. H. Duncan, A. D. Goodwin, H. W. Everest, A. I. Hobbs, O. C. Hill, M. D. Bush, N. A. McConnell, N. R. Dale, Robert Hay, F. D. Pettit, A. C. Hopkins, M. Ingels, W. B. Hendrix, M. E. Harlan, M. S. Hough, D. S. Kelley, Mrs. Helen E. Moses, and probably others whom I can not recall at this moment. These were a mighty host in the councils and work of the Lord in Kansas, of whom the world was not worthy. They fought a good fight, they finished the course, they kept the faith, and now they wear the crown. Of the living I forbear to speak because I can not mention all. We love them for their loyalty to Christ and the plea which was so dear to the heart of the Master—the plea for a united church.

Sometimes, in those days, our conventions rose to a high pitch of enthusiasm. On one occasion, at Topeka, the sum of thirty thousand dollars was pledged for a prospective educational institution.

Fifty Years in Kansas

By CHARLES A. FINCH.

Fifty years—a half century of New Testament Christianity in the Sunflower State! The era unfolds a marvelous tale. From the Pisgah of what wonderful achievements do we behold our wilderness march and glimpse the splendor of the day to be when none shall say, "know ye the Lord," for all shall know him, from the least to the greatest.

Our semi-centennial comprehends the entire history of Kansas as a state and part of her territorial record. From the time that the best blood of New England settled upon the banks of the Kansas River—himself an early settler—

> Banks 'O Kaw
> Came out west with Miss Sunflower,
> Filed on claims the self-same hour
> Looking up a situation
> For a business location, and founded the historic city of Lawrence, so soon to pass through her baptism of blood and fire, and now the seat of the State University and center of culture: from that time unto this hour the Church of Christ has not been without believers who were devoted to the restoration of primitive Christianity, taking for their motto: "In faith, unity; in opinion, liberty; in all things, charity."

Fifty years, the span of a strong man's career, holding within its puissant bounds the most stirring chapters of human progress! Within that period liberty has been enthroned while democracy, education—political and ecclesiastical—has won on every battle-field of the world. Then the tawny prairies were crisp with the tang of "the wild," and savage folk, "so wild that they were tame," gazed in fearsome awe at the home-seekers' "schooners"—those white bannered chariots of civilization, which, like the foam-crested billows of an inrushing sea signalled the advance of that engulfing human tide following ever the star of empire westward. Those were the days of the Lecompton constitution, of the Pro-slavery and Free-soil parties, the first armed expressions of sectional alignment ushering in the horror of border warfare, ensanguining the land, from whose flames of hate the black specter of fratricidal war engloomed the sky.

Two score years and ten, with no prophet so bold as to have visioned then the present host of Disciples thronging multitudinous cities and villages of the once pathless plains. But to-day is heard their stir and bustle and preparation, and already the vanguard is encompassing the capital city with the tread of the heavy columns close behind.

It is a far cry from the present to the days of the heroic Pardee Butler, who first preached the primitive Gospel to a generation whose fathers

> Settled here afore the law,
> Er buffaloes, er schooner sail
> Dipped along the 'Frisco trail.

But with eager spirit and unresting feet he proclaimed heaven's evangel within the widely separated hamlets of a sparsely settled territory, believing that "woe is me if I preach not the gospel." Though disclaiming its historic succession, he frequently braved the dangers and endured the hardships of the apostolic office, and was at times compelled to flee from savage men, more fierce than savage tribes when the ethics of hospitality prejudged all strangers as enemies until proved friends. In perils often, by hunger and weariness tried, he exemplifies for us the apostolic zeal. On one occasion he barely escaped with his life, floating on a raft of logs down the "Big Muddy," at night, alone with God, the sentinel stars and his brave heart being companions enough for this wilderness voice whose undaunted soul sensed heavenly powers, beholding "the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof."

Such was the beginning of a work which was ably carried forward by the veterans, D. R. Dungan and R. C. Barrow, the latter pioneering in Nebraska. Cast in heroic mold, invincible wielders of the Spirit's blade, their memories will ever be revered by the Disciples of these empire states. Whether getting a "lift" on a settler's wagon, or by good fortune getting left in a settler's dug-out when the deadly "norther," in sheeted garments of snow congealed the blood of unprotected life, they faltered not. Now riding upon Indian ponies, and frequently afoot, whether chilled by icy streams or burned swart as Othello by the fevered suns of unrelenting skies, with meager pay and scanty fare they made their appointments, enduring through seeing the invisible.

Thus with infinite wisdom Kansas selected her forefathers, men with brain and brawn for empire, whose adventurous spirits and independent quality of mind led them with equal courage to sunder the ties of creed and home, if in a newer, freer state they might obtain a simpler, nobler faith. Here they organized a civilization and became the fathers of the Kansas spirit, which senses destiny before its birth, and, like wise men of old, is found bowing at the cradle altar of the Babe when other communities are peering into musty volumes of ancient precedent to learn the place of its nativity. The national horoscope is seldom fruitless, if cast in Sunflower skies, and if Kansas be the Judæa, in whose moral and intellectual heavens celestial visitants first appear, similarly by virtue of her ex-

But Tells Facts About Postum.

"We have used Postum for the past eight years," writes a Wis., lady, "and drink it three times a day. We never tire of it.

"For several years I could scarcely eat anything on account of dyspepsia, bloating after meals, palpitation, sick headache—in fact was in such misery and distress I tried living on hot water and toast for nearly a year.

"I had quit coffee, the cause of my trouble, and was using hot water, but this was not nourishing.

"Hearing of Postum I began drinking it and my ailments disappeared, and now I can eat anything I want without trouble.

"My parents and husband had about the same experience. Mother would often suffer after eating, while yet drinking coffee. My husband was a great coffee drinker and suffered from indigestion and headache.

"After he stopped coffee and began Postum both ailments left him. He will not drink anything else now and we have it three times a day. I could write more but am no gusher—only state plain facts."

ecutive and legislative activities, Topeka is the Bethlehem upon which first rain the star-fires of newest thought and stalwart citizenship.

Hither in this Athens of the west the delegates of fifty thousand Disciples will celebrate their Jubilee convention. What will another half-century bring forth? Few, if any, of the present warriors on our "far-flung battle line" will pass in review at the centennial of 1958, but they shall know the joy and the victory of that fair day. Then, with not less than two thousand churches, we shall have enlisted an army of five hundred thousand souls, devoted wholly to the restoration of the church of the first century in its doctrines, ordinances and fruits. With the battle for Christian unity fought and won and opposition overcome to the evangelizing of any part of our God's great mission field, the world, our income for home and state work will have risen to $100,000 annually. But before this dazzling vision the wings of fancy droop and grow weary. The sunburst of that day calls for eyes of keener vision than ours to orb its transcendent glory.

But what of the immediate future? It bulks tremendous in its forward look. The outstanding facts demand congratulations. This year our increase in numbers exceeds by more than three thousand the gains of any other religious body. Almost to a man our preachers are loyal to the plea of our fathers, and are second to none in ability and in faith. The present superintendent of missions, Geo. E. Lyon, possesses a genius for leadership. Sprung from the purest Anglo-Saxon blood of the mountains of Tennessee, he combines the virile qualities of that noble strain with the native eloquence of the south. We secured a rare spirit when Myron C. Settle and his accomplished wife came to us. Under their mutual labors our Bible schools are rapidly passing from the old into the new, both in methods and ideas. Time fails us to speak of the great Endeavor hosts, never so alive and vigorous as now, nor of the great battalions of the C. W. B. M., in their achievements for us this year. Kansas must be seen to be appreciated, and to this end let the entire brotherhood arrange to visit us in 1910, where, in international convention assembled, they may feel the pulse of its unrivaled hospitality and drink in the joy of living where the sunflowers bloom.

The Topeka Churches

By F. E. MALLORY.

The first permanent organization of the Church of Christ in Topeka, Kansas, was effected in the year 1880, with a membership of 28. There was an organization as early as 1870, but it was impossible to keep it alive, as there were but few members, with but little financial ability. A minister could not be supported and the church disbanded. The first pastor of the permanent organization was Dr. T. S. Dodd, who began his work in October, 1880. There was no house of worship at this time, and the brethren met for worship in the Y. M. C. A. Hall on Kansas Avenue. These were strenuous days for this band of Disciples, but they proved faithful to their charge. The trials, self-denial and hardship endured by pastor and people in order to make permanent the cause of primitive Christianity in the capital city of the Sunflower State will never be known to those outside of that consecrated band of people. The First Church has grown to be a mighty instrument of power in the city of Topeka, under the leadership of the men who have served the church, in the order named: Dr. T. S. Dodd, W. H. Boles, A. J. Garrison, W. A. Belding, J. F. Sloan, Benj. L. Smith, D. D. Boyle, M. E. Harlan, F. W. Emerson and the present efficient pastor, Chas. A. Finch.

The present membership of the First Church is about five hundred, but it must be remembered that since its organization four other congregations have been born. They have drawn largely upon the membership of the First Church. The North Topeka Church was the next to be organized, and was served by such men as William Ireland, M. Ingels, A. G. Alderman, J. T. Purvis, F. H. Bentley and others. David Lyon is now the pastor of this church and is doing a work of which any pastor might be proud. The North Topeka Church has suffered twice from the Kaw River floods, but always comes to the front, smiling and trusting in God. The church is missionary to the core and supports all departments of our organized missionary work—state, national and world-wide.

During the summer of 1893 the First Church and the Kansas Christian Missionary Society began a tent meeting on the East Side, under the splendid leadership of J. A. L. Romig and F. F. Dawdy. The meeting continued about three months. At the close of the meeting the record showed an ingathering of 567 persons. A church was organized in September, 1893, known as The Third Christian Church. This new congregation began active work with a membership of 429, the remaining number placing their membership elsewhere. F. E. Mallory was called to minister to this new congregation October 1, 1893. He is still with the Third Church. The membership is made up largely of railroad employees, and numbers 450. They erected a new house of worship, and are practically out of debt.

The writer and C. A. Finch each held missionary meetings in Oakland, a suburb of Topeka, which resulted in the organization of a splendid congregation on November 23, 1902. Each of the pastors in the city, in turn, served this church until Neal Overman was called to minister to it. Brother Overman was succeeded by Homer Foltz, who has done a marvelous work for primitive Christianity in Oakland. This congregation has a new church edifice.

About this time William Ireland was instrumental in bringing about a movement in the southwestern part of Topeka, near Washburn College. A small tabernacle was erected and a Bible school was organized. Later a missionary meeting was held and the result was so satisfactory that another church was organized, known as the Central Park Christian Church. C. A. Polson was called to serve this church. He was succeeded by C. W. Cooper, the present pastor. This church promises to be one of the strongest in the city. Its new house of worship is nearly paid for.

The Second Church is composed of our colored brethren. They have their own house of worship and are ministered to by Brother B. C. Duke, one of the most consecrated men in Kansas.

There are about 1,700 members of the Church of Christ in Topeka who are identified with some one of our churches. There are many more in the city who, for one reason or another, have never taken membership with us.

SOME KANSAS WORK AND WORKERS

(1) L. H. Koepsel had a Methodist training, being a preacher for that body in his twenty-first year. Going as a missionary he broke away from sectarian bonds. In Kansas he has devoted five years to desolate regions and the establishing of churches. He has been editor of the Christian Endeavor quarterly and other similar publications, and has done some special lecture work. Since last January he has given himself to the evangelistic field, and purposes continuing in it. He re-established the church in Fontana, and has been holding a meeting there. His location is Erie.

(2) N. Ferd Engle is located at Humboldt, Kan. Prior to that he was at Lincoln and Plainville. At the latter place a church seating 650 people was erected, while those at Lincoln and Humboldt have been remodeled. All these congregations experience substantial growth. Brother Engle had the joy of leading his father, mother, sister and four brothers into the church, starting one of these into the ministry, while another is preparing for gospel work. He has evangelized in Kansas, Missouri, Illinois and other states, and is editing some Christian Endeavor lesson helps.

(3) H. E. Ballou was born in Virginia, graduated at Lexington, Ky., coming at once to Kansas, where he has been located in Mitchel, Jewel, Cloud and several other counties. He was successful as state evangelist in 1892-93, was chaplain of the state prison in 1897-98. He counts five successful ministers who came into the church under his labors. He is vigorous and much in demand. His thirty years in Kansas makes him one of the oldest preachers in point of service.

(4) E. C. Baird received his education in Kansas and at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn. His ministry has been at Craig and St. Joseph, Mo. At the latter place during the erection of the King Hill Christian Church he received more than 100 into church fellowship. The church at Utica, where he has been now for two months, is less than a year old, and is the result of a meeting held by M. B. Ingle. Its future growth is assured, for it has a good edifice, built of cement blocks, and some of the best people in the community in its membership. Ransom, the other point served by Brother Baird, is the result of a meeting held some years ago led by George L. Peters. Much of the success there has been due to the Shellenburger brothers. Brother Baird finds Eastern Kansas a fruitful field for missionary effort.

(5) Clifford A. Cole is a native of Kansas, and pastor of the church at Abilene. His college work was at Fairmont and Drake. He is just completing his second year in this his first pastorate. There have been 110 added to the membership at regular services, the Bible school trebled, and from a practically non-missionary church this has become one of the leading missionary congregations in the city. A new building is being contemplated for next year. Brother Cole has been president of the Fifth District Kansas for three years and is recording secretary of the Jubilee convention.

(6) D. H. Johnston, one of the oldest of our ministers, attained the age of eighty-five last April. He has lived under the administration of twenty-two presidents. Born in Ohio, in early life he belonged to the Christian Connection Church, preaching for it and teaching in Union Christian College, Indiana. Soon after going to Kansas, in 1866, he joined the Disciples and has been in this ministry for fifty-six years. He saw the early beginnings of the work in the state, attended the first state meeting, baptizing Judge Rankin's daughter in the Neosho river. By reason of his agreeing to stand good for any deficiency in salary, a state evangelist was secured. Brother Johnston had to pay 5 cents deficit. When the state was quartered in 1873 he became one of the evangelists. In those days there was no place to preach but in schoolhouses, and shanties dug out for sod houses were the sleeping places. Brother Johnston thinks to-day the trouble with the churches is a lack of individual spirituality.

(7) D. J. Howe ministers to the church at Nickerson, Kan. This was organized some fourteen years ago, through the labors of Brother Carr, with sixteen charter members. The removal of the shops to another point led to a loss of half the population of the town, so that this little band was much reduced. Occasionally some minister would drop in and preach for them and hold a meeting, which would add to the few struggling to support the cause of primitive Christianity. Some five years ago, through the co-operation of these faithful Disciples and D. Y. Donaldson, at that time pastor at Hutchinson, a house of worship was erected. Since then there has been regular preaching. Brother Howe, then of Eureka, Ill., was called to the work last fall at the conclusion of a meeting led by W. L. Harris. During his ten months of ministry there have been twenty additions. Growth in every department has demanded a larger and better equipped building and this is now nearly completed. It is of brick and veneer stone trimming, and is to have a seating capacity of 700. It is worth $15,000 and will be dedicated October 18. A meeting is to follow. Only one of the charter members remains.

(8) Frank H. Bentley is essentially a Kansas preacher, having spent most of his life in that state. It was there he was converted and preached his first sermon. Educated at Cotner, as a student he preached for two Nebraska churches—Lonham and Old Charter Oak. Finishing at Cotner, he returned to Kansas, and has held pastorates at Nortonville, Lancaster, Ashland, Seneca, Oneida, Reserve, North Lawrence, North Topeka and Havensville, so that his work has been confined to the northeastern part of the state. The longest pastorate was at North Topeka, which he left after four years of service in January, to take his present work at Havensville. One of his special aims is the deepening of the spiritual life of the church, and the development of the missionary spirit.

(9) Orlo M. Law, of Moline, Kan., was born at Ravenna, Ohio, and began preaching in 1896. He graduated from Central Christian College and has held pastorate at Valley Falls, Kan., Oak Cliff and Ross avenue, Dallas, Texas, and Eureka and Moline, Kans.

(10) Otho C. Moomaw has for several years been located at Bonner Springs, where he has done a good work, but we have not late particulars.

(11) William M. Mayfield is a Kentuckian by birth, son of John Baxter Mayfield, well known in Illinois and Missouri. He is an alumnus of Kansas University, and received his Bible training at Canton, Mo., and Lexington, Ky. All his work has been with congregations in small towns of Kansas, until last June when he took charge of the Grandview and Quindaro Blvd. missions in Kansas City, Kan. These are located in growing residence sections, and there is a promise of a great future under Brother Mayfield, who has made a fine start.

(12) H. M. Gilmore is a Kansan by birth, having been born in Lincoln, Co. He was educated for the Methodist ministry, and was soon to have been ordained when he began attending a revival at the Christian Church, Parsons, conducted by W. E. Harlow, at that time pastor. This led to his uniting with the Christian Church in the winter of 1895. Being ordered to the Ozark mountains for his health he preached up and down that region in church, school-house and log cabin. He found sympathetic hearers, and values highly the fellowship of those days. He returned to Topeka and began preaching again after a lapse of two years, since which time there have been 272 additions in the churches for which he has labored. He has been two years at Marion, Kan., and the work has prospered greatly. This church is to entertain the Fifth District Convention next spring, and is to hold a meeting with Richard Martin.

(13) J. F. Powers, living at Ottawa, Kan., preaches for the churches at Walnut and Little Stranger. His early life was spent on a farm in DeWitt Co., Ill. He came to Kansas when quite young, was educated at the Normal school at Paola, and the college at Ft. Scott. He studied law, but went into the ministry and served the churches at Melvern, Princeton, Homewood, Rossville and Linden, while he has evangelized, also, in Illinois, Oklahoma and Kansas.

(14) R. H. Love is a Missourian by birth and joined the church at Antioch, Randolph county, entering the ministry when a mere boy, being the ninth preacher sent out by that historic church. He served several of the best churches in the state, having been successful as both pastor and evangelist. He began his work last June at Galena, Kan., having gone there from Hennessey, Okla. The church has already taken on new life, there are frequent additions, every department has increased and it is more united and spiritual minded.

(15) J. F. Hay is a native of the state, and a graduate of Bethany College, 1904. Locating first at Decatur, Mich., he witnessed a growth in the church there, but after two years accepted a call to labor at Canton and Galva, Kan. A modern church building has been erected at the former place, and an addition built at Galva.

(16) Oliver N. Roth is a native of Missouri, but in early life his parents moved to Eastern Kansas, and he spent his boyhood days on a ranch. Under the preaching of Elder Bush he united with the church at the age of 15, entering Kentucky University in 1898, and graduated from there and the Bible college in 1904. Shortly after this he took charge of the church at Argentine, Kan., until called to the South Lawrence Church at Wichita, where he is now serving his third year. This congregation is in a growing part of the city, and has a membership of about 300. It is doing aggressive work, is a supporter of all missionary and benevolent interests, and has a share in our station at Nankin, China. It has enlarged and refurnished its place of worship. Brother Roth is state president of the Y. P. S. C. E. of the Christian Church, and also president of the Fourth Missionary District of Kansas.

(17) F. W. Collins, of Garnett, Kan., comes of pioneer preaching stock in the Ohio "Western Reserve," though most of his ministerial work has been done farther west, in Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska. He is now in his second year with the church at Garnett. He has the right spirit in his work, his ambition being for a substantial rather than a brilliant ministry—mediating to his people the best and truest thought, leading to a higher and spiritual life and developing a growing interest and activity in all the largest interests of the kingdom of God.

(18) O. H. Truman was born on a small farm near Milton, Wis., in 1850. He was educated there and at Mountain Home, Ark., and when twenty-three became associate principal of the Academy at the last place, preaching subsequently in Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas and Kentucky. The last four years he has preached at Lawrence, Kan., where the members are loyal to the Master and his minister. He has spent a life-time in preparing for a larger work. Mr. Truman believes he was born with an impulse which has pushed him into a distinct mission. At first it was a world-wide religious movement on the Bible plan of salvation. Later the labor movement has been combined with temperance, and he feels that a moral society will be organized to combine these forces for a national victory in 1912. He looks for this to be followed by the religious movement of this century.

(19) J. M. Lowe was born in Adams Co., Ill., was educated at Canton, Mo., and at Drake University, Des Moines. He preached at Winterset as a student, and was pastor at Capitol Hill, Des Moines, Boulder, Colo., and Galesburg, Ill. He was state evangelist for Kansas, traveling a part of the time in the interest of Kansas missions, and has evangelized, also, independently. For less strenuous work and recuperation he located at Goodland, Kan., in what is a delightful and growing work. As these lines are written he is in a promising meeting with the splendid assistance of the Kendalls.

(20) Z. E. Bates, pastor of the First Church at Atchison, was born near Springfield, Ill., and is a graduate and post-graduate of Bethany College. He has served the churches at Allegheny and Fairmont, W. Va. He took the work in Atchison in September, 1907. A good lot has been purchased, and a new building is now under consideration. The congregation numbers about 1,000, the Bible school is up-to-date and in every respect easily leads other schools. The work of Brother Bates has given such satisfaction that he has been asked to stay at least three years longer.

(21) Orvin H. Loomis is located at Oswego, Kan. After finishing a college course at Mendota, Ill., and a pastorate at Minneapolis, about a year ago he located in Kansas City. This was a transition period. Up till then he had been preaching for the Advent Christian people, but having received most of his early religious training in the Christian Church at Hamburg, Ia., it was not difficult for him to become an exponent of the views of the Disciples of Christ. It was the brotherly spirit of the members of the Christian Ministers' Alliance of Kansas City, and especially the helpfulness of D. Y. Donaldson and his church, which made Brother Loomis what he is to-day, a Christian only. Serving as assistant pastor to Brother Donaldson for a brief period, in May of this year he took charge of the Oswego Church, which in past years had suffered much. It was necessary to re-construct the work from the very foundation. Improvements have been made on the property, apportionments all paid, and our cause has gained favor with the town people. This is a county seat town of nearly 3,000 population. Brother Loomis believes that by hard work it can be made a stronghold for the simple gospel plea.

(22) B. Matchett hails from England and was brought up in the Established Church. In 1850 he located in Canada, and six years later removed to Laporte, Ind., thence to Missouri and to Kansas in 1885. He was engaged in the railroad service in his early days, and served two years in the civil war. It was in 1870 that he entered the ministry. He has labored in several states. He was state evangelist under the superintendency of Brother Pickett, of Kansas. He now gives his time to Antioch Church, near Chula, Mo.; Duffield, in Sullivan county, and Newton, where the work prospers. He was speaker pro tem. for the House of Representatives in Kansas in 1891.

(23) S. A. Ennefer grew up under the shadow of Eureka College, graduating from that institution in 1887. He spent about twenty years of his ministry with a few churches in Illinois, one year in Missouri, and one year in Iowa. Three years ago he located in Sunny, Kan., and since that time has been working with the church at Mound City. If he were to write about himself Brother Ennefer would say: "I have not turned the world upside down, but have been trying, in the fear of the Lord, to straighten out one little corner."

(24) J. P. Haner, of Moran, Kan., is a "Buckeye" by birth. From Presbyterianism he united with the Baptist brethren. About twelve years ago he heard the plea of the Christian Church, since which time he has given himself largely to its evangelistic work. Recent meetings have been at Lafontaine, Kan., with 80 additions, at Elk City with 87, and at Monett, Mo., with 65.

(25) A. B. Moore was born in Ontario, Canada, spending his early life on a farm, but was educated for a business career. He has lived in Southeast Kansas for 25 years, serving two years as judge of the Probate Court, and has confined his ministry to the churches at Gridley, Pleasant Hill and Strawn. At the latter place he is now serving his fourth year.

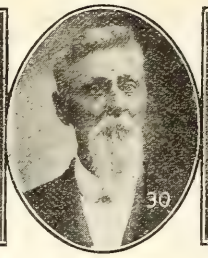
(26) Howard J. Myers was for several years a salesman, but seeing the need entered the ministry and during his short stay at Cheney there has been a definite progress.

(27) R. W. Woodside, of Oakley, Kan., is a Kentuckian by birth, but at an early age moved to the Sunflower State, where he spent his early life on the farm. Later becoming a school teacher, he prepared himself for the ministry at Garfield University. He has held pastorates in two other states, and evangelized in six, but spent most of his time in Kansas, serving as state evangelist for one year, and as special evangelist for three years. He has occupied the lecture field with credit. This fall and winter he will evangelize.

(28) H. W. Nicholson is a graduate of the School of Evangelists, where he completed his work in 1903. Since that time he has been actively engaged in pastoral work in Kansas, and is at present located at Great Bend, where the work has been reasonably prosperous despite the difficulties of the field. This church, and that at Halstead, where he served two years, have given during his labors more to missions than at any other period. He has started a home department and teacher training work, and a C. W. B. M. has been organized. There have been nine baptisms and nine additions by letter and statement since February. A meeting is to begin in November under the leadership of Engleman and Zimmerman.

(29) L. S. Ridnour is a native of Southwest Pennsylvania. He grew to manhood on a farm in Illinois. He engaged in educational work and was leader in the United Brethren Church until he heard J. B. Johnson, our pastor at De Soto, Ia., preach. After studying the plea of the Christian Church he entered upon the ministry of the gospel. He has served churches in Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas. He was also evangelist for the I. C. C., the Nebraska C. M. S., and the K. C. M. S., as well as an independent evangelist. He is now in his tenth meeting since last October. His permanent home is at Osawatomie.

(30) Jesse B. Noe, who is located at Osborne, Kan., is a "Buckeye," having been born at Licking county, Ohio, in 1832. In early life he moved to Indiana and commenced preaching when a boy of 17 among the Freewill Baptists. But in 1853 he united with the Disciples of Christ, and three years later moved to Iowa, where his best ministerial work was done. He had a part in establishing some of our best churches. For a man of his age he is in good health and will be glad to hear from many of his friends.



Through his labors nearly 1,000 additions have come to the church.

(31) G. P. Clark has spent all of his five years' ministerial work in Kansas. During three of these at Asherville there have been 117 additions and an enlargement of the building. The church is taking on full time preaching. W. H. Curtis was to take this work at Asherville and Brother Clark go to Perkins, Okla., in October.

(32) W. L. Harris has had great success in his field at Lyons, Kan., and preaches to large audiences. He is of the evangelistic type and has held numerous successful meetings, as witness his article on another page. He has lectured at many points. His ambition is to evangelize the whole of Rice county. He and Mr. Settle were the winners of the teacher training banner for the Bible knowledge contest at Bethany Park, Ind.

(33) R. C. Leonard left Christian University and entered upon an Iowa pastorate. After three years in that state, with 140 additions to the church, he left Cincinnati to labor for a time under the direction of the Colorado Missionary society, and then entered upon the ministry for the church at Oxford, Kan., where he hopes to do a great work.

(34) C. H. Mattox, located at Hiawatha, Kan., was born in Pendleton, Ky., and like many others who have gone into the ministry, came from the farm and taught school. Graduating from the Bible College at Lexington in 1890, he has had a successful ministry, being able to count about one thousand additions to the churches under his preaching. He recently moved to his present field, where the prospects are good for a forward movement, from Albany, Mo.

(35) John D. Zimmerman is in his first field at Horton. The church there has been organized about 21 years, and, after a checkered career, during the three years leadership of Brother Zimmerman the debt has finally been paid, and a considerable amount on improvements. During this period there have been more than 100 additions, mostly by confession, while the missionary offerings are the largest in the history of the church. The pastor has done some successful evangelistic work.

(36) J. M. Cockrill has been for six years pastor of the church at Richland, Kan., where there is a fine band of Christian workers, and where much good has been accomplished. He has withdrawn from other apppointments for the present in order to do evangelistic work, and has just been in a meeting at Wansever.

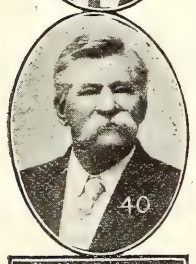
(37) W. H. Scrivener has been in the ministry sixteen years, and with the exception of one year spent at Belton, Mo., in Kansas. He has done a good deal of evangelistic work, and has served regularly churches at Marion, Newton, Erie, Girard and Beloit, in all of which he saw the work grow. At his present field of labor there is located the Girl's Reformatory, and Bro. Scrivener is giving them a course in Training for Service. His own school has just been in a rally.

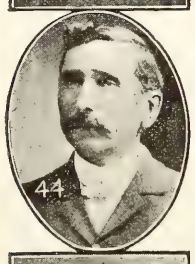
(38) C. C. Peck is just beginning the work at Plains, Kan. In early life he attended the Old Mount Bird Church in Kentucky. He is a graduate of the College of the Bible, and of Texas Christian University. He did successful work at Jamestown, Ohio, where two churches were united during his ministry, at Arkansas City, Kan., where he burned the old church mortgage, at Kingsley, Kan., and at Brady, Tex.

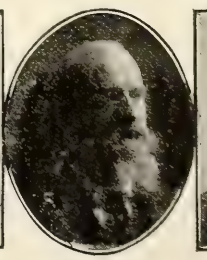
(39) John Williams, pastor at Junction City, Kan., was educated partly at Drake University and has labored in the gospel at Whiting and Missouri Valley, Ia., Collingwood, Canada, and Whalan, Mich. He went to Junction City, where our cause is weak and the field hard, over a year ago and hopes to see the church well established in the near future. The members are faithful and zealous, and have hopes to maintain the good record that was made during the past year, during which there were 31 accessions.

(40) D. M. Harris, born near Dayton, Ohio, in 1849, was left in the care of a widowed mother with four other children, all of whom were early brought to Christ. He entered Bethany College after teaching school for a time, graduating with the class of '74. He preached his first sermon at Latimbersville, Marion county, Ohio. Moving to Kansas in the fall of 1887, he has been identified with every progressive work of our church in this great state, having served as a member of the state board, district evangelist and president of the missionary board. He has occupied the pulpit of some of our strongest churches. He is in the prime of life and is one of the few ministers in our brotherhood who uses an automobile in his visiting. He has been a reader of "The Christian-Evangelist" ever since it has been under the editorial management of J. H. Garrison, and finds it a great help in his life's work. He is at present laboring in the rich and fertile fields of Oneida. The church has had many vicissitudes, but under the care of a consecrated membership it has become a great light in that part of the state. Brother Harris has a son in Los Angeles, who is a rising young preacher, and he is strongly tempted himself to try the orange groves of that sunlit state.

(41) H. R. Murphy entered the ministry from the membership of the First Christian Church of St. Louis, in 1903, working at Holden, Mo., until January, 1905, when he accepted a call to Kansas to minister to the churches at Soldier and Havensville. After two years both these churches were able to employ a minister for full time, so Brother Murphy accepted a call to the church at Clay Center, where the membership was more than doubled before he left to take his present charge last July at Effingham. The call came to him on the strength of his good work. This church is getting into line for all good things.







(42) W. M. Bobbitt went to Kansas in 1871, settling on a farm not far from Fredonia. He did a good deal of evangelistic work and was located at one or two points for short periods, until 1896 he moved to Emporia and is now preaching half time at Reid, and fourth time at Toronto and Big Sandy. In ten months he has had 58 additions—41 of them by confession and baptism, which shows that although approaching his seventieth year, he is still a good servant of the Master.

(43) Albert Nichols is located at Winfield, Kan., where the church worshiped for eleven years in a small wooden building. A brick building subsequently erected was destroyed by fire in 1895, the walls partially standing. It was immediately repaired, but the work has grown so much since Brother Nichols has been there that plans will be formulated for a new building. There were 159 names on the church roll in 1903, but since that time 429 have been received into the fellowship, leaving a present membership of 458. During these five years nearly $12,000 has been raised in all departments of the church. Brother Nichols was born in Kentucky and is a product of Drake University. He enters his sixth year more useful to the local church than at any other time. His influence is extending among all the religious bodies.

(44) W. W. Blanchard had for his grandmother Martha Lee, a descendant of Whitehorse Harry Lee. He is related to the Harlan family. In early life he taught a country school in Kansas, and later entered Oskaloosa College. Taking to the teaching work again, he completed a three years' normal course at Fairfield College and has since labored in Kansas, doing three years of service at Stockton, where 81 were received into the fellowship. He has served the Courtland Church one year.

(45) B. A. Channer has been actively engaged in the ministry since 1900. He is a graduate of the College of the Bible, in Northwestern University and of the Cedarvale Seminary. He served the church at Caldwell, Kan., for three years, going to Jewel, where he is now in the last half of his fifth year of service. During that period a debt of $600 has been paid off, and a handsome parsonage built. The work is now in a thriving condition, and George E. Lyon is soon to lead them in a protracted meeting. Bro. Channer has been president of the Seventh District for five years.

(46) T. S. Lunbeck was for two years pastor of the Highland Church of Christ, Kansas, having come there from Michigan. In that period there were 21 additions to the congregation and five others baptized who joined churches nearer to their homes. Since last January he has been pastor of the church at Delavan, but would like to take half time work after January 1, 1909, with two churches easily accessible, one to the other.

(47) Charles W. Yard, pastor at Tyro, Kan., began preaching at Oskaloosa, Ia., in 1871, under the instruction of B. W. Johnson, to whom he has ever felt greatly indebted. After marriage he located on a claim in Butler county, Kansas, preaching in a private house. The next year in the new schoolhouse, a church was constituted, and for seven or eight years Brother Yard ministered without remuneration, and preached in the region round about. His first stated salary was at the rate of $200 per year at four points. In 1882 he left the farm, locating at Douglas, and for twenty-six years now has been continuously in the work in Eastern Kansas. Only one month in a period of fifteen years was he without a pastorate. He has done some evangelistic work, organized four churches, and received about one thousand people into the church.

(48) I. A. Wilson is nearing the close of his fifth year at Valley Falls, Kan. It was seventeen years ago, at Bonner Springs, that he obeyed the gospel, and three years later decided to enter the ministry. Since that time he has worked constantly in the First District of Kansas, save as he has been called elsewhere to hold evangelistic meetings. He has had financial inducements to leave his present work, which he took when it was practically disorganized. Today it is the foremost among the five Protestant churches of the town, and we have the leading Bible school. Brother Wilson has had a constant struggle with adversity. In early manhood he became totally blind, through sickness, but this does not overcome his resolution to live a life of usefulness. Completing the course in both the Ohio and Kansas State Schools for the blind, after graduation from the Fulton and True Blood School of Oratory, he became widely known as a reader and lecturer. He feels his life really began with his ordination to the ministry. He has tried to be content to labor in the more needy and difficult fields, and his strongest point in evangelistic work is the strengthening and raising of the spiritual conditions. His wife is his constant companion, and in evangelistic work is his personal helper, and to her he attributes much of his success.

(49) J. M. Plummer, an Iowa boy, was educated to be a Methodist preacher, but uniting with the church of Christ he went to Oklahoma in the opening days, organizing a number of churches there. In 1906 he became pastor at Howard, Kan., and was later at Elk City, where he still lives, though now serving churches at Lafontaine and Havana.

(50) Z. S. Hastings is one of the pioneer preachers of Kansas. There was but one Christian Church building in the state when he went there in 1867. Born in Indiana, he had a long educational career. At Hiram he sat under Burnett, Milligan, Errett and Hinsdale. He was two years a member of the Kansas legislature, and has preached 47 years. He has married nearly 400 couples, and preached about the same number of funerals. He was married to Miss Rosetta Butler in 1870, and is now at Effingham on the superannuated list.

(51) O. L. Sumner commenced preaching about 1870, but not actively until nine or ten years later, when he evangelized in Central Kansas. He organized the church and built the house at Pleasanton, following with pastorates at Iola, Rogers, Ark., and Chillicothe, Mo.—later engaged in evangelistic work. He returned to Kansas last January taking charge at Grenola, and in September at Elk City. He is still able to conduct a good evangelistic meeting for a lengthy period, but can not do five days hard work at the carpenter's trade as he did from 1879 to 1889, and then drive five to twenty-five miles to preach Saturday night and Sunday, and begin his carpentering on Monday.

(52) Oliver Cook has lived in Kansas since he was nine years old. From the farm he went to Garfield University and afterwards to Kansas and Kentucky Universities. His preaching developed from Sunday-school work in a country schoolhouse, where he made talks to the people. His regular work has all been in Kansas. He has been a pastor except for two years in evangelistic work under the State Board. He has specialized in Sunday-school work. He is in his fourth year at Columbus.

"Kansas for Christ."

Descriptive of Front Page Group.

(1) O. L. Cook, who recently took charge of the work at Hutchinson, Kan., is an honor graduate of Oberlin College. He taught school for a year in Abilene, and was then county evangelist of Dickerson county, and later state evangelist. Following this he had successful pastorates at Valley Falls and Holton. After this he served as state evangelist both for Kansas and Ohio. He has been connected with the building of over twenty churches, and has organized many new congregations. The church to which he now ministers is one of the best in the state, having a membership of nearly 750. It is in the process of erecting a new building. Some of our well known preachers have ministered to it in the past, among them Dean Everest, D. Y. Donaldson and Elmer Ward Cole, the last minister.

(2) Christian Church, Leavenworth.

(3) Christian Church, Smith Center.

(4) Wallace C. Payne holds the Bible chair at the Kansas University, under the direction of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. He is well known to the brotherhood. The new building is 112x50 feet, and is called Myers Hall. Last year the university enrolled over two thousand students, and there were 250 in our classes. Four young men are in preparation for the ministry. The outlook for the present year is unusually favorable.

(5) W. T. McLain is a Kansan by birth and was ordained in the Bonner Springs Church. He has been successful in evangelistic work, has served as president of the State Ministerial Institute, is now a member of the state board, and left every church where he has been better than when he found it. During his pastorate at Manhattan, where he is now in his third year, there have been 142 additions. This church was organized in 1867. For it Knowles Shaw held three meetings. D. R. Lucas and O. L. Cook also evangelized with it. It has had as its leaders some of the strongest preachers of the past. The present membership is about 225. The problem for some years has been a new building. Manhattan has the largest agricultural college in the world, with an enrollment of over two thousand. The basement story of the design shown in our illustration is about completed. The total cost of the building will be about $18,000. This congregation is united and happy. H. E. Wilhite will hold for them a meeting in January.

(6) F. E. Blanchard received his earliest religious impressions at the Big Cedar Church in Van Buren Co., Iowa. In early manhood he followed the profession of teaching, and farming during the summer months; but the call of the ministry took him to Drake University to better fit himself for that work. He preached at Lacona, Swan, Carlysle, and New Virginia, establishing the work at the last place, and erected a building. Subsequent pastorates were at Barnard, Pickering, Palestine and Salem, Mo., after which he went to Wyoming and built up the cause at Sheridan, erecting a $5,000 building. For three years he has been at Smith Center, where there have been 208 additions during his ministry, including 49 at a country point, but not including meetings he has held at points outside his own field. He has had excellent success in evangelistic work. He is president of the Ministerial Institute which meets at Manhattan next April, and is one of the pastors chosen by Beiderwolf to assist in the forward movement. The present membership of his congregation is about 200 and there is a Bible school attendance of over 140. The church is missionary. Originally it met in a hall, and for ten years in the courthouse. The call is now for a better and larger building than the frame structure that has been used since 1897.

(7) Christian Church, Larned.

(8) E. W. Allen is in his third year with the Central Church at Wichita, Kan. There is a membership of one thousand, making this the largest and strongest church in the state. Charles R. Scoville has just been in a meeting there, which will doubtless add materially to the membership. Dr. L. F. Jaccard, of Bolenge, Africa, is the living link missionary, and this church leads the others of the state in benevolences. In the good old days of Garfield University it was supplied with such pastors and preachers as A. I. Hobbs, President Everest, John Atwater and W. B. Hendrix. The handsome new building, begun under the ministry of A. E. Dubber, was dedicated three years ago during the pastorate of C. F. Stevens. Brother Allen held a seven-years' pastorate at Fort Wayne, Ind., and his trip to Palestine and postgraduate work at Chicago have fitted him for the best work of his life with this congregation.

(9) Christian Church, Tescot.

(10) C. L. Milton is minister of the church at Lawrence, the seat of the State University of Kansas. This congregation was organized just 25 years ago. In the last four years the membership has more than doubled, so that from fifth or sixth place, the congregation in point of numbers is now second. It is erecting a house of worship, which, with lot, will cost about $38,000, and the dedication is fixed for early in December. Financially the church has never been strong, and an appeal has been made for aid in building a representative house of worship where the 2,000 university students are located. At least 200 of them come from homes connected with the Christian Church. The method of support is entirely by free will offerings. Brother Milton was born in Anderson Co., Ky., studied at Eminence College and Kentucky Uni-

Our Budget

—Off for New Orleans.

—It must be a harmonious convention.

—We must have the spirit of union if we preach union.

—There may be differences of opinion, but we are brothers.

—The books have closed. Now we go forward to the greatest year in our history.

—For the first time since we have run a "Christian-Evangelist" Special, the Editor will not be aboard. For many years he and his wife have attended our national conventions, and their's will be the keenest disappointment that they can not be at New Orleans.

—We are glad to report that Brother Garrison is making progress, though it be slow and painful. On other pages his message is to be found. While he will not be able to do his full quota of work, perhaps, for some weeks, he has been able to write more for this issue of the paper and hopes to gradually get back into full harness again.

—"Kansas for Christ and Christ for Kansas" is the watchword of hundreds of beating hearts in that great western empire, as they survey the record of fifty years and look forward to the gathering of their hosts in the Jubilee convention at Topeka, October 22-28. This is to be held at the Auditorium.

—In honor of this event "The Christian-Evangelist" gives much space to Kansas work and workers this week. We are indebted to many correspondents, but especially to George E. Lyon and Myron E. Settle, who are at the head of the state mission and state Bible school work. These men are both thoroughly consecrated and keenly alive to the situation of to-day.

—It has been, of course, impossible for us to give anything like a complete sketch of the work in so great a state. We have tried, however, to make this issue of "The Christian-Evangelist" representative. Many workers are doing their share in the advancement of our cause in the state who receive no notice in this week's "Christian-Evangelist." This was simply due to limits of space. We are unable now to present the program, but can say that it is a good one. It should be noticed that Kansas is putting in its plea for the national convention in 1910.

—Allen Wilson has just begun a meeting in Sheridan, Wyoming.

—A. M. Growden has accepted the work, we understand, at El Paso, Ill.

—K. F. Nance has taken the pastoral care of the North Street Christian church at Halifax, Nova Scotia.

—W. F. Turner and his Joplin church began a meeting last Lord's day with Evangelists Harlow-Kuhn-Hite.

—L. McCartney, who has been superintendent of the Teacher Training Association in Kentucky, is retiring from that position.

—E. J. Willis, who has been at Carlisle, Ky., nearly four years, has accepted a call to Kirksville, Mo., and begins work there October 11.

—William J. Lockhart goes to Beaumont, Texas, from New Orleans, and follows this meeting with one at Berkeley, Cal., assisting I. N. McCash.

—The Kentucky Sunday-School Association now reports thirteen classes, with 240 students enrolled, composed strictly of members of the Christian church.

—J. H. McQueary, of Lord's Cove, New Brunswick, Canada, has closed his work with that congregation, and intends to make a visit to the Philippine Islands.

—The sermon preached by J. H. Moon at Taylorstown, Pa., on September 27, was reproduced in the "Washington Record" on the following morning, and received favorable comment.

—H. T. Burgess has closed his first year's work at Texas, Ill. There were several hundred dollars raised above current expenses for missions, repairs, and every offering was more than trebled.

—J. Y. B. Wood, of St. Louis, was in Des Moines, Iowa, on Lord's day, singing in the morning service and giving a chalk talk, "Intemperance," at the Capitol Hill Church, where H. E. VanHorn ministers.

—Rufus A. Finnell is happy in his new field at Wheeling, W. Va., though he much disliked breaking the old ties at El Paso, Ill. He is located with the Island Church, and nothing but encouragement comes to him on every hand.

—A. M. Harral is back at his work at San Marcos, Texas. The church extension apportionment has been met, and the opening of the college increases the attendance. The Bible school is growing and every department of the work is in a healthful condition.

—Thomas Penn Ullom, who has been associated with Brother Scoville in his work, has planned to enter Yale University in order to further prepare himself for preaching the gospel. Brother Ullom writes: "I read your most excellent paper with pleasure and profit."

—T. S. Handsaker has closed his second pastorate at Corvallis, Ore., and has entered upon evangelistic work, being now engaged in the first meeting at Heppner, Ore. Since April 1, 1906, he had 169 additions to the membership at Corvallis—59 by confession and baptism. He will be assisted in the work by his wife, and their address will be 407 North Third street, Walla Walla, Wash.

—There never has been so favorable an attendance at Virginia Christian College as the present session. The new dormitory is going up, and the contract for the new college has just been let. M. M. Davis is expecting to visit the college in October, with a possible view of undertaking Bible work. P. B. Hall began work in September. Two students made the good confession on the first Lord's day of the session.

—Walter C. Gibbs is back from a four months' stay in Europe, and found the work at Lawrenceburg, Ky., where his place was filled by G. W. Campbell, now of Yale, in good condition. A surprise greeted him when he entered the parsonage, for the members of the congregation had been there leaving tokens of their appreciation and good will. Mrs. S. M. Lillard, one of the most faithful of the members, has presented the church with eight dozen new hymnals.

—Joseph C. Todd, whose acceptance of a call to Bloomington, Ind., we briefly recorded last week, was formerly of Marshall, Mo., but for several years has been preaching near New York City, while attending Union Seminary and Columbia University. Many of his friends will remember that he was recently bereaved of his father and sister in that terrible steamship accident on the Pacific coast. Brother Todd now has just the kind of a location he wishes, in a college town.

—J. J. Haley, who has been spending some time at Acampo, Cal., since relinquishing the work at Richmond, Va., will preach for the church at Eustis, Fla., during the winter. As many of our readers know, this is one of the most delightful places in that southern peninsula, and in the later years of his life was the home of W. K. Pendleton. The climate is said to be unexcelled, and many readers of "The Christian-Evangelist" who are thinking of a winter home where they will get preaching to make them think, will consider Eustis.

—F. E. Billington, who has done good work for Oregon in the capacity of corresponding secretary, but whose health compelled him to settle in a pastorate at Silverton, takes the opportunity to say, in asking for a change of address of "The Christian-Evangelist," how much he enjoys it. He makes special mention of its value to those unable to attend our great conventions and Congresses, by reason of the very adequate reports of these we give in our columns.

—L. S. Cupp closed the third year of his pastorate at Hyde Park, Kansas City, on September 30. During that period there have been 350 additions, and 70 last year. In addition to this, Brother Cupp had 106 additions in special meetings last year. The money raised for local church work in 1906-07 was $7,565, besides $410 for missionary contributions. This does not include money raised by the school, Endeavor and the C. W. B. M. The church paid off its debt last year. It is just about to begin a good revival with Evangelists Hamilton and Thomas.

—C. A. Watkins, who has resigned his work at East Palestine, Ohio, is ready to consider a call, but prefers to hold a few meetings before locating. He has preached in several Southern states while associated with another brotherhood, and finds the climate there more congenial to his health. He has had nineteen years of experience as a minister, and can furnish the best of references. He has been county superintendent of the Township Bible School Association of East Palestine. Some church in the South in need of a minister should correspond with him.

—Arthur N. Lindsay, who has had several calls to leave Clinton, Mo., has decided to remain there, though he does it at considerable financial sacrifice. The church clerk, on behalf of the congregation, expresses appreciation of this decision and commends highly Brother Lindsay, whose peculiar strength, he says, lies in his ability to reach the men in a community who, on account of many conditions, are farthest removed from Christ. The church at Clinton has been aroused to new activities, every department having taken on vigorous life with the main purpose of saving souls.

—Walter Scott Priest has begun his sixth year with the Broad Street Christian Church at Columbus, Ohio. In the five years of his service 36 have been baptized and 408 received by letter. The last year has been the best of all. The Bible school has grown from an enrollment of 150 to 438. The present average attendance is 273. The membership of the church is now between 800 and 900, and it recently erected a handsome new building. In these five years, also, two new congregations have been organized. The church property has been improved and the Cause has been greatly strengthened in the vicinity of Columbus.

J. H. GARRISON, President
Correspondence invited. Address New Hope Treatment Co., 2712 Pine St., St. Louis, Mo.

—Weston, Mo., has a training class of 42 members.

—M. M. Ammunson has entered upon his studies at Yale College.

—Edward Owers preached for the East St. Louis church last Lord's day.

—The Bible schools at Windsor and Eldon, Mo., are in a contest, with the former in a slight lead.

—H. W. Hunter, state superintendent of Christian Endeavor for Missouri, has moved from Mt. Washington, to Paris, Mo.

—Herbert Yeuell will assist M. D. Clubb in a meeting at Pomona, Cal., October 25. This is one of our best Coast churches.

—W. R. Motley has entered upon the pastorate at Hampton, Va. Brother Motley did a good work prior to this at Newport News.

—President T. E. Cramblett, of Bethany College, is to dedicate the new $12,000 church at Bridgeport, Conn., October 18.

—G. H. Crawford's Bible school at Columbus, Ohio, has celebrated its promotion day in the Bible school, graduating a class of twenty-two.

—A paragraph in a recent issue indicated that one of our small colleges was considering the election of a principal. This matter has been deferred for a year.

—David H. Shields will remain for the present at Salina, Kan., declining the latest invitation to leave that work, which came from a prominent church in Illinois.

—W. A. Morrison, of Windsor, Mo., begins a meeting at Pleasant Green schoolhouse October 12. Brother Morrison represented the N. B. A. at St. Clair and Hickory county conventions.

—H. Maxwell Hall has accepted the position as state Bible school evangelist for Nebraska. He will put his whole force into it. He has had experience as city evangelist, and has recently engaged in newspaper work.

—Preston Bell Hall has relinquished his work at Kinston, N. C., to become associated with Virginia Christian College. The Kinston church desires a good preacher to begin on $1,200 a year. Address L. O. Mosley, clerk.

—O. P. Spiegel, who has been busy in evangelistic work in California, having been engaged by the Broadway Church at Los Angeles, is now making dates for general field work radiating from his permanent home in Birmingham, Ala. His address is Box 66.

—Bishop M. Hopkins, who for some time has been engaged in evangelistic work, located at Lyons, Kan., has accepted a call to Erick, Okla., and is now in the field. Brother Hopkins has held two successful pastorates prior to this—at Hope and Windom, Kan. At both places the work had gone down, but he revived it.

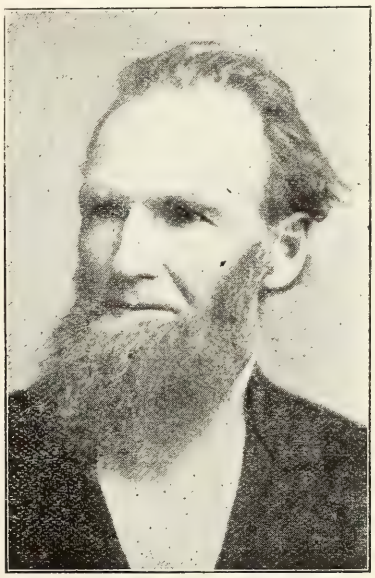
—William Garrison, of Pond Creek, Okla., writes that Brother Scoville, who is about to conclude a great meeting at Wichita, Kan., made a visit to Enid, which was a sort of a preliminary visit, and preached one night, and there were 50 additions, 12 of these confessions, and others who were disconnected with any church.

—John L. Brandt, assisted by his daughter, has begun a meeting with great promise at Guthrie, Okla. A correspondent writes that the Baptist minister urged his church to co-operate heartily, saying that it would not be long before the two bodies were one. We trust this prophet is not without honor in his own country.

—The Diamond Jubilee of the congregation at Lawrenceville, Ill., is to be celebrated October 23-25. A home-coming feature is to be combined with the jubilee. Among the speakers will be F. W. Burnham, William Oeschger, J. W. Kilborn and L. H. Stine. Entertainment will be provided gratis for all former members who will return.

—The Bible school at Old Orchard, Mo, has just won out in a contest with the school at Dover Place. The latter place had the largest attendance on any one Sunday, while Old Orchard had the largest collection. Increase in the school was as follows: Attendance, 9 per cent; offering, 420 per cent; school staying through services, 95 per cent. F. W. Pelsue is the superintendent and J. G. Engle the minister, and they are ready to give account of themselves to any other school.

—J. H. Bryan, the Bible school man of Missouri, has begun a month's campaign among the churches of Clay county, the county board paying his salary and expenses. In November Brother Bryan will make a similar canvass in Lincoln county; in May Shelby and historic Clark county speaks of wanting him for a month. Brother Hardin writes that other counties may take the hint, and if they want such a campaign let them write to him at once. He says: "If we can not make Missouri unanimous all at once, we propose to fight it out by counties."



Pardee Butler, an Apostle of Our Cause in Kansas.

—We regret that W. W. Phares was compelled recently to resign his work as corresponding secretary of Mississippi and pastor at Jackson. He has had a hard time with his illness, being unable to work since May. He hopes, however, to be in a condition to leave for Seattle, Wash., where he will rest a while before taking up other work. Brother Phares has seen the Mississippi state work grow in five years from an income of about $1,800 to one this year of about $5,000. Until five years ago we never had but one man employed in the state work, while this year there have been five. In nine months at the First Church there were 125 additions, most of them at regular services, and this was indicative of the work in general.

—F. D. Power, who has recently passed his thirty-third anniversary of his pastorate at Washington, D. C., has received a letter from the chief commissioner, or mayor of Washington, on the occasion, in which he says: "I have been hoping to see you to congratulate you upon your recent anniversary, but as the time is passing I write to say that I feel that no one has done more for the higher interests of the national capital in the present generation than yourself, and to express the wish that you may long continue in the pulpit which you have so nobly filled." This is a remarkable testimony, coming from the source it does, but we feel sure that it is abundantly justified by the facts. Of course, we join most heartily in our felicitations to our esteemed staff contributor on the splendid record he has made in our nation's capital. Long may he be spared to carry on the good work!

—The little paper of the 25th Street Christian Church, Baltimore, Md., has the following pertinent note from its pastor, L. B. Haskins:

"Now with the 'Men's League,' the 'Ladies' Aid' and the 'Christian Workers,' there is no excuse for an idle hand among the entire membership. It is the earnest desire of your minister to see every member of the congregation actually at work in one or more of these agencies. I do not feel like talking anything but work, and if any one wants to work, he or she can certainly find it. We want to be as busy as bees, with the sting extracted. 'If any will not work, neither let him eat.' We just simply want to impress everyone that the 25th St. Christian Church is no place for 'parasites.' We do not want to harbor drones. This half-way doing is not doing at all. A 'lukewarm' citizen has no footing in Christ's estimate."

—Mrs. Henrietta Taylor Carpenter, of Chicago, has announced the marriage of her daughter, Mary Adelaide, to William Bayard Craig, of Denver, Colo., which occurred on September 10. This announcement is one of unusual interest, not only to every member and friend of the Central Christian Church at Denver, but to a very large circle of friends all over the country. Brother Craig and his work are so well known that we need make no comment on this. Mrs. Craig is one of the noblest of women. She is a niece of General Drake, for whom the University was named, and a daughter of Dr. Carpenter, its first chancellor. C. M. Morris writes as follows in the weekly bulletin of the Denver church: "It seems fitting that the worthy daughter of a heroic father should be united to the second chancellor, the one that took the dreams of the pioneer educator and moulded them into a reality. Carpenter and Craig are names that are graven into every stone and brick in the vast group of buildings. Chancellor Carpenter, Chancellor Craig—the man who gathered the material and the one who skillfully fashioned. Perhaps but little less in importance and influence to this great institution of learning is the name of Mary Adelaide Carpenter—not a force that was much to the surface, but rather a quiet nature averse to notoriety, but filling, next to the president, probably the most important place in the life of the school. Every one of the thousands of women that have entered the doors of the university has felt the uplifting influence of the 'Dean of Women,' a position which she has occupied for nine years. For the past twelve years, as librarian, she has been in close touch with all departments of the school. The new Carnegie library, recently completed, was under her control, and the office furnishings entirely of her selection. She leaves this work to come to us as the wife of our pastor, and as such we bespeak for her a cordial welcome."

Centennial aim: Not less than my income's tithe to God.

"The Christian Use of the Tithing System" is enabling all who adopt it, according to their unanimous testimony, to: First, give more than they ever thought possible before; second, live better on nine-tenths than on ten-tenths; third, know the truth of the words of the Lord Jesus when he said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Let those who are systematically giving a tenth or more send in their names and addresses and they will receive the Centennial Tither's Certificate. This involves no change in the way of distributing your tenth. Let those who are not tithing, or wish to enlist others, write for free literature.

VACATION IMPRESSIONS OF AN EVANGELIST

We left the delightful people and closed at Prince Edward Island, Canada, as soon as our meeting closed at Charlottetown, and hurried home to be with mother and Lima friends. Brother Bilby and wife, who had charge of the music, stopped at Lubec, Me., for their vacation.

I have taken my vacation as usual in preaching, preaching, preaching. Ever since I entered the evangelistic field many of the churches of this district have work waiting for me on my "summer returns." This welcome, based on twelve years' of acquaintance, is a precious heritage. The money side of it is small, but the "bond of affection" is more precious than gold and silver.

For some of these churches I have held as many as nine protracted meetings. Where they happen to be without a settled minister, we keep at it until one is secured. If I were financially able I would give all my time to this kind of work.

My early ministry and this vacation work has brought me in close touch with the problems of the country church. Several things are virtually wrong with the pulpit supply of the country church; one is the insane demand for the same prerequisites in a man who gets $15 per week as is demanded of a man who earns $35 to $50 per week. Another is the jealousy which so often arises between congregations who must co-operate in order to have regular preaching at all. Another is the self-delegated popery of some elders, cliques in the church, morbid appetite for constant changes of preachers; and the preacher habit of making such churches a mere "practice ground," or "fill in place," until something better offers itself.

What is needed is a wise evangelist in every district, one who can supply and look after matters while the state secretary and pulpit supply committee are finding the kind of a man his recommendations suggest.

The state secretary is too busy a man to do the detail work required and our college presidents are too far away from the scene of action to always know just what is needed. A district evangelist in this way can do the work of a presiding elder, minus the ecclesiastical authority.

The churches are suffering from the lack of immediate relief. An ounce of wise action is worth more than tons of theorizing. We should have hundreds of men at work. Here is a chance for some of our wealthy brethren to immortalize their names by supporting a "coterie" of men competent to do this work.

In my early ministry I spent four years as settled minister with country churches in this vicinity, before taking up the work in Lima. During that time I received many calls at $1,000 salary, but stayed by the "stuff," getting $13 per Sunday. In that four years I saw three handsome church buildings completed and hundreds confess Christ. When I took the work at Grover Hill, Ohio, I had another call better than $1,000 a year. I wrote my spiritual advisor, J. V. Updike, "What shall I do?" He immediately replied, "Accept Grover Hill, and stay there for years." I did so. It stung my pride a little, for I had spent four years in one of the best colleges of Ohio. When the call came to take up the work in Lima, I realized the village church had made me efficient and sufficient for it. Without that training and experience, I never could have done the work required in the Lima venture. We built a handsome new brick church there, and in one meeting had 208 additions.

We have had a delightful fellowship with Homer Carpenter of the Wayne St. Church and Verl Wilson, one of my successors at the South Side Church. The Wayne Street people are preparing to build one of the best church edifices in the city. Brother Wilson is meeting wth splendid success in his work on the south side. Both are strong, aggressive men, and the cause in Lima never had a more hopeful outlook.

These vacation trips home have shown me there is more gratitude in the average congregation for the ex-minister than they get credit for. I am away from home most of the year in my evangelistic work, and when I return on vacation trips I find their hospitality unchanging and unstinted. I wouldn't exchange this deathless affection of my brethren and friends for all the sickly sentimentality of a "rush in and rush out" gallery applause.

There is also a sadness in this last vacation visit. The Lima cemetery holds the form of my dear father in the gospel, J. V. Updike. How precious his memory! He was the young preacher's friend. He used to kiss me as the son of his own flesh and blood. I hold in memory a package of his precious love letters, such as Paul wrote to Timothy. Yet I am only one of an army of young men who remember him in the same spirit. Geo. Sims, his son-in-law, who is doing such splendid work at Findlay, O., said to me, "Lima must always be a sacred spot to me, for its cemetery holds the 'dearest of the dear' to me."

I am just writing my singer, Brother Bilby, that I feel stronger for the work of the coming year because of this sacred fellowship. They have given me a stronger hold on God and a deeper love for his cause.

Columbia (Mo.) Items.

The enrollment of the University of Missouri for the present session exceeds that of last year for the same date by a little more than three hundred. This large excess is mainly due to the fact that Columbia and Boone County went "dry" at the recent local option election. The present outlook is very encouraging for the future of this great institution.

Christian College, for the education of young women, also opened very auspiciously. The attendance is about an average of what it has been for the last five years, and these five years show a larger attendance than any other successive five years during the history of the college. This is especially gratifying in view of the fact that the regular expenses at this college are greater than at any other female college in the state, and also that the requirements for the A. B. degree now call for four years of college work after finishing at the high school, instead of two, as formerly. When this change in the curriculum was made, it was estimated that the attendance would be greatly cut down, but Mrs. W. T. Moore, the President, contended that she was not working for immediate results, but with a view to the future of the college. The slight decrease felt at first has now been changed to increase, and the standing of the college placed upon a firm scholastic basis. Christian College was never in a better condition, and the only drawback is the continued illness of the President, though she is making such improvement as indicates her speedy return to health. For some time she has been seriously affected by acute rheumatism, and while this confines her mainly to her room, she has been able all the while to direct the great responsibilities of the college.

The Missouri Bible College is also reported to have about its usual attendance, with the prospect of considerable increase when the session has fairly been launched. This college is seeking a further endowment, and some satisfactory progress is being made in securing this much-needed help.

One of the most encouraging things, from a religious point of view, at Columbia, is the work being done at the churches. All the churches here seem to be in a prosperous condition. This is especially true of the Christian church, where Madison A. Hart is pastor. He has been here only a little while, but has shown himself to be a workman that needeth not be ashamed. On October 4 H. O. Breeden begins a protracted meeting with this church, and it is hoped that the result will be a spiritual uplift for all the people of this growing city.

North Carolina.

Atlantic Christian College, at Wilson, N. C., opened with more pupils registered than at any previous time. A number of young men are preparing for the ministry. President J. C. Caldwell, besides his numerous duties, has been preaching for a while for the Wilson church. W. S. Bullard, who was minister at Wilson, has taken the work at Bluefield, W. Va. It is a live church.——L. L. Carpenter dedicated the new church at Wilmington, N. C., on Sunday, August 29. It is a well arranged house, will seat over 500, and is one of the best located churches in the city. Judge J. A. Erwin is the able minister, and also the architect of the building.——H. C. Bowen, of Cincinnati, O., has returned to his native state. He is at Belhaven, where he began with a meeting of 23 days. There were 17 added. He has since held a meeting at Columbia.—— P. B. Hall has left Kinston to become teacher at Virginia Christian College, at Lynchburg. He did a good work at Kinston.——State Secretary W. G. Walker held a short meeting at Reidsville. We have no church there. One was added. It is hoped he will be a preacher.——Our Bible school at Winston-Salem reports 170 enrolled the last year; 33 on cradle roll makes 203. Our school had five graduates from the teacher training course. We expect to organize a new class. My work will close here not later than January, and sooner if my successor is secured.—— C. C. Jones, of Newbern, has had 40 additions since coming to the state four months ago, ten of these at Bayboro.

CHRISTIAN UNION: A HISTORICAL STUDY.

By

J. H. Garrison.

I heartily wish this book could be generally circulated. It has not received the attention it deserves. If one of our wealthy men could be induced to order five thousand copies, or at least one thousand, and have these sent to the leading men and editors of the various religious denominations, both in this country and in England, I believe that no better investment for our cause could be made than this. Who will volunteer to purchase and distribute this great work on Christian Union? These copies could be published at the lowest possible price, and surely there is some one among us who would be willing to be responsible for at least a thousand copies, if not for five thousand, and the judicious distribution of these would probably do more good than any other way in which a reasonable amount of money could be expended.

W. T. MOORE.

As the retail price of the book is only one dollar, all of our own people who have not read the book should at least secure a copy to read and pass on to a religious neighbor.

THE NEW CONGRESS

Three great religious bodies will soon meet in fraternal conference to discuss some of the problems of the age. Foremost among these problems to be discussed is the question of Christian Union. Such an announcement is sufficient within itself to create interest among all Disciples. I refer to the joint congress to be held in the Hyde Park Baptist Church, 56th street and Lexington avenue, Chicago, Nov. 10, 11, 12, of the present year. This is to be a congress of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples. Before entering upon a statement of the character and purpose of this meeting a bit of history may be in point. The latter part of last winter some of the leading ministers of the Baptist Church in New York City discussed with some of our ministers of that city the subject of a joint congress between the Baptists and Disciples. I have not all the facts of this preliminary conference, though they would be interesting as matters of history. It seems that this preliminary conference was the initial movement of the forthcoming meeting which I am about to write. The writer's relation to the matter merely grew out of the fact that he was elected secretary of the congress of the Disciples at Bloomington last spring. J. P. Lichtenberger, of New York City, gave my name to the secretary of the Baptist congress, and asked him to write me about the arrangements. The Baptist have had an annual congress for the past 25 years, which meets in November. Dr. Theo. A. K. Gessler, of Landing, N. J., the secretary of the Baptist congress wrote and asked me to take up the matter of holding such a joint meeting with the executive committee of our congress. I found every member of the committee enthusiastic and in favor of the matter. After lengthy correspondence and one meeting of our committee, the details of the program and speakers were arranged. The program speaks for itself, and will be published shortly. It is the custom of the Baptists to hold their congresses in the East and in the fall of the year. The congresses of the Disciples have been held in the middle West and in the spring. These facts necessitated some compromise in the matter, the Baptists yielding to the Disciples in the matter of place, and the Disciples yielding to the Baptists in question of time, though this arrangement called for a second congress of Disciples within the year. 1908. The committee, however, felt that the interests were of such vital importance that such a matter of mere detail should not be allowed to stand in the way.

As will be seen from the program, each of these three religious bodies has a representative in the discussion of every topic. The purpose of the meeting is identical with that of similar congresses among the Disciples and Baptists, save that in this instance the discussion has a larger range, taking in representatives of the three religious bodies. The meeting will have no legislative function, but will simply serve the purpose of a free discussion of the topics under consideration. It will be akin to the conference of Southern Baptists and Disciples held in Baltimore some months ago. It is reasonable to expect that these three days of discussion will mark an epoch in the movement of sentiment favorable to a closer union of these three religious bodies. Such a meeting will serve to help each of us to see the other's point of view, which is indispensable to our helping each other and approaching grounds of agreement. We anticipate that the discussions will reveal a surprisingly large number of points of agreement. It goes without saying that one of the most delightful features of the occasion will be the forming of personal acquaintances between the ministers of these three churches. The spirit manifested by the Baptists through their secretary, Dr. Gessler, leads us to believe that the spirit prompting the movement on their part was none other than the desire of a closer touch with the Disciples and Free Baptists, and a fraternal discussion of our common problems. Personally, I can not look upon the movement with any other than the warmest endorsement, and with a high expectancy as to the results; not that I entertain such a fancy as that union of these bodies will be immediately effected. It is, indeed, doubtful if such an event is desirable until there is a closer acquaintance and a better understanding of each other. These latter are, indeed, the most desirable results to be expected, and the only normal ones. It is not my purpose in this article to call attention, however, to the advantages of such a meeting; they are too apparent to need any argument. It is rather my purpose simply to announce and call attention to it. With the meeting only five weeks distant the announcement is, indeed, somewhat late, but the plans were not begun until the middle of the summer, and there have been many interruptions. I am not fearful of the outcome of the meeting, but I am exceedingly anxious that every minister of the Disciples brotherhood, for whom it is at all possible, should attend this joint congress. The meeting should be thoroughly representative of all three religious bodies. I have the faith that in fifty years from now this meeting will be looked upon as one of the history making events in the progress of Christian union. I should like to suggest some very practical things in regard to the matter. First, would it not be desirable that ministers of the Disciples everywhere should call attention of Baptist and Free Baptist ministers to this meeting and freely discuss its advantages with them. This will help to create warm fraternal relations locally. Second, write an article for your local daily about the matter and insert the program. This will help to create sentiment. Third, the meeting coming so close after our national convention, many ministers may feel that they are not able to stand the expense. I am quite confident that there are a few churches in which the following suggestion would not be received unfavorably. I mean that ministers should make this joint congress a matter of comment in your service, enlighten your congregations about the movement, tell them of its advantages, and tell them that you believe that both you and they should know about it; that it is of God, and then ask your congregation to make possible this larger knowledge of the subject by helping you to bear the expense of a trip to Chicago. It is natural to expect that the Disciples of Christ, who are so soon to celebrate a hundred years of our movement for Christian union, will gladly welcome this opportunity for a fraternal discussion with the two great religious bodies with whom we have so many points of agreement. Let us have a thoroughly representative attendance. We anticipate that this joint congress will be more largely attended than has been any single congress in the history of our brotherhood.

Shame!

I am not a member of the Campbell Institute, nor have I ever read a copy of "The Scroll." I am simply one of the Lord's ministers, and I have been a constant reader of "The Christian-Evangelist" and the "Standard" for nearly a quarter of a century. The above is written that I may not be misunderstood. I am looking at a serious situation from a viewpoint that is partial only as it suggests the extension of our Savior's cause. I believe that both McGarvey and Willett are good men—that they both love the Lord and that the Lord loves them. But neither of these scholarly brethren have yet been lifted to the sunlit summits of infallibility. If there be a recording angel, I doubt not but that he has wept over both the Biblical Criticism page and the "Christian Century." But I imagine his tears over the mistakes of McGarvey and Willett have been as dewdrops compared with the rain that falls from his eyes as he reads the threats that have been made against our co-operative work. Let the critics—both high and low—stab each other to their heart's content; but woe unto him, whether conservative or liberal, who stabs at the throat of our missionary work.

No matter who the brethren selected to deliver addresses on our annual occasions, it is presumed that they will have sufficient good taste to refrain from riding their hobbies in our national circus. And if any should be so forgetful as to hold up the bone of contention, the unfortunate speech will receive its just reward and pass as a wail of wind. But their unwarrantable boycott on our missionary enterprises will cripple the Lord's work, in our hands, for a generation. The conservative and liberal handling of the Scriptures will continue after the youngest among us are gone, and it is childish for either side to resort to force. We be brethren. And, while it is our privilege to disagree over the questions that are being investigated by the scholarship of the world, no one has the right to lay violent hands upon the most precious thing to Christ or Christian—the evangelization of the world. This is something upon which the conservative and liberalist do not disagree, and why should it be made to suffer because we believe this man or that to be unsound? If every conservative in the brotherhood, or every liberalist, delivers an address at Pittsburg, I, for one, shall continue preaching the Gospel as I see it, and urging my people to contribute to the support of all our missionary organizations.

When reading this you may call me a "fogy," or, it may be, an "infidel"—no matter. You may say I'm crazy or on the fence, it matters not. I must raise my voice against this unholy threat that is rumbling through the land. Brethren, don't do wrong because you think others have gone wrong. Don't stab Christ by starting a boycott upon His business, simply because, from your viewpoint, others are misrepresenting him. Such a course is childish, it is unchristian, it's suicidal, it's a burning disgrace!

Sunday-schools and Missions.

Despite the tight times, the Sunday-schools made a gain of $504.04 in their support of home missions last year. The campaign for the Centennial year is now thoroughly organized and national and state secretaries are throwing wonderful energy into the preparation for the day. No less than a half dozen states have announced a determination to realize the Centennial motto, "Every School in Line for 1909." Sunday-school superintendents everywhere are requested to fall into line.

Church Extension Receipts.

Comparative statement for the last seven days of September as compared with last year:

CHURCHES.
For last year,	$14,377.22
For this year,	11,236.64
A falling off of	$3,140.58
INDIVIDUALS.
For last year,	$7,205.25
For this year	2,776.41
A falling off of	$4,318.41

It will be noticed that there has been a total falling off in receipts as compared with last year, of $7,459.42. This can be accounted for by a bequest amounting to $6,655, which was received last year.

During the last week of September there was a falling off of only 19 in the number of contributing churches, as compared with last year. Nearly every church that sent an offering made one of the following excuses: Drought, short crops, hard times, September's heat, people not yet returned from their vacations, heavy rains and the presidential election.

It is hoped that the churches will continue to do their best with offerings in October. Many of our very best churches have not responded at all. They will certainly be heard from in October, because they are regular contributors.

The day that this is written, September 30, our books have closed, showing a falling behind in the total of our receipts from new sources of $5,016.11. This is not so bad for hard times. In the number of loans closed and the amount paid in closing these loans, we had the biggest year in our history. 87 loans were closed aggregating $170,325.

Remit to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 500 Water Works Building, Kansas City, Mo.

The Foreign Society.

The missionary year of the Foreign Society closed September 30.

It is well known that during practically the whole year the work was somewhat hindered by the financial depression and political agitation. However, the year has been one full of richest blessings, both at home and on the mission fields.

The churches, as churches, have taken no backward step. 3,457, a gain of 42, responded to the call. They gave $128,347, an increase over the previous year of $4,879. All will be glad also to learn of 24 new Living Link churches, the largest number in any one year in our history. The Christian Endeavor Societies, bequests, miscellaneous receipts, all show an increase. The number of personal offerings was almost doubled. There was a loss, however, in the amount received from this source. We regret to report a small loss in both the number and amount from the Sunday-schools.

The total number of offerings of all classes reached the splendid figures of 9,898, showing a gain in the number of offerings of 748, which is an unusual gain. This increase in different gifts indicates clearly an ever-increasing interest.

A heavy loss was sustained in annuity gifts. Only $7,700 was received from this source, a loss of $28,550. The financial depression made it impossible for a number of friends, who expected to give in this way, to command their funds. Last year we had some exceptionally large gifts on this plan.

The total receipts of the year amounted to $274,324, a loss of $31,210.

Notwithstanding this loss it is a pleasure to report the unprecedented month of September, when the regular receipts reached the splendid sum of $68,606, a gain of $5,450. It is a pleasure also to report this, the greatest month in the history of the Foreign Society.

This statement would not be complete without mentioning the important fact that twenty-four new missionaries were sent to the field, and that this is by far the largest number ever before sent out in any one year.

The faithfulness of the missionaries, the new stations opened, the great increase in the attendance in the schools and colleges, the expansion of the native evangelistic staff, the increased enlargement and efficiency of the medical work, together with the growing interest at home, all combine to make this the greatest all-around record our people have ever made in the regions beyond.

Acorns from Oak Park.

The majority of the members of the Oak Park Christian Church spent their vacation in doing church work, and the happy and vigorous enthusiasm which pervades the whole church is the fruitage. Though young, we are making our presence felt. At the last Endeavor convention of this district our society carried off the banner and was awarded a splendid mission library for having present the largest representation. On the first Sunday in this month the church made its initial offering to Church Extension and raised its apportionment with 25 per cent additional. Last Lord's day we opened up the fall campaign with a Bible school rally and had 158 present. What do you think of that for a new school in a community of strangers in Chicago?

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Cotter, Sept. 28.—Closing here after ten days of rainy weather, with about 30 added. Secured the best building lots in town for a church, and have raised the money to insure us the nicest church building in the place. Work on the building will begin at once.—D. F. Stanley, evangelist, Little Rock, Ark.

Hope, Sept. 24.—The writer went up to Prescott last Lord's day to assist in the ordination of deacons and elders. They had just closed a four-weeks' meeting, led by Percy G. Cross, resulting in additions every night. He left this church with a membership of 201 in a town of two thousand inhabitants. The church had been struggling along for the past year with Robert A. Highsmith, who had brought the membership up to 84, and gotten everything in good shape for a big meeting. Plans are now in the hands of a builder, money partly raised to build an up-to-date church, and a feeling of good will is manifested towards us on the part of the citizens of Prescott, which will insure us a permanent place in this beautiful city.—J. A. Sullivan.

Colorado.

Fort Morgan, Sept. 28.—Six additions since our last report—four by letter and two by obedience. Our Sunday-school rally yesterday was a success.—Z. Moore.

Holly, Sept. 25.—Over a week ago we came to Holly and began our meeting in a storeroom. An organization was effected with 38 members, five of whom are to be baptized. The meeting continues.—J. R. Robertson, evangelist; John F. Cox, singing evangelist.

Florida.

Ocala, Aug. 17.—For about three years the Ocala Church has been repeatedly asking me to return to this field. I have yielded to their request. Since coming here two have been added, the Sunday-school is growing, and the sisters are planning to start an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M.—W. H. Coleman.

Illinois.

Ingraham, Sept. 28.—Evangelist C. M. Smithson, assisted by Beatrice Kunce, of Red Key, Ind., song leader, closed a 24-days' meeting yesterday with 62 additions. This is the greatest revival in the history of the church for years. We recommend Brother Smithson to any congregation needing an evangelist. Address him at St. Elmo, Ill.—E. S. Thompson, minister.

Flanagan, Sept. 30.—John R. Golden, evangelist, and Charles E. McVay, of Benkelman, Neb., singer, closed a successful meeting. There were 11 additions—one by letter and 10 by baptism. Brother McVay had two large choruses. His song recital at the close of the meeting was well received. He is now singing at Fremont, Neb.

Alvin, Sept. 28.—Wife and I are beginning a promising meeting at this place. Already we are having very large audiences, and the interest is widening at every service. There have been 13 added within the last three days—nearly all adults, by confession and baptism. The church here will want a pastor at the close of the meeting. Prior to coming here we held a short but successful meeting for Frank W. Allen at Clifton Hill, Mo., and return for another with him at Bellflower, Mo., as soon as we are through here. Our permanent address is West Salem, Ill.—C. O. McFarland and wife.

Versailles, Sept. 24.—Just closed a meeting at Tulip, Mo., with 29 added—16 baptisms, two reclaimed and 11 by statement and letter. Will commence with home forces October 4.—B. S. Edwards.

Monmouth, Oct. 3.—William Thompson in second meeting this year with us; 151 to date. Send for Thompson for revival.—Delaney E. Hughes.

Indiana.

Auburn, Sept. 28.—Two added by letter at our services last night.—C. H. Earenfight.

Indianapolis, Sept. 28.—We had four additions at Williams Creek yesterday—two confessions and two by letter.—Charles O. Lee, minister.

Alexandria, Sept. 28.—We closed a two-weeks' meeting yesterday conducted by home forces, with 33 additions—all but nine by confession. This makes 95 added during our fourteen months of service here. The church and Sunday-school are entering vigorously into the work outlined for fall and winter, and we are hopeful of large results.—William Grant Smith.

Ladoga, Sept. 25.—Closed a very successful meeting at Calhoun, Ky., with 72 additions. All, save a very few, were adults, and by primary obedience. One night among a number of men who came forward was a banker, a lawyer, a physician, a merchant and a farmer. We begin at Tuscola, Ill., next Sunday.—W. T. Brooks.

Kansas.

Clearwater, Sept. 28.—Began a meeting here yesterday with fine prospects. Excellent interest and attention. George Carter is minister.—Ingle and Zimmerman, evangelists.

Manhattan, Sept. 28.—Eight added since last report.—W. T. McLain.

Holton, Sept. 28.—Begin at Ashland, Kan., Thursday evening. My permanent address in the future will be Holden, Kan. On account of a misunderstanding in date I have a place for a good meeting in November. I am expecting a good meeting with Brother Haughey. Correspondents address me at Ashland, Kan.—C. C. Atwood.

Erie, Sept. 21.—Mr. Koepsel is in a meeting at Sprague, Mo.—11 additions to date. He will begin at Hume, Mo., the first Sunday in October.—Mrs. Addie B. Koepsel.

Kentucky.

Louisville, Sept. 25.—W. S. Gamboe, Third Church, Louisville, was recently called to Watseka, his former charge, to conduct the funeral service of John Franklin, one of the oldest and most highly respected officers of the congregation. While there he also baptized one convert. Ellmore Sinclair is their present efficient minister.

Latonia, Sept. 28.—Two added here last Sunday.—H. C. Runyan.

Barbourville, Sept. 29.—I am holding a meeting for the combined churches of Artemus and Barbourville, assisted by Mabel Myers, of the Louisville Conservatory of Music. We are having great crowds.—T. M. Myers.

Lawrenceburg, Sept. 28.—Our meeting began yesterday with good interest and two added. L. W. Ogle, of Paris, Texas, is our song leader and with a chorus of forty has created good interest.—Walter C. Gibbs.

Missouri.

Mexico, Sept. 30.—Two confessions and baptisms since last report—one at Fortuna and one at Red Top, Boon county. I begin a meeting at Wheeling first Lord's day in October.—W. H. Hook.

St. Louis, Oct. 5.—Our new pastor, Earle Wilfley, is getting hold of the work at the First Church admirably. Nine additions yesterday, five by confession.—C.

Independence, Sept. 28.—I had one addition by baptism at Union Chapel; also one at Sheffield last Lord's day, where I dedicated the W. C. T. U. Mission Chapel.—George A. E. Troutman.

Farmington, Sept. 28.—Four additions during the month—three by letter and one by restoration. The Bible school is in a contest with the Christian Bible school at Fredericktown, with much interest aroused.—Edward Owers.

Smithton, Sept. 28.—Two additions at our regular appointment at Tipton yesterday, by confession and baptism.—A. Sterling.

Fairfax, Sept. 27.—Just closed a meeting with 12 additions—10 by confession and two by letter. The attendance at Sunday-school was greatly increased. Prof. F. F. Dawdy, of Topeka, Kan., led the chorus and conducted children's service each Saturday night. We go to Belle, Mo., next.—E. M. Romine.

Shelbyville, Sept. 26.—Just closed an 18-days' meeting at Warren, Mo., with home forces, resulting in 13 additions—10 by baptism, one from the Baptists and two by letter. The membership is nearly double what it was one year ago when I held my first meeting. I will continue with them for 1909. I will hold my own meeting at Pleona as soon as we get the house repaired. About $1,500 will be expended, and then we will have one of the best houses in that section.—R. B. Havener.

Jerico Springs, Sept. 25.—One more confession last Sunday night. I will close my work here the last of December, and then will be ready for other work, either evangelistic or pastoral. During my stay here more than 130 have been added to the church, besides the 15 in Brother Worder's meeting. The church here will need a good minister the first of January, 1909.

Swinton, Sept. 26.—Closed a two-weeks' meeting Wednesday night at Taskee, Mo., a litttle town, with 26 additions—23 baptisms and three from another body. J. H. Tiller, of Bloomfield, Mo., was our faithful evangelist. He preached the gospel. Such an interest was manifested that the house became inadequate. The Christian Church has the lead there. If they will only add to their faith the Christian graces that the world may see their good works they will one bright day reap a bountiful harvest.—I. M. Frye, pastor, Swinton, Mo.

Carterville, Sept. 20.—Just closed a series of meetings at Prosperity, a little mining camp. In four weeks there were 47 additions—all adults, and nearly all heads of families. They aim to perfect an organization there in the near future. A Bible school is to be organized next Lord's day. Prospects are bright for a good work in the future.—H. Thomas King.

Windsor, Oct. 1.—Report of Windsor Church for September is as follows: Seven additions—five confessions and two baptisms; and a public mortgage burning, which was indeed a day of joy. The mortgage, of about four years' standing, amounted to more than $500, principal and interest.

Bethany, Sept. 14.—Our work is moving forward all the time. Three additions last Sunday and two the Sunday before.—Andrew P. Johnson, minister.

Mississippi.

Utica, Sept. 28.—We are back in dear old Mississippi where I served so long as corresponding secretary. Wife and I are in a meeting here, this being the fourth I have held at this place. In one week 22 additions—16 men. J. M. Talley is the beloved pastor.—John A. Stevens.

Nebraska.

Hebron, Sept. 28.—Just closed a meeting at Liberty Ridge. This was an effort to evangelize among the Germans, resulting in five confessions. Some were denied by their parents the privilege of coming with us at this time. We hold our next meeting at Gross, Neb. Our permanent address will be Wakefield, Neb.—John L. Stine and Albert Miller.

Ohio.

Wadsworth, Sept. 27.—Two more young people from our Sunday-school made the good confession recently.—Charles E. Taylor.

Columbus, Sept. 27.—There have been 11 additions to the Fourth Avenue Church in the last three weeks—five by baptism, three by letter and three by statement. All but one of these were grown men and women.—G. H. Crawford.

Oklahoma.

Enid, Sept. 26.—Two baptisms at Hunter Sunday.—C. C. Taylor.

Oney, Sept. 26.—The meeting held in the Cash Grove here, by Beach and Beach, was a great success. There were 27 baptisms, 27 from other sources and two yet to be baptized. Brother Thomas had closed a ten-days' meeting two weeks before with 22 additions, making a total of 76. Brother Thomas is our district evangelist.—J. M. Chism.

Errick, Sept. 27.—Since coming to this field the work looks very encouraging. One addition by letter and one by confession, coming from another body. Will take up our fall work in teacher training this week.—Bishop M. Hopkins, minister.

Texas.

San Marcos, Sept. 30.—Six additions by letter during the month.—A. M. Harrol.

Lufkin, Sept. 26.—Closed the greatest meeting ever held in the small town of Alto, Texas, not so much from standpoint of numbers, but in hearing and in permanency of work. We organized a church and there were 46 accessions from all sources, as follows: By statement, 25; reclaimed, 12; from other bodies, 2; primary obedience, 7. We need preachers in East Texas that will go out and preach the old story in love, for the field is white unto harvest.—F. Douglas Wharton and wife.

Weimar, Sept. 29.—Our meeting closed here with 17 additions. Spicer and Douthit assisted us and left here beloved by exery one.—J. W. Gates.

Nocona, Sept. 30.—Since last report I have held very successful meetings at Paradise, Bowie, Montague and Chicago, Texas. I am now in a meeting here with fair prospects.—James Sharratt.

Bryan, Sept. 28.—One addition by statement yesterday. The Endeavor had fine services yesterday. All aboard for New Orleans! We are anticipating the greatest convention in the history of the brotherhod.—James A. Challenner.

Washington.

Seattle, Sept. 22.—The Seattle Christian Ministerial Association heard the following weekly reports at its meeting September 21: First Church (J. L. Garvin), two by letter; University Place (T. J. Shuey), five by letter; Ballard (A. L. Crim), two by letter; Queen Anne (J. L. Greenwell) raised $53 for church extension, and the first quarterly payment, $150, on the salary of its missionary, Mrs. A. F. Hensey, Bolenge, Africa.—F. Walden, president; J. L. Greenwell, secretary.

"KANSAS FOR CHRIST."

versity, taught school three or four years in Kansas, and has been in the ministry about 18 years with four pastorates—Elk City, McPherson, Ft. Scott and Lawrence. At the last two places he was fifteen years, during which time there were 1,200 additions.

(11) Christian Church, Utica.

(12) A. W. Henry spent his early days in Illinois in farming. After marriage he graduated in the Bible College of Eureka College, preaching while a student for Roanoke, and afterwards taking the pastorate at Clinton. For twenty years he preached for different churches in Nebraska, and evangelized, also, with good success, having from 250 to 275 additions in some of his meetings. While at Geneva there were 118. For two years he was corresponding secretary of Nebraska. Since 1905 he has been pastor at Oberlin, Kan. Beginning with this month he expects to evangelize in that state, Nebraska and Oklahoma.

(13) M. Lee Sorey, one of the go-ahead preachers of the West, recently at Kansas City, Kan., is now doing good work at Dodge City.

(14) Central Church, Kansas City.

(15) John Bezoni is a New Yorker by birth, but grew up amid the hardships and privations of frontier life in Missouri. Uniting with the Christian Church in 1869 he began preaching when a little less than seventeen years of age. Later he took some more school work, and for a time taught. His work in the ministry has been largely that of a nurse to weak and struggling churches, while he has held some fruitful meetings. His ability is that of teaching rather than an evangelist. For one year he was at Eagle Lake, Minn. He removed from Chamois, Mo., to his present field of work in April, and only two weeks after his location there experienced the greatest sorrow of his life in the loss of his wife.

(16) James R. Middleton is located at Lewis, Kan. He is a Missourian by birth and early education. Studying law he served one term as probate judge of Wright county, Mo., representing the same county in the state Legislature in 1895. He united with the Church of Christ at a serviee held by D. B. Warren and was ordained a minister at Hartville by M. F. Hooten, in 1902. Thence he removed to Kansas, and after a year's work with the church at Westmoreland, was called to the pastorate of the Lewis Christian Church at its dedication in 1904, and is now serving his fourth year. The church has grown in that time from thirty-five members to almost 200.

(17) The Christian Church at Paola is ministered to by W. S. Lowe. He went to Kansas in 1896, becoming minister of the important church at Manhattan. Subsequently called to the position as superintendent of Kansas missions, the work prospered under his term of office, the annual receipts being increased from a little over two thousand dollars to eight thousand dollars. Resigning this position he at once became minister at Paola, where he enjoys great popularity. The church there was organized in the courthouse in 1885. A modest frame house was dedicated two years later. Some good preachers labored here—among them J. C. McQuerry and B. T. Wharton. Brother Lowe is closing his second year. The church is united and prosperous, and fully organized. The present membership is 263. A men's Bible class on new movement lines has recently been organized.
